DIVISION THREE

CANDACE CONTI, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. WATCHTOWER BIBLE & TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC. et al., Defendants and Appellants.	A136641 (Alameda County Super. Ct. No. HG11558324)

In this case we consider the duty owed by a religious organization to one of its members who has been harmed by another member. Candace Conti, formerly a member of the North Fremont Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses (Fremont Congregation or Congregation) sued the Congregation and Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. (Watchtower), the Jehovah's Witnesses's headquarters at the time, for damages for her sexual abuse as a child by Jonathan Kendrick (Kendrick), another member of the Congregation. Before Conti was molested, the Congregation and Watchtower (hereafter collectively defendants) elders and officials learned that Kendrick had molested another child. Conti sought to hold defendants liable for failing to warn the Congregation or her parents that Kendrick was a child molester, and for failing to limit and supervise his participation in church activities. A jury found defendants liable for compensatory damages to Conti, and held Watchtower liable for punitive damages.

We hold that defendants had no duty to warn the Congregation or Conti's parents that Kendrick had molested a child, but that defendants can be held liable for failing to limit and supervise Kendrick's "field service," a church-sponsored activity where members go door-to-door preaching in the community. Kendrick had unsupervised access to Conti during field service that he used as opportunities to molest her. Because breach of the alleged duty to warn was the sole basis for imposition of punitive damages on Watchtower, we reverse that portion of the judgment, with directions to enter judgment for Watchtower on the punitive damage claim. The compensatory damage award is affirmed.

I. BACKGROUND

The Jehovah's Witnesses is a religion with about 1.2 million members in 13,400 congregations in the United States. In the 1990's, Watchtower was in charge of the church's policies. Congregations are comprised of elders, ministerial servants, and rank-and-file members called "baptized publishers." All members in good standing are considered "ministers." Elders are the spiritual leaders of their congregations, comparable to clergy in other religions. Ministerial servants do administrative work such as distributing literature to members, and handling microphones at meetings. Watchtower admitted that Fremont Congregation elders Gary Abrahamson and Michael Clarke were Watchtower's agents while acting within the course and scope of their church duties. In addition to Sunday and midweek meetings, Congregation activities include field service, where small groups, usually consisting of two or three people, go door-to-door in neighborhoods to spread the church's spiritual teachings.

Congregations are small and close knit. The average congregation has 75 to 150 members. At different times, the Fremont Congregation had from 100 to 140 members, of whom 6 to 13 were elders. Evelyn Kendrick (Evelyn), who was married to Kendrick during the period when he molested Conti, testified that "we only socialized with people of that congregation. We were kind of—well, not told outright, but that we should only associate with people of that religion and not of any other religion because they could be a bad influence." Congregation members call each other "brother" and "sister."

Conti and Kendrick were Fremont Congregation members in the 1990's, and for a time Kendrick was a ministerial servant. Conti testified that Kendrick began molesting her around the time she turned nine years old in late 1994, and continued until 1996 or 1997, when she was age 10 or 11. Before Kendrick molested Conti, the Congregation elders learned that he had molested his stepdaughter.

In November 1993, elder Clarke received a call from Evelyn or Kendrick asking for a consultation about Kendrick's abuse of Evelyn's daughter. Clarke and Abrahamson went to their home that week and spoke with Kendrick, Evelyn, and her daughter. The elders were told that, four months earlier, Kendrick had touched his stepdaughter's breast around the time of her 14th birthday. The stepdaughter told Evelyn about the molestation minutes after it occurred, but Evelyn testified that she did not immediately report it because she thought it was an isolated incident and she was "trying to deal with it" within the family. The details of what the elders were told about the incident were disputed at trial. Among other things, Evelyn disputed the elders' testimony that she told them to keep the incident private, and that Kendrick said he touched her daughter "inadvertently." Even so, the elders did not believe the touching was accidental.

The elders told Evelyn and her daughter that they were free to report the incident to the police. Abrahamson testified that they neither encouraged nor discouraged Evelyn and her daughter from doing so; "[i]t was up to them." Evelyn reported the incident to the police in February 1994. Kendrick admitted touching his stepdaughter's breast, and was convicted of a misdemeanor. Elders at the Congregation did not learn of Evelyn's report to the police until a couple of years later.

After meeting with the Kendrick family, Clarke wrote a letter to Watchtower to report "a case of child abuse" by Kendrick. Abrahamson testified that the Congregation was required to contact Watchtower for instructions in such a situation.[1] The copy of the letter in evidence is heavily redacted. In the unredacted portion, the letter stated that the Congregation had phoned Watchtower about the Kendrick matter, the "legal department had given us some direction," and Watchtower had asked the Congregation to submit its questions in writing. The letter said the elders planned to tell the Congregation that Kendrick would no longer be acting as a ministerial servant, and asked Watchtower to advise if that was an "incorrect" course of action. Clarke testified that Watchtower responded to his letter, but he did not provide the substance of the response and no written response is in evidence. The testimony was simply: "Q. And Watchtower did respond to the letter and he was removed as a ministerial servant? [¶] A. Correct. And we announced that."

[1] "Q. Why were you reporting this to Watchtower New York? [¶] A. To get direction. [¶] Q. And in all of your work as an elder that involves anything in this type of matter, you would get your direction and instruction from New York. Correct? [¶] A. In a lot of these cases that legal matters are involved, we are always encouraged to call the Legal Department because how could we know all the laws. And the laws change from state to state, but our Legal department could help us through this. [¶] Q. And you used the word 'encouraged' but actually you are required to call New York? [¶] A. You might put it that way. Yes. [¶] Q. I did put it that way. Do you agree? [¶] A. I agree you put it that way. [¶] Q. Do you agree that you were required to call New York? [¶] A. Yes."

Allen Shuster, a Watchtower official in New York, testified that Watchtower policy allowed a known child molester to continue to perform field service, but not alone or with a child. Defense expert Monica Applewhite, whose testimony is discussed further below, said that Watchtower policies were implemented by letters sent "to all bodies of elders in the United States." However, Shuster was unable to identify any church-wide writing that documented the limitations on field service by known child molesters. He said this policy was implemented by letters to elders on a case-by-case basis.[2]

Abrahamson testified that he told the Fremont Congregation elders what he learned at the Kendrick family meeting, and they agreed that Kendrick was no longer fit

[2] When Shuster was asked whether a person known to be a child molester "can be sent out as a baptized publisher into neighborhoods to spread the word of the gospel?" the following testimony ensued: "A. Yes. But not by themselves or with a child. [¶] Q. "Is there in writing anywhere the caveat that you just gave to us? I haven't seen it in any of the exhibits. [¶] A. I believe we have something in writing, yes. I couldn't put my finger on it right now, but yes. [¶] Q. Is it here with us today? [¶] A. I don't know if it is here. I don't recall. [¶] . . . [¶] "Any reason why, if there was a policy that specifically prohibited baptized publishers who were known to have molested children from going into field service with a child, that that written policy wouldn't be right in front of you right now? [¶] A. That policy is specific to each individual situation. In each situation there are instructions given in the letter to a body of elders where that individual is and that instruction is given in that letter."

to serve as a ministerial servant. They removed Kendrick from the position, and announced his removal to the Congregation without disclosing the reason for it.

Clarke testified that the Fremont Congregation elders were following Watchtower policy in keeping information about the molestation confidential. That policy was set forth in a July 1, 1989 letter from Watchtower to all elders in the United States, and it was a centerpiece of Conti's case against Watchtower.

The letter addressed the elders' "duties that may involve legal issues or questions." Watchtower instructed the elders they "must be careful not to divulge information about personal matters to unauthorized persons. . . . Elders must give special heed to the counsel: 'Do not reveal the confidential talk of another.' (Proverbs 25:9) . . . Improper use of the tongue by an elder can result in serious legal problems for the individual, the congregation, and even the Society. [¶] . . . Worldly persons are quick to resort to lawsuits if they feel their 'rights' have been violated. Some who oppose the Kingdom preaching work readily take advantage of any legal provisions to interfere with it or impede its progress. Thus, elders must especially guard the use of the tongue."

The letter continued: "The spirit of the world has sensitized people regarding their legal 'rights' and the legal means by which they can exact punishment if such 'rights' are violated. Hence, a growing number of vindictive or disgruntled ones, as well as opposers, have initiated lawsuits to inflict financial penalties on the individual, the congregation, or the Society. Many of these lawsuits are the result of the misuse of the tongue. . . . [¶] . . . [¶] The legal consequences of a breach of confidentiality by the elders can be substantial. If the elders fail to follow the Society's direction carefully in handling confidential matters, such mistakes could result in successful litigation by those offended. Substantial monetary damages could be assessed against the elders or congregation."

The letter went on to discuss "what to do in specific cases," such as "[s]earch warrants and [s]ubpoenas," "[c]rimes and [c]riminal investigations," "[w]hen [l]awsuits are [t]hreatened," and "[c]hild [c]ustody." On the subject of "[c]hild [a]buse," the letter stated: "Many states have child abuse reporting laws. When elders receive reports of physical or sexual abuse of a child, they should contact the Society's Legal Department immediately. Victims of such abuse need to be protected from further danger." The letter concluded with "points to remember," such as "[b]e extremely careful with written material," and "[a]ppreciate the [i]mportance of [m]aintaining [c]onfidentiality." With respect to confidentiality, the letter stated: "Elders must exercise extraordinary caution when it comes to handling confidential information about the private lives of others. Do not mistakenly minimize the gravity of a breach of confidentiality. Unauthorized disclosure of confidential information can result in costly lawsuits. Even if a lawsuit turns out favorably, valuable time and energy that could have been devoted to Kingdom interests will be lost."

Clarke testified that the policy stated in the letter was intended to protect confidential ministerial communications as well as to avoid legal liability. He thought that "confidentiality is important for a minister." He asked, "Why would anybody come to us with their problems if they knew that as soon as they come to us we were going to announce it? Why would anybody confess to a Catholic priest if they knew that after they confessed it was going to be announced at mass next week. It is ludicrous. [¶] So [the policy was] put in place so that the friends would feel comfortable coming to us and we could keep confidence."

Clarke testified that the elders told Kendrick he could not "show affection to children, put children on his lap, work with them out in the door-to-door ministry, work with children in the Kingdom Hall. [¶] And we made it clear to him that we were going to be watching him. And we did, all, the whole body of elders." Elder Lawrence Lamerdin said the Congregation had 10 to 13 elders at the time and they "made sure that [Kendrick] was watched." Abrahamson saw "no need" to inform the Congregation that Kendrick had molested a child because the elders would have warned the parents of any child they saw Kendrick getting close to or isolating.

In an August 1, 1995 policy letter to United States elders on the subject of child abuse, Watchtower stated: "[S]teps should be taken to protect the child, or other children, from further sexual abuse. Obviously, parents would be keenly interested in taking adequate precautions in this regard. . . . Loving elders, too, will want to act in a way that demonstrates their protective care, since the word 'overseer' carries the thought of one who watches over, a guardian, a shepherd of the flock. . . . [¶] It would be appropriate to talk very frankly to a former child abuser, strongly cautioning him as to the dangers of hugging or holding children on his lap and that he should never be in the presence of a child without another adult being present."

There was testimony that Jehovah's Witnesses conduct no activities such as classes or trips that by their nature separate children from their parents, and Clarke testified that parents in the congregations are regarded as "the first line of defense" in preventing child sexual abuse. Parents were educated about child sexual abuse in Awake!, a publication distributed to all congregation members. Child abuse was discussed at length in the January 22, 1985 issue, which covered topics such as "Who Would Do a Thing Like That?" and "You Can Protect Your Child." The subject was also the focus of the October 8, 1993 issue, which addressed the question "How Can We Protect [Our Children]?" The discussion under that heading stated: "Tragically, adult society often unwittingly collaborates with child abusers. How so? By refusing to be aware of this danger, by fostering a hush-hush attitude about it, by believing oft-repeated myths. Ignorance, misinformation, and silence give safe haven to abusers, not their victims." Both issues addressed misconceptions about child sexual abuse, including the belief that such abuse is most commonly perpetrated by strangers to the victims, and the 1985 issue gave as an example a girl who was molested by "a man who was running a church group."

Conti testified that she met Kendrick at the Fremont Congregation's Kingdom Hall, a building for Congregation meetings that seats 220 people. She said that Kendrick insinuated himself into her family, befriended her father Neal at meetings, and then began coming to their house. He molested her several times a month for a couple of years. With one exception, the incidents occurred at Kendrick's home, where he drove Conti after meetings and during field service. On one occasion, Kendrick put his hand up her shirt while they were riding on a train with her father.

Kendrick began getting physical with her by repeatedly hugging her at Kingdom Hall. She always went to Kingdom Hall with at least one parent, but Kendrick made her sit on his lap during meetings. She sometimes went to field service without her parents, and Kendrick sometimes drove her to the group meetings that preceded the door-to door field service, where partners for the activity were assigned. They did field service together many times without either of Conti's parents present. Conti said that the molestations occurred while they were supposed to be performing field service: "Our groups would go out, we would get our territories, and we would go out and service. And we would do door to door. [¶] And then there were times when our groups would separate even further. And we would go to . . . laundry mats . . . and things like that. And sometimes he would take me . . . to go do some of these things and then we would end up at his house." Kendrick drove her to his house, and when he finished molesting her, they would go "[m]aybe to the Kingdom Hall. Maybe to lunch with the rest of the service group."

Conti's father Neal testified that he did not see Kendrick engage in any of the inappropriate behavior described by Conti. Neal said he was always with Conti at meetings and during field service, he did not allow Conti to leave meetings with Kendrick, and did not see Kendrick hug Conti or Conti sit on Kendrick's lap. Conti's mother Kathleen testified that she had mental health problems during the two years before she and Neal separated in July 1996, which prevented her from caring for Conti. As a result, Conti was often on her own during that time. Kendrick was always offering to help Conti and take her places, and Kathleen thought he was just being nice.

Clinical social worker Laura Fraser counseled Conti and her parents from August 1996 to April 1998. Fraser testified that Neal and Kathleen were going through a tumultuous divorce, and Conti had assumed a caretaker role in the family. Neal and Kathleen were not "psychologically well-developed," and it was "like three children, in some respects, living together." Conti's home life was chaotic and unpredictable. There were a "multitude of emotional crises . . . particularly related to her mother," and Neal's work and Congregation activities left him little time for Conti. She was craving for adult care at the time, and extremely vulnerable to manipulation. Fraser was not surprised that Conti did not disclose her sexual abuse during the counseling. Fraser had told Conti that she would be required to report such abuse, and Conti had "no safety" because she "was still rescuing both parents."

Congregation member Carolyn Martinez testified that she saw Kendrick and Conti together at Kingdom Hall, and that he "was very enamored with her. He just looked at her inappropriately. . . . I remember them holding hands. I remember his arm around her." Martinez said that she never saw Conti come to Kingdom Hall or field service without a parent, but more than once she saw Kendrick and Conti together in field service. Martinez recalled Conti sitting on Kendrick's lap in meetings at her home.

Elders Clarke, Abrahamson, Lamerdin, and three Congregation members testified that at Kingdom Hall they did not see Conti get hugs from Kendrick, sit on his lap, or leave with him as Conti testified. The Congregation members said they never saw Conti do field service with Kendrick.

An expert testified for Conti about Child Sex Abuse Accommodation Syndrome, which describes behaviors often exhibited by victims, including delayed reporting of their abuse. Physician notes in evidence state that Conti reported in August 2002 that she was sexually abused from around age nine to 13. Conti did not recall that doctor visit, but remembered disclosing the molestations to her parents in 2003. She disclosed the molestations to elders, including Clarke and Lamerdin, in 2009.

A psychologist who was counseling Conti at the time of trial testified that she suffered from depression, anxiety, and most severely from post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD). A psychiatrist treating Conti testified that she was afflicted by PTSD due to the sexual abuse and she would require a lifetime of therapy. A psychiatrist qualified as an expert in child and adolescent psychology testified that Conti reported having been molested hundreds of times, that she had severe, chronic PTSD, and she would require therapy costing $160,000.

Anna Salter, a clinical psychologist and an expert on child sexual abuse testified for Conti that defendants, after learning that Kendrick had molested a child, did not meet the standard of care for organizations that sponsor or promote activities that bring adults and children together. Salter said that, by 1993, the major religions and secular organizations conducting such activities had "adopted policies of transparency regarding known sex abusers." United Methodist Church policies, for example, were to "[u]phold the rights of children, speak out when abuses occur, and advocate for the strengthening and strict enforcement of these rights." Salter said that "people knew what the risk was when you had a child molester," and that the standard of care "was not to keep it secret and let the person continue in the same activities with the same access to children." The standard of care required "reporting these cases . . . and making people aware . . . if they had a sex offender in their midst."

Monica Applewhite, a clinical social worker and an expert on child sexual abuse, testified for defendants that Watchtower's policy against "disclosing private information . . . very closely mirror[ed]" the codes of ethics of the National Association of Social Workers and the American Counseling Association. Based on her review of the evidence, Applewhite opined that the Congregation never put Kendrick "into a position that required or allowed him to be alone with children, to be in supervision of children, [or] to spend time with children away from their families." Because the church's activities did not separate children from their parents, Appelwhite opined that its best means of protecting children was to educate parents about child sexual abuse, and it exceeded the standard of care for such education in the 1990's. According to Applewhite, the elders met the standard of care in Kendrick's case when they left it up to Evelyn and her daughter whether to tell the police about the abuse he admitted, and "they kept a special watch on him and paid attention to whether or not he had any inappropriate contact with children within the meetings at Kingdom Hall."

Conti sued Watchtower, the Fremont Congregation, and Kendrick for damages for sexual abuse, alleging willful acts by Kendrick and negligence on the part of defendants. The negligence consisted of failing to warn members of the Congregation that Kendrick was a child molester, and failing to restrict and supervise his participation in church activities. Conti executed a covenant not to execute on any judgment against Kendrick, in exchange for his agreement not to participate in the case, or harass Conti or her witnesses. Conti obtained leave to add a cause of action for "acts of malice" supporting punitive damages against Watchtower, arguing that Watchtower acted despicably and with conscious disregard for the safety of others by maintaining a "secrecy policy" with respect to child sexual abusers despite knowing of their "high recidivism." The "secrecy policy" was set forth in the July 1989 letter we have quoted at length. Awareness of child abuse recidivism was exhibited in church publications such as the January 1, 1997 issue of The Watchtower, which stated that child sex abusers "may well molest other children. True, not every child molester repeats the sin, but many do."

The jury found Kendrick, Watchtower, and the Congregation liable, and apportioned fault 60 percent to Kendrick, 27 percent to Watchtower, and 13 percent to the Congregation. The jury awarded Conti $7,000,000 in compensatory damages, including $130,000 for future counseling and therapy, and $6,870,000 in non-economic damages. The jury awarded $21,000,001 in punitive damages against Watchtower. The court conditionally granted Watchtower's motion for a new trial on punitive damages, subject to Conti's acceptance of an $8,610,000 punitive damage award. Conti accepted the reduced punitive damages, and judgment was entered against Watchtower for $10,464,900, against the Congregation for $893,100, and against Watchtower and the Congregation jointly and severally for $130,000. Watchtower and the Congregation timely appeal.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Introduction

Defendants initially demurred, and have consistently argued throughout the case that they had no duty to prevent Conti from being molested by Kendrick. The trial court overruled their demurrer, and rejected their subsequent arguments that no duty was owed on the facts of this case. The court declined to give defendants' proposed jury instructions that the Congregation had no duty to warn its members that Kendrick had committed an act of child sexual abuse, and that defendants were not liable unless Conti's abuse occurred on church property or during a church-sponsored activity.

Over defendants' objection, the court gave the following "duty" instruction to the jury: "The defendants . . . had a duty to take reasonable protective measures to protect [Conti] from the risk of sexual abuse by . . . Kendrick. In determining whether or not [defendants] took reasonable protective measures, you may consider the following: [¶] 1. The presence or absence of any warning; [¶] 2. Whether or not any educational programs were made available to plaintiff, her parents, or to other Jehovah's Witnesses from the [Congregation] members for the purposes of sexual abuse education and prevention; [¶] 3. Such other facts and circumstances contained in the evidentiary record here as to the presence or absence of protective measures."

"Duty is a question of law for the court, to be reviewed de novo on appeal." (Cabral v. Ralphs Grocery Co. (2011) 51 Cal.4th 764, 770.)

B. Failures to Warn

(1) Warning the Congregation

Conti argued that the Fremont Congregation elders had a duty to warn members of the Congregation that Kendrick had molested a child and, as we have said, failure to fulfill that alleged duty was the sole basis for the punitive damage award against Watchtower. Congregation elders were following Watchtower's policy when they kept the molestation Kendrick reported confidential. We disagree with Conti that they had a legal duty to warn the Congregation about Kendrick.

" '[A]s a general rule, one owes no duty to control the conduct of another, nor to warn those endangered by such conduct.' " (Zelig v. County of Los Angeles (2002) 27 Cal.4th 1112, 1129.) "This rule derives from the common law's distinction between misfeasance and nonfeasance, and its reluctance to impose liability for the latter." (Tarasoff v. Regents of University of California (1976) 17 Cal.3d 425, 435, fn. 5.) "The basic idea is often referred to as the 'no duty to aid' rule, which remains a fundamental and long-standing rule of tort law. . . . 'As a rule, one has no duty to come to the aid of another.' " (Eric J. v. Betty M. (1999) 76 Cal.App.4th 715, 727.) For instance, in Eric J. v. Betty M., a convicted child molester sexually abused his girlfriend's minor child, and the molester's family members who did nothing "to facilitate any molestation" were not liable for failing to warn the girlfriend about the molester's past. (Id. at pp.717, 727.) In Eric J. v. Betty M., the court distinguished Pamela L. v. Farmer (1980) 112 Cal.App.3d 206, where the wife of a child molester who knew of her husband's past was subject to misfeasance liability for telling the parents of girls he sexually abused that the girls could safely swim at her house when she was away because her husband would be there to take care of them. (Id. at pp. 209-210; Eric J. v. Betty M., supra, 76 Cal.App.4th at p. 729.)

"Where, as here, a 'complaint alleges injuries resulting from the criminal acts of third persons . . .'the common law, reluctant to impose liability for nonfeasance, generally does not impose a duty upon a defendant to control the conduct of another [citations], or to warn of such conduct [citations], unless the defendant stands in some special relationship either to the person whose conduct needs to be controlled, or to the foreseeable victim of such conduct." ' " (Roman Catholic Bishop of San Diego v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal.App.4th 1556, 1564 (Roman Catholic Bishop), italics in original); see also Rest.2d Torts § 315; Nally v. Grace Community Church (1988) 47 Cal.3d 278, 293 ["one is ordinarily not liable for the actions of another and is under no duty to protect another from harm, in the absence of a special relationship of custody or control"].) In Pamela L. v. Farmer, the wife of the child molester "assumed that special relationship" with his new victims when she invited them to her home and assured them they could safely play there. (Pamela L. v. Farmer, supra, 112 Cal.App.3d at pp. 211–212.)

The alleged duty to warn cannot be justified in this case on the basis of a special relationship. Fremont Congregation elders were required, as Conti's expert put it, to make Congregation members aware that "they had a sex offender in their midst" only if: (1) members of a church have a special relationship with the church solely by virtue of that membership that requires the church to take affirmative steps to safeguard them against harm from other congregation members; or (2) a church has a special relationship with any member it has reason to believe may perpetrate such harm. (See generally, Roman Catholic Bishop, supra, 42 Cal.App.4th at p. 1564 [defendant must have a special relationship with the person whose conduct needs to be controlled, or the foreseeable victims of such conduct].) Conti makes neither assertion, and identifies no authority for any such broad duty on the part of a church to prevent its members from harming each other.

Rather, her arguments for a special relationship focus on the Congregation's custody or control of her and Kendrick. She maintains that the Congregation "exerted custody and control over [her] by assigning her to perform field service with Kendrick," and "took charge of Kendrick when they determined where and with whom he was to perform field service." But these arguments are material to the duty of care in connection with Kendrick's field service—a matter we discuss below—not to a duty to warn the Congregation that he had molested a child.

A number of cases have held that, where the issue is whether the defendant had a duty to protect the plaintiff from harm caused by a third party, the absence of a special relationship is dispositive and there is no reason to conduct the analysis prescribed in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal.2d 108 (Rowland), to determine whether a duty nevertheless existed. "Because the traditional weighing process using [the Rowland factors] 'has already been done by courts over the centuries in formulating the "no duty to aid" rule,' in the context of liability for nonfeasance, it is not necessary to engage in [that] weighing process" where no special relationship exists. (Seo v. All-Makes Overhead Doors (2002) 97 Cal.App.4th 1193, 1203, quoting Eric J. v. Betty M., supra, 76 Cal.App.4th 715, 729-730; see also Suarez v. Pacific Northstar Mechanical, Inc. (2009) 180 Cal.App.4th 430, 438; but see Nally v. Grace Community Church, supra, 47 Cal.3d at p. 293 [applying both the special relationship doctrine and the Rowland factors in analyzing whether church pastors had a duty to prevent a foreseeable suicide].) However, even if we were required to consider the Rowland factors, we would not conclude that the elders had a duty to warn the Congregation about Kendrick's past child sexual abuse.

The Rowland factors are: "[T]he foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff; the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct, the policy of preventing future harm, the extent of the burden to the defendant and consequences to the community of imposing a duty to exercise care with resulting liability for breach, and the availability, cost, and prevalence of insurance for the risk involved." (Rowland, supra, 69 Cal.2d at p. 113.) "Forseeability and the extent of the burden to the defendant are ordinarily the crucial considerations, but in a given case one or more of the other Rowland factors may be determinative of the duty analysis." (Castaneda v. Osher (2007) 41 Cal.4th 1205, 1213.)

While it is readily foreseeable that someone who has molested a child may do so again, the burden the duty to warn would create and the adverse social consequences the duty would produce outweigh its imposition. The burden would be considerable because the precedent could require a church to intervene whenever it has reason to believe that a congregation member is capable of doing harm, and the scope of that duty could not be limited with any precision. For example, would the duty to warn be triggered by an accusation, or only an admission, of misconduct? Would one warning be sufficient, or would continuous warnings be required to ensure that new congregation members are alerted to the danger? Child molestation is a particularly heinous evil, but which other potential harms would the church have a duty to avert? Would the duty be limited to crimes and, if so, which ones? Imposition of a duty to warn would also have detrimental social consequences. It would discourage wrongdoers from seeking potentially beneficial intervention, and contravene the public policy against disclosure of penitential communications. No moral blame can be cast on defendants for adhering to that public policy.

The law generally protects the confidentiality of communications with clergy like those of Kendrick to the elders here. Under the Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act (Pen. Code, § 11164, et seq.) clergy members such as a minister or similar functionary of a church or recognized denomination must report suspected child sexual abuse to law enforcement or a specified county agency. (Pen. Code, §§ 11165, 11165.6, 11165.7, subd. (a)(32), 11165.9, 11166, subd. (a).) However, this obligation does not arise when the clergy member is informed of the abuse during a "penitential communication," which is defined to mean "a communication, intended to be in confidence, including, but not limited to, a sacramental confession, made to a clergy member who, in the course of the discipline or practice of his or her church, denomination, or organization, is authorized or accustomed to hear those communications, and under the discipline, tenets, customs, or practices of his or her church, denomination or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret." (Pen. Code, § 11166, subds. (a), (d)(1).)

Similarly, clergy and penitents each have a privilege not to testify about penitential communications. (Evid. Code, §§ 1032, 1033, 1034.) " 'The priest-penitent privilege recognizes the human need to disclose to a spiritual counselor, in total and absolute confidence, what are believed to be flawed acts or thoughts and to receive priestly consolation and guidance in return.' " (Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 417, 443.) It has been argued that "the humanistic case for this privilege is stronger than the corresponding case for any other privilege. A person's religious beliefs lie at the core of the decisional autonomy needed to develop his or her life plan. In a philosophic sense, the person's chosen religious beliefs are arguably his or her most important life preferences." (Imwinkelried, The New Wigmore, Evidentiary Privileges (2nd.ed. 2010) § 6.2.3.b, p. 529.) The treatise observes that the United States Supreme Court has recognized "a constitutional 'right to believe . . . whatever religious doctrine one desires,' 'according to the dictates of his own conscience,' " and continues: "If the person has a constitutional right to independence in making religious choices, the recognition of an evidentiary privilege is an apt means of protecting that autonomy. If any type of relationship deserves the protection of an enclave shored up with an evidentiary privilege, it is a consultative relationship dealing with this kind of choice." (Id. at p. 531.)

Admittedly, neither mandatory reporting to the government nor evidentiary privilege control in this case. The privilege for penitential communications does not apply unless the communication is made "in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware," a condition not satisfied at the Kendrick family meeting with the Congregation elders. (See Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles Superior Court, supra, 131 Cal.App.4th at pp. 444–445 [no privilege for communications in church interventions with troubled priests because participants knew communications would likely be shared with more than one person].) Nor is it clear that Kendrick's communication was "penitential" as it is commonly understood given the elders' testimony that he said he touched his stepdaughter inadvertently. (Webster's Collegiate Dict. (10th Ed. 2001) p. 856 ["penitence" means "sorrow for sins or faults"].)

However, the public policy to protect the confidentiality of penitential communications that underlies the privilege and reporting statutes militates strongly against imposition of the duty claimed here to inform congregations of such communications. When the clergy member privilege was codified in Evidence Code section 1034, the California Law Revision Commission commented: "The extent to which a clergyman should keep secret or reveal penitential communications is not an appropriate subject for legislation; the matter is better left to the discretion of the individual clergyman involved and the discipline of the religious body of which he is a member." (7 Cal. Law Revision Com. (1965) p. 202.) Courts should likewise be wary to intrude in this realm.

Accordingly, we conclude that the elders of the Fremont Congregation had no duty to depart from Watchtower's policy of confidentiality and warn the members of the Congregation that Kendrick had molested a child. Since that "secrecy policy" was the only basis for the punitive damages assessed against Watchtower, the punitive damage award must be reversed.[3]

(2) Failure to Warn Conti's Parents

Congregation elders testified that they monitored Kendrick after learning that he had sexually abused a child, and would have disclosed his prior molestation to the parents of any child toward whom his behavior was inappropriate. In jury argument, Conti's

[3] In view of this conclusion, we need not reach Watchtower's arguments that the punitive damage award was not supported by substantial evidence, and was excessive as a matter of law. We also need not reach Watchtower's contention that imposition of a duty to warn the Congregation would unconstitutionally require the jury to assess the propriety of the church's religious beliefs.

counsel asked, "Did they really watch this guy like a hawk?" Conti and Congregation member Martinez testified that, at Kingdom Hall, Kendrick hugged Conti repeatedly, put his arm around her, held hands with her, had her sit on his lap, and "looked at her inappropriately"—the sort of behavior the elders said they were watching for, and if they had seen would have caused them to warn Conti's parents about Kendrick. Thus, if the elders had a duty to watch over Kendrick that included warning the parents of any child his actions might appear to threaten, there was substantial evidence from which to find that they breached the duty in Conti's case. However, we conclude that the elders had no such legal duty.

The reasons for our conclusion are largely the same as those that led us to reject the alleged duty to warn the Congregation about Kendrick. There was no special relationship between the church and all of the children in the Congregation simply because they were members of the church. Nor did the church have a special relationship with Kendrick, for purposes of a duty to monitor his behavior toward children, by virtue of control over his conduct with them. As for the Rowland factors, it would place an intolerably great and uncertain burden on a church to require that it continuously monitor a member for inappropriate behavior, and attempt to gauge when that behavior justified a warning about possible harm to another member. Telling individual parents that a member had molested a child would also conflict with the public policy of confidentiality for penitential communications. While such a disclosure would do less immediate damage to that policy than an announcement to the entire congregation, it would be naïve to think that word of the molester's behavior would not spread within the group.[4]

Nonetheless, the Congregation elders voluntarily undertook to watch Kendrick and, if necessary, warn individual parents about him, and the "negligent undertaking" doctrine, like the special relationship doctrine, is an exception to the "no duty to aid" rule. (Delgado v. Trax Bar & Grill (2005) 36 Cal.4th 224, 248-249.) Under the negligent undertaking doctrine, "a volunteer who, having no initial duty to do so, undertakes to provide protective services to another, will be found to have a duty to exercise due care in the performance of that undertaking if one of two conditions is met: either (a) the volunteer's failure to exercise such care increases the risk of harm to the other person, or (b) the other person reasonably relies upon the volunteer's undertaking and suffers injury as a result." (Id. at p. 249.) Neither of those conditions for liability is met here. Nine-year-old Conti was not relying on a church undertaking, and any lack of due care by the elders in monitoring Kendrick's interactions with children did not increase the risk of harm to her, it only failed to reduce that risk.

Therefore, defendants cannot be held liable for negligent failure by the elders to notice Kendrick's behavior with Conti and warn her parents that he posed a danger.

C. Failure to Limit and Supervise Kendrick's Field Service

Conti's case demonstrates the obvious threat that child molesters pose to children in a congregation when they perform field service. They are also a threat to children in the community when they engage in that activity. The prospect of children opening their doors to proselytizing child molesters is frightening. To avoid the risks posed by having child molesters in field service, Watchtower's asserted policy was to prohibit them from doing the service alone or with children. Watchtower has not disclaimed a duty to impose those restrictions, and could not plausibly do so since the restrictions were a professed policy it had adopted for very good reasons.[5]

However, the jury could conclude from the testimony of Watchtower official Shuster, quoted above in footnote 2, that Watchtower in fact had no such policy. When Shuster could not identify any documentation of that alleged policy, he abandoned any suggestion that Watchtower had uniform, church-wide rules on field service by child molesters, and said that the policy was "specific to each individual situation." He said that Watchtower dealt with child molesters on a case-by-case basis, with letters of instruction to the elders of the molester's congregation.

[5] Watchtower arguably had a duty to altogether preclude field service by known child molesters. Evidence in Conti's case suggested that a determined molester could easily circumvent Watchtower's professed rules. According to her testimony, Kendrick was repeatedly able to isolate her from other congregants in the field. However, Conti has not argued that Watchtower's asserted policy was negligent, and we need not reach that issue.

Even if Watchtower had a policy of preventing known child molesters from performing field service alone or with children, there is no evidence that Watchtower did anything to implement that policy in Kendrick's case. Elder Abrahamson testified that Watchtower, not the Congregation, determined how matters such as the one involving Kendrick were handled. (Fn. 1, supra.) Shuster said that such matters were addressed by Watchtower through letters of instruction to the elders of individual congregations, but no such letter was produced in this case. Insofar as it appears from the evidence, Watchtower placed no limits whatsoever on Kendrick's field service.

Moreover, if Watchtower policy was to prevent a child molester from performing field service alone or with children, and even if that policy was communicated to the Fremont Congregation elders, substantial evidence was presented that the elders failed to see that the policy was carried out in Kendrick's case. Conti and Congregant Martinez testified that Kendrick and Conti performed field service together on multiple occasions. Conti described how Kendrick would separate her from field service groups, take her to his home, molest her, and then take her back to Kingdom Hall or the service group. The jury could find from this evidence that the elders were negligent in failing to supervise Kendrick's field service.

In this respect, Conti's case is similar to Juarez v. Boy Scouts of America, Inc. (2000) 81 Cal.App.4th 377 (Juarez). In Juarez, the plaintiff was repeatedly molested by a scoutmaster "during officially sanctioned scouting events, such as overnight camping trips. . . ." (Id. at p. 385.) Before the molestations occurred, the Boy Scouts had identified child sexual abuse as a serious problem, and had developed "a comprehensive 'Youth Protection Program' " designed to prevent it. (Id. at p. 398.) The program included guidelines prohibiting an adult from sleeping in a tent with an unrelated scout, and requiring that two adults be present at any scouting activity. (Id. at p. 400.) The offending scoutmaster broke these rules, and the other scoutmaster of the troop said that he was never informed of them. (Ibid.) The plaintiff argued that the Boy Scouts had a duty to take reasonable measures to protect him from the molestations, and that they breached this duty because, among other things, they failed to implement their child protection policies in his case. (Id. at pp. 385, 400.) The court reversed a summary judgment for the Boy Scouts, finding that a duty was owed under the special relationship doctrine and the Rowland factors, and that there were triable issues of fact as to whether the duty was breached. (Id. at pp. 400–413.)

We likewise conclude under the special relationship doctrine and the Rowland factors that defendants had a legal duty to exercise due care to prevent Conti from being molested during her church-sponsored field service. They could be found to have breached that duty by failing to implement Watchtower's proclaimed limitations on field service by child molesters like Kendrick.

For purposes of the special relationship doctrine, defendants exerted control over Conti and Kendrick's field service in several ways. Watchtower determined that child molesters like Kendrick remained eligible to perform field service, and thus presumably could have banned him from that activity had it chosen to do so. The testimony showed that the Congregation determined when, where, and with whom field service was to be conducted. The members went to group meetings scheduled by the elders where partners and the areas of service were assigned. Elder Abrahamson testified that he controlled where the members went so that neighborhoods would not be inundated with proselytizing. Abrahamson said that a single male was never assigned to do field service with a single female, and that children were never partnered with adults other than their parents. Elder Clark said that Kendrick was not assigned to do field service with a child, and characterized any such assignment as "suicidal" for the elders. But Conti and Martinez testified that Conti and Kendrick often ended up in field service together. It could be reasonably inferred from this testimony that, even if Conti and Kendrick were never partnered together by the elders, the elders facilitated his access to her by putting them in the same group from which partners were assigned, and sending them out with the group to the same neighborhood. Most importantly, the Congregation had the ability to control Kendrick's access to children in the field by keeping an adult with him at all times as required by Watchtower's professed policy.

The Fremont Congregation states in its briefs that field service is "a personal ministry, not a required congregation function or activity," and that Conti "presented no evidence that [defendants] had the ability to control when, or even if, a congregation member will decide to engage in their door-to-door ministry. Preaching from door-to-door is an activity that individual Jehovah's Witnesses only engage in when they feel motivated to speak about God." Even if the Congregation could not require field service, the evidence established that, when members wanted to do field service, Watchtower determined whether they were eligible and the Congregation controlled the manner in which the service was performed.

Watchtower writes in its briefing: "[Conti] . . . testified that Kendrick sexually abused her at his home after field service activity . . . . During closing argument, [Conti's] counsel incorrectly suggested to the jury that plaintiff was abused by Kendrick during field service. . . . The record demonstrates, however, that [Conti] never testified to being molested by Kendrick during field service." (Italics in original.) But, as we have said, Conti testified that Kendrick molested her while they were supposed to be performing field service, which to us means "during" field service. If Watchtower's point is that the molestations occurred at his home, rather than in "the field," the distinction is immaterial. While the Congregation may not have been able to police Kendrick's behavior after scheduled field service was over, it could have controlled his access to Conti during the field service.

For these reasons, the facts here are distinguishable from those in Roman Catholic Bishop, supra, 42 Cal.App.4th 1556, on which defendants rely, where summary judgment was affirmed for the church in a suit based on molestation of a minor by a priest. The court rejected the victim's claim that the church " 'entrusted [her]to [the priest's] care.' " (Id. at p. 1567.) There were "no specific allegations or facts the church somehow placed [the victim] in [the priest's] actual custody or control. Rather, the various police reports . . . indicated nearly all of the contact [the victim] had with [the priest] occurred when [the priest] took [her] from her home to various public places and hotels. [The victim] did not attend a church school, where an affirmative duty to protect students may exist." (Ibid.) Here, Conti was harmed during a church-sponsored activity, and defendants' control over that activity placed them in special relationships with Kendrick and Conti thus requiring them to take reasonable steps to prevent the harm from occurring.

The Rowland factors point to the same conclusion. It is foreseeable that a child molester will reoffend, and the risk is heightened when the molester is put in a position, as Kendrick was here, to be alone with a child. Defendants will not be heavily burdened by a duty to take reasonable care to ensure that molesters are accompanied by another adult, and no children, in the field. Defendants cannot claim that imposition of this duty would be unduly burdensome when it was Watchtower's avowed policy. Moreover, recognition of a duty of reasonable care in the supervision of known child molesters in the field furthers the policy of preventing future harm without affecting the confidentiality of penitential communications.

We therefore conclude that defendants had a duty to use reasonable care to restrict and supervise Kendrick's field service to prevent him from harming children in the community and in the Congregation. Conti's testimony provided substantial evidence that defendants breached this duty.

D. Jury Instructions

(1) Duty to Protect Conti from Harm

Over defense objection, the court instructed the jury that it could consider the "absence of any warning" in deciding whether defendants took reasonable measures to protect Conti from being molested by Kendrick. In the context of this trial, in which such heavy emphasis was placed on the failure to give a warning—which we have concluded defendants were under no duty to give—this instruction was misleading to the extent it could be misunderstood to indicate that liability could be predicated on the failure to warn.[6]

Conti argues that the error was waived. But, we cannot agree. Defendants argued throughout the case that they had no duty to take any action whatsoever to protect Conti from being molested by Kendrick, an argument that subsumed objections to any instruction permitting a finding of liability for either a failure to warn or supervise. Thus, there was no waiver. (See also Lund v. San Joaquin Valley Railroad (2003) 31 Cal.4th 1, 7 [no objection at trial required to challenge erroneous instruction on appeal].)

"Instructional error in a civil case is prejudicial 'where it seems probable' that the error 'prejudicially affected the verdict.' " (Soule v. General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 Cal.4th 548, 580 (Soule).) Relevant considerations include: "(1) the state of the evidence, (2) the effect of other instructions, (3) the effect of counsel's arguments, and (4) any indication by the jury that it was misled." (Id. at pp. 580–581.)

As for the state of the evidence and as we have said, there was substantial evidence to support a finding that the Congregation failed to take reasonable precautions to ensure that Kendrick was accompanied by an adult during field service, and did not end up alone with Conti during that activity. As for the effect of other instructions, the duty instruction did not tell the jury that the absence of any warning was the only relevant factor for its consideration. The instruction stated broadly that the jury could also consider defendants' efforts on sex abuse education and prevention, and "such other facts and circumstances contained in the evidentiary record here as to the presence or absence of protective measures."

As for the effect of counsel's arguments, Conti's jury arguments emphasized the failure to warn Congregation members that Kendrick had molested a child, consistent with what her counsel described as Watchtower's "policy of secrecy which allows for an identified child sex offender to strike again." In his opening statement, counsel argued: "The governing body, through this policy, had made a determination that its own needs would be placed above protection of children and [showed] an indifference to children like [Conti] who were placed at risk by the presence of known sexual abusers within the congregations and the secrecy that surrounded it. [¶] That is what this case is about." In closing argument, counsel reiterated "we are here" because a "policy that keeps secret known child molesters in the congregations is wrong and needs to be changed."

However, Conti's arguments were not confined to failure to warn. Her counsel argued that field service was where Kendrick "got the best opportunity to abuse her. [¶] Now, that is actually related to the Jehovah's Witnesses because field service is what they do." Counsel argued further that defendants "didn't restrict Mr. Kendrick in any way that was meaningful. [¶] He is still a minister. He is still Brother Kendrick. [¶] He is still a member in good standing of the congregation. [¶] He is still sitting or sleeping in the back row or whatever it was of the Kingdom Hall there with children and adults all present. [¶] He is still a baptized publisher going out in the neighborhoods and collecting and spreading the Jehovah's Witnesses message. [¶] He is doing all of that with children. [¶] Now we heard from Mr. Shuster that there is a policy. 'No, he would never have been allowed to go out into field service with a child. That's our policy.' And when I say, 'Okay, well can I see it?' [¶] No policy produced."

It is apparent from the punitive damage award against Watchtower that the jury was misled by the failure to warn theory to a certain extent. We note also that the jury's allocation of fault—27 percent to Watchtower and only 13 percent to the Congregation—in apportioning Conti's noneconomic damages would be inconsistent with liability associated with field service if the only basis for that liability was failure to supervise Kendrick in the field. Our discussion of field service liability has focused primarily on that failure, and the Congregation, not Watchtower, was responsible for it. However, as we have explained, there were also grounds to hold Watchtower independently and primarily liable for negligence connected with field service. Watchtower, not the Congregation, dictated the conditions under which field service by child molesters was permissible. The jury could have found that Watchtower falsely claimed to have a policy that prevented child molesters from performing field service alone or with children, or, even if it had that policy, it did not impose the policy on the Congregation or Kendrick.

Therefore, weighing the Soule factors, we do not find it reasonably probable that the compensatory damages verdict would have been different if the warning instruction had not been given.

(2) Allocation of Fault to Non-Parties

Defendants contend that the court erred in denying their request to have the jury consider assigning some responsibility for Conti's injury to entities and individuals who are not parties to the litigation. We disagree. Defendants argue that, if the Congregation had a duty to warn the members that Kendrick had molested a child, then the police, the child welfare agency, and the district attorney who responded to the report of that molestation also had that duty because they "all had information [about the incident] superior to that possessed by Fremont Congregation elders." But defendants did not have the duty to warn on which this argument is predicated. Defendants contend that Conti's parents could be found at least partially responsible for the harm she suffered because they were negligent in supervising her and entrusting her to Kendrick's care. However, the court properly refused to allow attribution of fault to Conti's parents given the absence of any evidence they had reason to know Kendrick was a threat to her. (See Chaney v. Superior Court (1995) 39 Cal.App.4th 152, 156–158 [parent must have actual knowledge of threat of molestation to be liable for negligent supervision of the victim; such knowledge was not established by perpetrator's allegedly "excessive" gift-giving and attention paid to minor].)

III. DISPOSITION

The judgment against defendants on the negligence count is affirmed. The judgment against Watchtower on the cause of action for punitive damages is reversed with directions to enter judgment for Watchtower on punitive damages. The parties are to bear their own costs on appeal.

DIVISION THREE

CANDACE CONTI, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. WATCHTOWER BIBLE & TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC. et al., Defendants and Appellants.	A136641 (Alameda County Super. Ct. No. HG11558324)

In this case we consider the duty owed by a religious organization to one of its members who has been harmed by another member. Candace Conti, formerly a member of the North Fremont Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses (Fremont Congregation or Congregation) sued the Congregation and Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. (Watchtower), the Jehovah's Witnesses's headquarters at the time, for damages for her sexual abuse as a child by Jonathan Kendrick (Kendrick), another member of the Congregation. Before Conti was molested, the Congregation and Watchtower (hereafter collectively defendants) elders and officials learned that Kendrick had molested another child. Conti sought to hold defendants liable for failing to warn the Congregation or her parents that Kendrick was a child molester, and for failing to limit and supervise his participation in church activities. A jury found defendants liable for compensatory damages to Conti, and held Watchtower liable for punitive damages.

We hold that defendants had no duty to warn the Congregation or Conti's parents that Kendrick had molested a child, but that defendants can be held liable for failing to limit and supervise Kendrick's "field service," a church-sponsored activity where members go door-to-door preaching in the community. Kendrick had unsupervised access to Conti during field service that he used as opportunities to molest her. Because breach of the alleged duty to warn was the sole basis for imposition of punitive damages on Watchtower, we reverse that portion of the judgment, with directions to enter judgment for Watchtower on the punitive damage claim. The compensatory damage award is affirmed.

I. BACKGROUND

The Jehovah's Witnesses is a religion with about 1.2 million members in 13,400 congregations in the United States. In the 1990's, Watchtower was in charge of the church's policies. Congregations are comprised of elders, ministerial servants, and rank-and-file members called "baptized publishers." All members in good standing are considered "ministers." Elders are the spiritual leaders of their congregations, comparable to clergy in other religions. Ministerial servants do administrative work such as distributing literature to members, and handling microphones at meetings. Watchtower admitted that Fremont Congregation elders Gary Abrahamson and Michael Clarke were Watchtower's agents while acting within the course and scope of their church duties. In addition to Sunday and midweek meetings, Congregation activities include field service, where small groups, usually consisting of two or three people, go door-to-door in neighborhoods to spread the church's spiritual teachings.

Congregations are small and close knit. The average congregation has 75 to 150 members. At different times, the Fremont Congregation had from 100 to 140 members, of whom 6 to 13 were elders. Evelyn Kendrick (Evelyn), who was married to Kendrick during the period when he molested Conti, testified that "we only socialized with people of that congregation. We were kind of—well, not told outright, but that we should only associate with people of that religion and not of any other religion because they could be a bad influence." Congregation members call each other "brother" and "sister."

Conti and Kendrick were Fremont Congregation members in the 1990's, and for a time Kendrick was a ministerial servant. Conti testified that Kendrick began molesting her around the time she turned nine years old in late 1994, and continued until 1996 or 1997, when she was age 10 or 11. Before Kendrick molested Conti, the Congregation elders learned that he had molested his stepdaughter.

In November 1993, elder Clarke received a call from Evelyn or Kendrick asking for a consultation about Kendrick's abuse of Evelyn's daughter. Clarke and Abrahamson went to their home that week and spoke with Kendrick, Evelyn, and her daughter. The elders were told that, four months earlier, Kendrick had touched his stepdaughter's breast around the time of her 14th birthday. The stepdaughter told Evelyn about the molestation minutes after it occurred, but Evelyn testified that she did not immediately report it because she thought it was an isolated incident and she was "trying to deal with it" within the family. The details of what the elders were told about the incident were disputed at trial. Among other things, Evelyn disputed the elders' testimony that she told them to keep the incident private, and that Kendrick said he touched her daughter "inadvertently." Even so, the elders did not believe the touching was accidental.

The elders told Evelyn and her daughter that they were free to report the incident to the police. Abrahamson testified that they neither encouraged nor discouraged Evelyn and her daughter from doing so; "[i]t was up to them." Evelyn reported the incident to the police in February 1994. Kendrick admitted touching his stepdaughter's breast, and was convicted of a misdemeanor. Elders at the Congregation did not learn of Evelyn's report to the police until a couple of years later.

After meeting with the Kendrick family, Clarke wrote a letter to Watchtower to report "a case of child abuse" by Kendrick. Abrahamson testified that the Congregation was required to contact Watchtower for instructions in such a situation.[1] The copy of the letter in evidence is heavily redacted. In the unredacted portion, the letter stated that the Congregation had phoned Watchtower about the Kendrick matter, the "legal department had given us some direction," and Watchtower had asked the Congregation to submit its questions in writing. The letter said the elders planned to tell the Congregation that Kendrick would no longer be acting as a ministerial servant, and asked Watchtower to advise if that was an "incorrect" course of action. Clarke testified that Watchtower responded to his letter, but he did not provide the substance of the response and no written response is in evidence. The testimony was simply: "Q. And Watchtower did respond to the letter and he was removed as a ministerial servant? [¶] A. Correct. And we announced that."

[1] "Q. Why were you reporting this to Watchtower New York? [¶] A. To get direction. [¶] Q. And in all of your work as an elder that involves anything in this type of matter, you would get your direction and instruction from New York. Correct? [¶] A. In a lot of these cases that legal matters are involved, we are always encouraged to call the Legal Department because how could we know all the laws. And the laws change from state to state, but our Legal department could help us through this. [¶] Q. And you used the word 'encouraged' but actually you are required to call New York? [¶] A. You might put it that way. Yes. [¶] Q. I did put it that way. Do you agree? [¶] A. I agree you put it that way. [¶] Q. Do you agree that you were required to call New York? [¶] A. Yes."

Allen Shuster, a Watchtower official in New York, testified that Watchtower policy allowed a known child molester to continue to perform field service, but not alone or with a child. Defense expert Monica Applewhite, whose testimony is discussed further below, said that Watchtower policies were implemented by letters sent "to all bodies of elders in the United States." However, Shuster was unable to identify any church-wide writing that documented the limitations on field service by known child molesters. He said this policy was implemented by letters to elders on a case-by-case basis.[2]

Abrahamson testified that he told the Fremont Congregation elders what he learned at the Kendrick family meeting, and they agreed that Kendrick was no longer fit

[2] When Shuster was asked whether a person known to be a child molester "can be sent out as a baptized publisher into neighborhoods to spread the word of the gospel?" the following testimony ensued: "A. Yes. But not by themselves or with a child. [¶] Q. "Is there in writing anywhere the caveat that you just gave to us? I haven't seen it in any of the exhibits. [¶] A. I believe we have something in writing, yes. I couldn't put my finger on it right now, but yes. [¶] Q. Is it here with us today? [¶] A. I don't know if it is here. I don't recall. [¶] . . . [¶] "Any reason why, if there was a policy that specifically prohibited baptized publishers who were known to have molested children from going into field service with a child, that that written policy wouldn't be right in front of you right now? [¶] A. That policy is specific to each individual situation. In each situation there are instructions given in the letter to a body of elders where that individual is and that instruction is given in that letter."

to serve as a ministerial servant. They removed Kendrick from the position, and announced his removal to the Congregation without disclosing the reason for it.

Clarke testified that the Fremont Congregation elders were following Watchtower policy in keeping information about the molestation confidential. That policy was set forth in a July 1, 1989 letter from Watchtower to all elders in the United States, and it was a centerpiece of Conti's case against Watchtower.

The letter addressed the elders' "duties that may involve legal issues or questions." Watchtower instructed the elders they "must be careful not to divulge information about personal matters to unauthorized persons. . . . Elders must give special heed to the counsel: 'Do not reveal the confidential talk of another.' (Proverbs 25:9) . . . Improper use of the tongue by an elder can result in serious legal problems for the individual, the congregation, and even the Society. [¶] . . . Worldly persons are quick to resort to lawsuits if they feel their 'rights' have been violated. Some who oppose the Kingdom preaching work readily take advantage of any legal provisions to interfere with it or impede its progress. Thus, elders must especially guard the use of the tongue."

The letter continued: "The spirit of the world has sensitized people regarding their legal 'rights' and the legal means by which they can exact punishment if such 'rights' are violated. Hence, a growing number of vindictive or disgruntled ones, as well as opposers, have initiated lawsuits to inflict financial penalties on the individual, the congregation, or the Society. Many of these lawsuits are the result of the misuse of the tongue. . . . [¶] . . . [¶] The legal consequences of a breach of confidentiality by the elders can be substantial. If the elders fail to follow the Society's direction carefully in handling confidential matters, such mistakes could result in successful litigation by those offended. Substantial monetary damages could be assessed against the elders or congregation."

The letter went on to discuss "what to do in specific cases," such as "[s]earch warrants and [s]ubpoenas," "[c]rimes and [c]riminal investigations," "[w]hen [l]awsuits are [t]hreatened," and "[c]hild [c]ustody." On the subject of "[c]hild [a]buse," the letter stated: "Many states have child abuse reporting laws. When elders receive reports of physical or sexual abuse of a child, they should contact the Society's Legal Department immediately. Victims of such abuse need to be protected from further danger." The letter concluded with "points to remember," such as "[b]e extremely careful with written material," and "[a]ppreciate the [i]mportance of [m]aintaining [c]onfidentiality." With respect to confidentiality, the letter stated: "Elders must exercise extraordinary caution when it comes to handling confidential information about the private lives of others. Do not mistakenly minimize the gravity of a breach of confidentiality. Unauthorized disclosure of confidential information can result in costly lawsuits. Even if a lawsuit turns out favorably, valuable time and energy that could have been devoted to Kingdom interests will be lost."

Clarke testified that the policy stated in the letter was intended to protect confidential ministerial communications as well as to avoid legal liability. He thought that "confidentiality is important for a minister." He asked, "Why would anybody come to us with their problems if they knew that as soon as they come to us we were going to announce it? Why would anybody confess to a Catholic priest if they knew that after they confessed it was going to be announced at mass next week. It is ludicrous. [¶] So [the policy was] put in place so that the friends would feel comfortable coming to us and we could keep confidence."

Clarke testified that the elders told Kendrick he could not "show affection to children, put children on his lap, work with them out in the door-to-door ministry, work with children in the Kingdom Hall. [¶] And we made it clear to him that we were going to be watching him. And we did, all, the whole body of elders." Elder Lawrence Lamerdin said the Congregation had 10 to 13 elders at the time and they "made sure that [Kendrick] was watched." Abrahamson saw "no need" to inform the Congregation that Kendrick had molested a child because the elders would have warned the parents of any child they saw Kendrick getting close to or isolating.

In an August 1, 1995 policy letter to United States elders on the subject of child abuse, Watchtower stated: "[S]teps should be taken to protect the child, or other children, from further sexual abuse. Obviously, parents would be keenly interested in taking adequate precautions in this regard. . . . Loving elders, too, will want to act in a way that demonstrates their protective care, since the word 'overseer' carries the thought of one who watches over, a guardian, a shepherd of the flock. . . . [¶] It would be appropriate to talk very frankly to a former child abuser, strongly cautioning him as to the dangers of hugging or holding children on his lap and that he should never be in the presence of a child without another adult being present."

There was testimony that Jehovah's Witnesses conduct no activities such as classes or trips that by their nature separate children from their parents, and Clarke testified that parents in the congregations are regarded as "the first line of defense" in preventing child sexual abuse. Parents were educated about child sexual abuse in Awake!, a publication distributed to all congregation members. Child abuse was discussed at length in the January 22, 1985 issue, which covered topics such as "Who Would Do a Thing Like That?" and "You Can Protect Your Child." The subject was also the focus of the October 8, 1993 issue, which addressed the question "How Can We Protect [Our Children]?" The discussion under that heading stated: "Tragically, adult society often unwittingly collaborates with child abusers. How so? By refusing to be aware of this danger, by fostering a hush-hush attitude about it, by believing oft-repeated myths. Ignorance, misinformation, and silence give safe haven to abusers, not their victims." Both issues addressed misconceptions about child sexual abuse, including the belief that such abuse is most commonly perpetrated by strangers to the victims, and the 1985 issue gave as an example a girl who was molested by "a man who was running a church group."

Conti testified that she met Kendrick at the Fremont Congregation's Kingdom Hall, a building for Congregation meetings that seats 220 people. She said that Kendrick insinuated himself into her family, befriended her father Neal at meetings, and then began coming to their house. He molested her several times a month for a couple of years. With one exception, the incidents occurred at Kendrick's home, where he drove Conti after meetings and during field service. On one occasion, Kendrick put his hand up her shirt while they were riding on a train with her father.

Kendrick began getting physical with her by repeatedly hugging her at Kingdom Hall. She always went to Kingdom Hall with at least one parent, but Kendrick made her sit on his lap during meetings. She sometimes went to field service without her parents, and Kendrick sometimes drove her to the group meetings that preceded the door-to door field service, where partners for the activity were assigned. They did field service together many times without either of Conti's parents present. Conti said that the molestations occurred while they were supposed to be performing field service: "Our groups would go out, we would get our territories, and we would go out and service. And we would do door to door. [¶] And then there were times when our groups would separate even further. And we would go to . . . laundry mats . . . and things like that. And sometimes he would take me . . . to go do some of these things and then we would end up at his house." Kendrick drove her to his house, and when he finished molesting her, they would go "[m]aybe to the Kingdom Hall. Maybe to lunch with the rest of the service group."

Conti's father Neal testified that he did not see Kendrick engage in any of the inappropriate behavior described by Conti. Neal said he was always with Conti at meetings and during field service, he did not allow Conti to leave meetings with Kendrick, and did not see Kendrick hug Conti or Conti sit on Kendrick's lap. Conti's mother Kathleen testified that she had mental health problems during the two years before she and Neal separated in July 1996, which prevented her from caring for Conti. As a result, Conti was often on her own during that time. Kendrick was always offering to help Conti and take her places, and Kathleen thought he was just being nice.

Clinical social worker Laura Fraser counseled Conti and her parents from August 1996 to April 1998. Fraser testified that Neal and Kathleen were going through a tumultuous divorce, and Conti had assumed a caretaker role in the family. Neal and Kathleen were not "psychologically well-developed," and it was "like three children, in some respects, living together." Conti's home life was chaotic and unpredictable. There were a "multitude of emotional crises . . . particularly related to her mother," and Neal's work and Congregation activities left him little time for Conti. She was craving for adult care at the time, and extremely vulnerable to manipulation. Fraser was not surprised that Conti did not disclose her sexual abuse during the counseling. Fraser had told Conti that she would be required to report such abuse, and Conti had "no safety" because she "was still rescuing both parents."

Congregation member Carolyn Martinez testified that she saw Kendrick and Conti together at Kingdom Hall, and that he "was very enamored with her. He just looked at her inappropriately. . . . I remember them holding hands. I remember his arm around her." Martinez said that she never saw Conti come to Kingdom Hall or field service without a parent, but more than once she saw Kendrick and Conti together in field service. Martinez recalled Conti sitting on Kendrick's lap in meetings at her home.

Elders Clarke, Abrahamson, Lamerdin, and three Congregation members testified that at Kingdom Hall they did not see Conti get hugs from Kendrick, sit on his lap, or leave with him as Conti testified. The Congregation members said they never saw Conti do field service with Kendrick.

An expert testified for Conti about Child Sex Abuse Accommodation Syndrome, which describes behaviors often exhibited by victims, including delayed reporting of their abuse. Physician notes in evidence state that Conti reported in August 2002 that she was sexually abused from around age nine to 13. Conti did not recall that doctor visit, but remembered disclosing the molestations to her parents in 2003. She disclosed the molestations to elders, including Clarke and Lamerdin, in 2009.

A psychologist who was counseling Conti at the time of trial testified that she suffered from depression, anxiety, and most severely from post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD). A psychiatrist treating Conti testified that she was afflicted by PTSD due to the sexual abuse and she would require a lifetime of therapy. A psychiatrist qualified as an expert in child and adolescent psychology testified that Conti reported having been molested hundreds of times, that she had severe, chronic PTSD, and she would require therapy costing $160,000.

Anna Salter, a clinical psychologist and an expert on child sexual abuse testified for Conti that defendants, after learning that Kendrick had molested a child, did not meet the standard of care for organizations that sponsor or promote activities that bring adults and children together. Salter said that, by 1993, the major religions and secular organizations conducting such activities had "adopted policies of transparency regarding known sex abusers." United Methodist Church policies, for example, were to "[u]phold the rights of children, speak out when abuses occur, and advocate for the strengthening and strict enforcement of these rights." Salter said that "people knew what the risk was when you had a child molester," and that the standard of care "was not to keep it secret and let the person continue in the same activities with the same access to children." The standard of care required "reporting these cases . . . and making people aware . . . if they had a sex offender in their midst."

Monica Applewhite, a clinical social worker and an expert on child sexual abuse, testified for defendants that Watchtower's policy against "disclosing private information . . . very closely mirror[ed]" the codes of ethics of the National Association of Social Workers and the American Counseling Association. Based on her review of the evidence, Applewhite opined that the Congregation never put Kendrick "into a position that required or allowed him to be alone with children, to be in supervision of children, [or] to spend time with children away from their families." Because the church's activities did not separate children from their parents, Appelwhite opined that its best means of protecting children was to educate parents about child sexual abuse, and it exceeded the standard of care for such education in the 1990's. According to Applewhite, the elders met the standard of care in Kendrick's case when they left it up to Evelyn and her daughter whether to tell the police about the abuse he admitted, and "they kept a special watch on him and paid attention to whether or not he had any inappropriate contact with children within the meetings at Kingdom Hall."

Conti sued Watchtower, the Fremont Congregation, and Kendrick for damages for sexual abuse, alleging willful acts by Kendrick and negligence on the part of defendants. The negligence consisted of failing to warn members of the Congregation that Kendrick was a child molester, and failing to restrict and supervise his participation in church activities. Conti executed a covenant not to execute on any judgment against Kendrick, in exchange for his agreement not to participate in the case, or harass Conti or her witnesses. Conti obtained leave to add a cause of action for "acts of malice" supporting punitive damages against Watchtower, arguing that Watchtower acted despicably and with conscious disregard for the safety of others by maintaining a "secrecy policy" with respect to child sexual abusers despite knowing of their "high recidivism." The "secrecy policy" was set forth in the July 1989 letter we have quoted at length. Awareness of child abuse recidivism was exhibited in church publications such as the January 1, 1997 issue of The Watchtower, which stated that child sex abusers "may well molest other children. True, not every child molester repeats the sin, but many do."

The jury found Kendrick, Watchtower, and the Congregation liable, and apportioned fault 60 percent to Kendrick, 27 percent to Watchtower, and 13 percent to the Congregation. The jury awarded Conti $7,000,000 in compensatory damages, including $130,000 for future counseling and therapy, and $6,870,000 in non-economic damages. The jury awarded $21,000,001 in punitive damages against Watchtower. The court conditionally granted Watchtower's motion for a new trial on punitive damages, subject to Conti's acceptance of an $8,610,000 punitive damage award. Conti accepted the reduced punitive damages, and judgment was entered against Watchtower for $10,464,900, against the Congregation for $893,100, and against Watchtower and the Congregation jointly and severally for $130,000. Watchtower and the Congregation timely appeal.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Introduction

Defendants initially demurred, and have consistently argued throughout the case that they had no duty to prevent Conti from being molested by Kendrick. The trial court overruled their demurrer, and rejected their subsequent arguments that no duty was owed on the facts of this case. The court declined to give defendants' proposed jury instructions that the Congregation had no duty to warn its members that Kendrick had committed an act of child sexual abuse, and that defendants were not liable unless Conti's abuse occurred on church property or during a church-sponsored activity.

Over defendants' objection, the court gave the following "duty" instruction to the jury: "The defendants . . . had a duty to take reasonable protective measures to protect [Conti] from the risk of sexual abuse by . . . Kendrick. In determining whether or not [defendants] took reasonable protective measures, you may consider the following: [¶] 1. The presence or absence of any warning; [¶] 2. Whether or not any educational programs were made available to plaintiff, her parents, or to other Jehovah's Witnesses from the [Congregation] members for the purposes of sexual abuse education and prevention; [¶] 3. Such other facts and circumstances contained in the evidentiary record here as to the presence or absence of protective measures."

"Duty is a question of law for the court, to be reviewed de novo on appeal." (Cabral v. Ralphs Grocery Co. (2011) 51 Cal.4th 764, 770.)

B. Failures to Warn

(1) Warning the Congregation

Conti argued that the Fremont Congregation elders had a duty to warn members of the Congregation that Kendrick had molested a child and, as we have said, failure to fulfill that alleged duty was the sole basis for the punitive damage award against Watchtower. Congregation elders were following Watchtower's policy when they kept the molestation Kendrick reported confidential. We disagree with Conti that they had a legal duty to warn the Congregation about Kendrick.

" '[A]s a general rule, one owes no duty to control the conduct of another, nor to warn those endangered by such conduct.' " (Zelig v. County of Los Angeles (2002) 27 Cal.4th 1112, 1129.) "This rule derives from the common law's distinction between misfeasance and nonfeasance, and its reluctance to impose liability for the latter." (Tarasoff v. Regents of University of California (1976) 17 Cal.3d 425, 435, fn. 5.) "The basic idea is often referred to as the 'no duty to aid' rule, which remains a fundamental and long-standing rule of tort law. . . . 'As a rule, one has no duty to come to the aid of another.' " (Eric J. v. Betty M. (1999) 76 Cal.App.4th 715, 727.) For instance, in Eric J. v. Betty M., a convicted child molester sexually abused his girlfriend's minor child, and the molester's family members who did nothing "to facilitate any molestation" were not liable for failing to warn the girlfriend about the molester's past. (Id. at pp.717, 727.) In Eric J. v. Betty M., the court distinguished Pamela L. v. Farmer (1980) 112 Cal.App.3d 206, where the wife of a child molester who knew of her husband's past was subject to misfeasance liability for telling the parents of girls he sexually abused that the girls could safely swim at her house when she was away because her husband would be there to take care of them. (Id. at pp. 209-210; Eric J. v. Betty M., supra, 76 Cal.App.4th at p. 729.)

"Where, as here, a 'complaint alleges injuries resulting from the criminal acts of third persons . . .'the common law, reluctant to impose liability for nonfeasance, generally does not impose a duty upon a defendant to control the conduct of another [citations], or to warn of such conduct [citations], unless the defendant stands in some special relationship either to the person whose conduct needs to be controlled, or to the foreseeable victim of such conduct." ' " (Roman Catholic Bishop of San Diego v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal.App.4th 1556, 1564 (Roman Catholic Bishop), italics in original); see also Rest.2d Torts § 315; Nally v. Grace Community Church (1988) 47 Cal.3d 278, 293 ["one is ordinarily not liable for the actions of another and is under no duty to protect another from harm, in the absence of a special relationship of custody or control"].) In Pamela L. v. Farmer, the wife of the child molester "assumed that special relationship" with his new victims when she invited them to her home and assured them they could safely play there. (Pamela L. v. Farmer, supra, 112 Cal.App.3d at pp. 211–212.)

The alleged duty to warn cannot be justified in this case on the basis of a special relationship. Fremont Congregation elders were required, as Conti's expert put it, to make Congregation members aware that "they had a sex offender in their midst" only if: (1) members of a church have a special relationship with the church solely by virtue of that membership that requires the church to take affirmative steps to safeguard them against harm from other congregation members; or (2) a church has a special relationship with any member it has reason to believe may perpetrate such harm. (See generally, Roman Catholic Bishop, supra, 42 Cal.App.4th at p. 1564 [defendant must have a special relationship with the person whose conduct needs to be controlled, or the foreseeable victims of such conduct].) Conti makes neither assertion, and identifies no authority for any such broad duty on the part of a church to prevent its members from harming each other.

Rather, her arguments for a special relationship focus on the Congregation's custody or control of her and Kendrick. She maintains that the Congregation "exerted custody and control over [her] by assigning her to perform field service with Kendrick," and "took charge of Kendrick when they determined where and with whom he was to perform field service." But these arguments are material to the duty of care in connection with Kendrick's field service—a matter we discuss below—not to a duty to warn the Congregation that he had molested a child.

A number of cases have held that, where the issue is whether the defendant had a duty to protect the plaintiff from harm caused by a third party, the absence of a special relationship is dispositive and there is no reason to conduct the analysis prescribed in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal.2d 108 (Rowland), to determine whether a duty nevertheless existed. "Because the traditional weighing process using [the Rowland factors] 'has already been done by courts over the centuries in formulating the "no duty to aid" rule,' in the context of liability for nonfeasance, it is not necessary to engage in [that] weighing process" where no special relationship exists. (Seo v. All-Makes Overhead Doors (2002) 97 Cal.App.4th 1193, 1203, quoting Eric J. v. Betty M., supra, 76 Cal.App.4th 715, 729-730; see also Suarez v. Pacific Northstar Mechanical, Inc. (2009) 180 Cal.App.4th 430, 438; but see Nally v. Grace Community Church, supra, 47 Cal.3d at p. 293 [applying both the special relationship doctrine and the Rowland factors in analyzing whether church pastors had a duty to prevent a foreseeable suicide].) However, even if we were required to consider the Rowland factors, we would not conclude that the elders had a duty to warn the Congregation about Kendrick's past child sexual abuse.

The Rowland factors are: "[T]he foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff; the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct, the policy of preventing future harm, the extent of the burden to the defendant and consequences to the community of imposing a duty to exercise care with resulting liability for breach, and the availability, cost, and prevalence of insurance for the risk involved." (Rowland, supra, 69 Cal.2d at p. 113.) "Forseeability and the extent of the burden to the defendant are ordinarily the crucial considerations, but in a given case one or more of the other Rowland factors may be determinative of the duty analysis." (Castaneda v. Osher (2007) 41 Cal.4th 1205, 1213.)

While it is readily foreseeable that someone who has molested a child may do so again, the burden the duty to warn would create and the adverse social consequences the duty would produce outweigh its imposition. The burden would be considerable because the precedent could require a church to intervene whenever it has reason to believe that a congregation member is capable of doing harm, and the scope of that duty could not be limited with any precision. For example, would the duty to warn be triggered by an accusation, or only an admission, of misconduct? Would one warning be sufficient, or would continuous warnings be required to ensure that new congregation members are alerted to the danger? Child molestation is a particularly heinous evil, but which other potential harms would the church have a duty to avert? Would the duty be limited to crimes and, if so, which ones? Imposition of a duty to warn would also have detrimental social consequences. It would discourage wrongdoers from seeking potentially beneficial intervention, and contravene the public policy against disclosure of penitential communications. No moral blame can be cast on defendants for adhering to that public policy.

The law generally protects the confidentiality of communications with clergy like those of Kendrick to the elders here. Under the Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act (Pen. Code, § 11164, et seq.) clergy members such as a minister or similar functionary of a church or recognized denomination must report suspected child sexual abuse to law enforcement or a specified county agency. (Pen. Code, §§ 11165, 11165.6, 11165.7, subd. (a)(32), 11165.9, 11166, subd. (a).) However, this obligation does not arise when the clergy member is informed of the abuse during a "penitential communication," which is defined to mean "a communication, intended to be in confidence, including, but not limited to, a sacramental confession, made to a clergy member who, in the course of the discipline or practice of his or her church, denomination, or organization, is authorized or accustomed to hear those communications, and under the discipline, tenets, customs, or practices of his or her church, denomination or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret." (Pen. Code, § 11166, subds. (a), (d)(1).)

Similarly, clergy and penitents each have a privilege not to testify about penitential communications. (Evid. Code, §§ 1032, 1033, 1034.) " 'The priest-penitent privilege recognizes the human need to disclose to a spiritual counselor, in total and absolute confidence, what are believed to be flawed acts or thoughts and to receive priestly consolation and guidance in return.' " (Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 417, 443.) It has been argued that "the humanistic case for this privilege is stronger than the corresponding case for any other privilege. A person's religious beliefs lie at the core of the decisional autonomy needed to develop his or her life plan. In a philosophic sense, the person's chosen religious beliefs are arguably his or her most important life preferences." (Imwinkelried, The New Wigmore, Evidentiary Privileges (2nd.ed. 2010) § 6.2.3.b, p. 529.) The treatise observes that the United States Supreme Court has recognized "a constitutional 'right to believe . . . whatever religious doctrine one desires,' 'according to the dictates of his own conscience,' " and continues: "If the person has a constitutional right to independence in making religious choices, the recognition of an evidentiary privilege is an apt means of protecting that autonomy. If any type of relationship deserves the protection of an enclave shored up with an evidentiary privilege, it is a consultative relationship dealing with this kind of choice." (Id. at p. 531.)

Admittedly, neither mandatory reporting to the government nor evidentiary privilege control in this case. The privilege for penitential communications does not apply unless the communication is made "in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware," a condition not satisfied at the Kendrick family meeting with the Congregation elders. (See Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles Superior Court, supra, 131 Cal.App.4th at pp. 444–445 [no privilege for communications in church interventions with troubled priests because participants knew communications would likely be shared with more than one person].) Nor is it clear that Kendrick's communication was "penitential" as it is commonly understood given the elders' testimony that he said he touched his stepdaughter inadvertently. (Webster's Collegiate Dict. (10th Ed. 2001) p. 856 ["penitence" means "sorrow for sins or faults"].)

However, the public policy to protect the confidentiality of penitential communications that underlies the privilege and reporting statutes militates strongly against imposition of the duty claimed here to inform congregations of such communications. When the clergy member privilege was codified in Evidence Code section 1034, the California Law Revision Commission commented: "The extent to which a clergyman should keep secret or reveal penitential communications is not an appropriate subject for legislation; the matter is better left to the discretion of the individual clergyman involved and the discipline of the religious body of which he is a member." (7 Cal. Law Revision Com. (1965) p. 202.) Courts should likewise be wary to intrude in this realm.

Accordingly, we conclude that the elders of the Fremont Congregation had no duty to depart from Watchtower's policy of confidentiality and warn the members of the Congregation that Kendrick had molested a child. Since that "secrecy policy" was the only basis for the punitive damages assessed against Watchtower, the punitive damage award must be reversed.[3] counsel asked, "Did they really watch this guy like a hawk?" Conti and Congregation member Martinez testified that, at Kingdom Hall, Kendrick hugged Conti repeatedly, put his arm around her, held hands with her, had her sit on his lap, and "looked at her inappropriately"—the sort of behavior the elders said they were watching for, and if they had seen would have caused them to warn Conti's parents about Kendrick. Thus, if the elders had a duty to watch over Kendrick that included warning the parents of any child his actions might appear to threaten, there was substantial evidence from which to find that they breached the duty in Conti's case. However, we conclude that the elders had no such legal duty.

(2) Failure to Warn Conti's Parents

Congregation elders testified that they monitored Kendrick after learning that he had sexually abused a child, and would have disclosed his prior molestation to the parents of any child toward whom his behavior was inappropriate. In jury argument, Conti's

[3] In view of this conclusion, we need not reach Watchtower's arguments that the punitive damage award was not supported by substantial evidence, and was excessive as a matter of law. We also need not reach Watchtower's contention that imposition of a duty to warn the Congregation would unconstitutionally require the jury to assess the propriety of the church's religious beliefs.

The reasons for our conclusion are largely the same as those that led us to reject the alleged duty to warn the Congregation about Kendrick. There was no special relationship between the church and all of the children in the Congregation simply because they were members of the church. Nor did the church have a special relationship with Kendrick, for purposes of a duty to monitor his behavior toward children, by virtue of control over his conduct with them. As for the Rowland factors, it would place an intolerably great and uncertain burden on a church to require that it continuously monitor a member for inappropriate behavior, and attempt to gauge when that behavior justified a warning about possible harm to another member. Telling individual parents that a member had molested a child would also conflict with the public policy of confidentiality for penitential communications. While such a disclosure would do less immediate damage to that policy than an announcement to the entire congregation, it would be naïve to think that word of the molester's behavior would not spread within the group.[4]

Nonetheless, the Congregation elders voluntarily undertook to watch Kendrick and, if necessary, warn individual parents about him, and the "negligent undertaking" doctrine, like the special relationship doctrine, is an exception to the "no duty to aid" rule. (Delgado v. Trax Bar & Grill (2005) 36 Cal.4th 224, 248-249.) Under the negligent undertaking doctrine, "a volunteer who, having no initial duty to do so, undertakes to provide protective services to another, will be found to have a duty to exercise due care in the performance of that undertaking if one of two conditions is met: either (a) the volunteer's failure to exercise such care increases the risk of harm to the other person, or (b) the other person reasonably relies upon the volunteer's undertaking and suffers injury as a result." (Id. at p. 249.) Neither of those conditions for liability is met here. Nine-year-old Conti was not relying on a church undertaking, and any lack of due care by the elders in monitoring Kendrick's interactions with children did not increase the risk of harm to her, it only failed to reduce that risk.

Therefore, defendants cannot be held liable for negligent failure by the elders to notice Kendrick's behavior with Conti and warn her parents that he posed a danger.

C. Failure to Limit and Supervise Kendrick's Field Service

Conti's case demonstrates the obvious threat that child molesters pose to children in a congregation when they perform field service. They are also a threat to children in the community when they engage in that activity. The prospect of children opening their doors to proselytizing child molesters is frightening. To avoid the risks posed by having child molesters in field service, Watchtower's asserted policy was to prohibit them from doing the service alone or with children. Watchtower has not disclaimed a duty to impose those restrictions, and could not plausibly do so since the restrictions were a professed policy it had adopted for very good reasons.[5]

However, the jury could conclude from the testimony of Watchtower official Shuster, quoted above in footnote 2, that Watchtower in fact had no such policy. When Shuster could not identify any documentation of that alleged policy, he abandoned any suggestion that Watchtower had uniform, church-wide rules on field service by child molesters, and said that the policy was "specific to each individual situation." He said that Watchtower dealt with child molesters on a case-by-case basis, with letters of instruction to the elders of the molester's congregation.

[5] Watchtower arguably had a duty to altogether preclude field service by known child molesters. Evidence in Conti's case suggested that a determined molester could easily circumvent Watchtower's professed rules. According to her testimony, Kendrick was repeatedly able to isolate her from other congregants in the field. However, Conti has not argued that Watchtower's asserted policy was negligent, and we need not reach that issue.

Even if Watchtower had a policy of preventing known child molesters from performing field service alone or with children, there is no evidence that Watchtower did anything to implement that policy in Kendrick's case. Elder Abrahamson testified that Watchtower, not the Congregation, determined how matters such as the one involving Kendrick were handled. (Fn. 1, supra.) Shuster said that such matters were addressed by Watchtower through letters of instruction to the elders of individual congregations, but no such letter was produced in this case. Insofar as it appears from the evidence, Watchtower placed no limits whatsoever on Kendrick's field service.

Moreover, if Watchtower policy was to prevent a child molester from performing field service alone or with children, and even if that policy was communicated to the Fremont Congregation elders, substantial evidence was presented that the elders failed to see that the policy was carried out in Kendrick's case. Conti and Congregant Martinez testified that Kendrick and Conti performed field service together on multiple occasions. Conti described how Kendrick would separate her from field service groups, take her to his home, molest her, and then take her back to Kingdom Hall or the service group. The jury could find from this evidence that the elders were negligent in failing to supervise Kendrick's field service.

In this respect, Conti's case is similar to Juarez v. Boy Scouts of America, Inc. (2000) 81 Cal.App.4th 377 (Juarez). In Juarez, the plaintiff was repeatedly molested by a scoutmaster "during officially sanctioned scouting events, such as overnight camping trips. . . ." (Id. at p. 385.) Before the molestations occurred, the Boy Scouts had identified child sexual abuse as a serious problem, and had developed "a comprehensive 'Youth Protection Program' " designed to prevent it. (Id. at p. 398.) The program included guidelines prohibiting an adult from sleeping in a tent with an unrelated scout, and requiring that two adults be present at any scouting activity. (Id. at p. 400.) The offending scoutmaster broke these rules, and the other scoutmaster of the troop said that he was never informed of them. (Ibid.) The plaintiff argued that the Boy Scouts had a duty to take reasonable measures to protect him from the molestations, and that they breached this duty because, among other things, they failed to implement their child protection policies in his case. (Id. at pp. 385, 400.) The court reversed a summary judgment for the Boy Scouts, finding that a duty was owed under the special relationship doctrine and the Rowland factors, and that there were triable issues of fact as to whether the duty was breached. (Id. at pp. 400–413.)

We likewise conclude under the special relationship doctrine and the Rowland factors that defendants had a legal duty to exercise due care to prevent Conti from being molested during her church-sponsored field service. They could be found to have breached that duty by failing to implement Watchtower's proclaimed limitations on field service by child molesters like Kendrick.

For purposes of the special relationship doctrine, defendants exerted control over Conti and Kendrick's field service in several ways. Watchtower determined that child molesters like Kendrick remained eligible to perform field service, and thus presumably could have banned him from that activity had it chosen to do so. The testimony showed that the Congregation determined when, where, and with whom field service was to be conducted. The members went to group meetings scheduled by the elders where partners and the areas of service were assigned. Elder Abrahamson testified that he controlled where the members went so that neighborhoods would not be inundated with proselytizing. Abrahamson said that a single male was never assigned to do field service with a single female, and that children were never partnered with adults other than their parents. Elder Clark said that Kendrick was not assigned to do field service with a child, and characterized any such assignment as "suicidal" for the elders. But Conti and Martinez testified that Conti and Kendrick often ended up in field service together. It could be reasonably inferred from this testimony that, even if Conti and Kendrick were never partnered together by the elders, the elders facilitated his access to her by putting them in the same group from which partners were assigned, and sending them out with the group to the same neighborhood. Most importantly, the Congregation had the ability to control Kendrick's access to children in the field by keeping an adult with him at all times as required by Watchtower's professed policy.

The Fremont Congregation states in its briefs that field service is "a personal ministry, not a required congregation function or activity," and that Conti "presented no evidence that [defendants] had the ability to control when, or even if, a congregation member will decide to engage in their door-to-door ministry. Preaching from door-to-door is an activity that individual Jehovah's Witnesses only engage in when they feel motivated to speak about God." Even if the Congregation could not require field service, the evidence established that, when members wanted to do field service, Watchtower determined whether they were eligible and the Congregation controlled the manner in which the service was performed.

Watchtower writes in its briefing: "[Conti] . . . testified that Kendrick sexually abused her at his home after field service activity . . . . During closing argument, [Conti's] counsel incorrectly suggested to the jury that plaintiff was abused by Kendrick during field service. . . . The record demonstrates, however, that [Conti] never testified to being molested by Kendrick during field service." (Italics in original.) But, as we have said, Conti testified that Kendrick molested her while they were supposed to be performing field service, which to us means "during" field service. If Watchtower's point is that the molestations occurred at his home, rather than in "the field," the distinction is immaterial. While the Congregation may not have been able to police Kendrick's behavior after scheduled field service was over, it could have controlled his access to Conti during the field service.

For these reasons, the facts here are distinguishable from those in Roman Catholic Bishop, supra, 42 Cal.App.4th 1556, on which defendants rely, where summary judgment was affirmed for the church in a suit based on molestation of a minor by a priest. The court rejected the victim's claim that the church " 'entrusted [her]to [the priest's] care.' " (Id. at p. 1567.) There were "no specific allegations or facts the church somehow placed [the victim] in [the priest's] actual custody or control. Rather, the various police reports . . . indicated nearly all of the contact [the victim] had with [the priest] occurred when [the priest] took [her] from her home to various public places and hotels. [The victim] did not attend a church school, where an affirmative duty to protect students may exist." (Ibid.) Here, Conti was harmed during a church-sponsored activity, and defendants' control over that activity placed them in special relationships with Kendrick and Conti thus requiring them to take reasonable steps to prevent the harm from occurring.

The Rowland factors point to the same conclusion. It is foreseeable that a child molester will reoffend, and the risk is heightened when the molester is put in a position, as Kendrick was here, to be alone with a child. Defendants will not be heavily burdened by a duty to take reasonable care to ensure that molesters are accompanied by another adult, and no children, in the field. Defendants cannot claim that imposition of this duty would be unduly burdensome when it was Watchtower's avowed policy. Moreover, recognition of a duty of reasonable care in the supervision of known child molesters in the field furthers the policy of preventing future harm without affecting the confidentiality of penitential communications.

We therefore conclude that defendants had a duty to use reasonable care to restrict and supervise Kendrick's field service to prevent him from harming children in the community and in the Congregation. Conti's testimony provided substantial evidence that defendants breached this duty.

D. Jury Instructions

(1) Duty to Protect Conti from Harm

Over defense objection, the court instructed the jury that it could consider the "absence of any warning" in deciding whether defendants took reasonable measures to protect Conti from being molested by Kendrick. In the context of this trial, in which such heavy emphasis was placed on the failure to give a warning—which we have concluded defendants were under no duty to give—this instruction was misleading to the extent it could be misunderstood to indicate that liability could be predicated on the failure to warn.[6]

Conti argues that the error was waived. But, we cannot agree. Defendants argued throughout the case that they had no duty to take any action whatsoever to protect Conti from being molested by Kendrick, an argument that subsumed objections to any instruction permitting a finding of liability for either a failure to warn or supervise. Thus, there was no waiver. (See also Lund v. San Joaquin Valley Railroad (2003) 31 Cal.4th 1, 7 [no objection at trial required to challenge erroneous instruction on appeal].)

"Instructional error in a civil case is prejudicial 'where it seems probable' that the error 'prejudicially affected the verdict.' " (Soule v. General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 Cal.4th 548, 580 (Soule).) Relevant considerations include: "(1) the state of the evidence, (2) the effect of other instructions, (3) the effect of counsel's arguments, and (4) any indication by the jury that it was misled." (Id. at pp. 580–581.)

As for the state of the evidence and as we have said, there was substantial evidence to support a finding that the Congregation failed to take reasonable precautions to ensure that Kendrick was accompanied by an adult during field service, and did not end up alone with Conti during that activity. As for the effect of other instructions, the duty instruction did not tell the jury that the absence of any warning was the only relevant factor for its consideration. The instruction stated broadly that the jury could also consider defendants' efforts on sex abuse education and prevention, and "such other facts and circumstances contained in the evidentiary record here as to the presence or absence of protective measures."

As for the effect of counsel's arguments, Conti's jury arguments emphasized the failure to warn Congregation members that Kendrick had molested a child, consistent with what her counsel described as Watchtower's "policy of secrecy which allows for an identified child sex offender to strike again." In his opening statement, counsel argued: "The governing body, through this policy, had made a determination that its own needs would be placed above protection of children and [showed] an indifference to children like [Conti] who were placed at risk by the presence of known sexual abusers within the congregations and the secrecy that surrounded it. [¶] That is what this case is about." In closing argument, counsel reiterated "we are here" because a "policy that keeps secret known child molesters in the congregations is wrong and needs to be changed."

However, Conti's arguments were not confined to failure to warn. Her counsel argued that field service was where Kendrick "got the best opportunity to abuse her. [¶] Now, that is actually related to the Jehovah's Witnesses because field service is what they do." Counsel argued further that defendants "didn't restrict Mr. Kendrick in any way that was meaningful. [¶] He is still a minister. He is still Brother Kendrick. [¶] He is still a member in good standing of the congregation. [¶] He is still sitting or sleeping in the back row or whatever it was of the Kingdom Hall there with children and adults all present. [¶] He is still a baptized publisher going out in the neighborhoods and collecting and spreading the Jehovah's Witnesses message. [¶] He is doing all of that with children. [¶] Now we heard from Mr. Shuster that there is a policy. 'No, he would never have been allowed to go out into field service with a child. That's our policy.' And when I say, 'Okay, well can I see it?' [¶] No policy produced."

It is apparent from the punitive damage award against Watchtower that the jury was misled by the failure to warn theory to a certain extent. We note also that the jury's allocation of fault—27 percent to Watchtower and only 13 percent to the Congregation—in apportioning Conti's noneconomic damages would be inconsistent with liability associated with field service if the only basis for that liability was failure to supervise Kendrick in the field. Our discussion of field service liability has focused primarily on that failure, and the Congregation, not Watchtower, was responsible for it. However, as we have explained, there were also grounds to hold Watchtower independently and primarily liable for negligence connected with field service. Watchtower, not the Congregation, dictated the conditions under which field service by child molesters was permissible. The jury could have found that Watchtower falsely claimed to have a policy that prevented child molesters from performing field service alone or with children, or, even if it had that policy, it did not impose the policy on the Congregation or Kendrick.

Therefore, weighing the Soule factors, we do not find it reasonably probable that the compensatory damages verdict would have been different if the warning instruction had not been given.

(2) Allocation of Fault to Non-Parties

Defendants contend that the court erred in denying their request to have the jury consider assigning some responsibility for Conti's injury to entities and individuals who are not parties to the litigation. We disagree. Defendants argue that, if the Congregation had a duty to warn the members that Kendrick had molested a child, then the police, the child welfare agency, and the district attorney who responded to the report of that molestation also had that duty because they "all had information [about the incident] superior to that possessed by Fremont Congregation elders." But defendants did not have the duty to warn on which this argument is predicated. Defendants contend that Conti's parents could be found at least partially responsible for the harm she suffered because they were negligent in supervising her and entrusting her to Kendrick's care. However, the court properly refused to allow attribution of fault to Conti's parents given the absence of any evidence they had reason to know Kendrick was a threat to her. (See Chaney v. Superior Court (1995) 39 Cal.App.4th 152, 156–158 [parent must have actual knowledge of threat of molestation to be liable for negligent supervision of the victim; such knowledge was not established by perpetrator's allegedly "excessive" gift-giving and attention paid to minor].)

III. DISPOSITION

The judgment against defendants on the negligence count is affirmed. The judgment against Watchtower on the cause of action for punitive damages is reversed with directions to enter judgment for Watchtower on punitive damages. The parties are to bear their own costs on appeal.

TRIAL DATE: May 21, 2012

I. INTRODUCTION

A thorough review of Plaintiff's opposition to Defendants' consolidated JNOV/New Trial motions reveals that Plaintiff still has not identified one shred of evidence of "malice" on the part of Watchtower to support the jury's punitive damages award. Plaintiff, for all intents and purposes, admits this fact by arguing in her opposition that the jury simply chose to ignore or disbelieve the defense witnesses when they explained the purposes of Watchtower's letter of July 1, 1989 to all bodies of elders. Plaintiff produced no other evidence on the subject of "malice." Plaintiff thus relies wholly on the July 1, 1989 letter, but by no stretch of the imagination can that letter provide evidence of malice, much less clear and convincing evidence of malice

In a similar vein, Plaintiff's opposition does nothing to disprove that her clear and oft-repeated purpose in seeking punitive damages against Watchtower was, and still is, to change Watchtower's alleged national "policy of secrecy" about child sexual abuse. The evidence is undeniable that Plaintiff's overriding theme for this case was to change Watchtower's national policy. Plaintiff herself succinctly stated in her mandatory settlement conference statement that there could be no settlement of this case until Watchtower changed its policy. Plaintiff's attempt in her opposition papers to deny this unconstitutional and improper intent is completely disingenuous.

The jury found Watchtower liable for 27% of Plaintiff's non-economic damages or $1,854,900, when added to the $130,000 in economic damages equates to liability for compensatory damages of $1,984,900. Plaintiff fails to refute the cases that clearly hold that the ratio of punitive to compensatory damages against a defendant should be based on that defendant's percentage of liability for compensatory damages. Here, the jury's punitive damages award in a ratio of more than 10.5 to 1 thus is clearly constitutionally excessive.

To exclude certain non-parties from the special verdict form was prejudicial error, as was the failure to instruct the jury of the fact that clergy or ministers were not mandated reporters during the time period relevant to this case. The defense motions should be granted.

II. DISCUSSION

A. The punitive damages award against Watchtower must be vacated because Plaintiff presented no evidence at trial of alleged malice to support the jury's punitive damages verdict, much less clear and convincing evidence of malice.

Plaintiff devotes almost five pages of her opposition to the issue of whether there was clear and convincing evidence of malice to support the jury's verdict on punitive damages. In those five pages, Plaintiff does not identify any evidence admitted at trial that would support that finding. Plaintiff instead largely argues that the jury had the right to reject defense witnesses' testimony regarding the interpretation of the July 1, 1989 letter to all bodies of elders. (See Plaintiff's Memorandum of Points and Authorities ("Pl's Opp.") at 1:21 – 6:10.)

The only trial testimony cited by Plaintiff to support the punitive damages award is certain testimony by her expert witness, Anna Salter, Ph.D. (See Pl's Opp. at 3:6-7, which cited to Dr. Salter's trial testimony [Ex. 7 to Mr. Simons' Declaration] at 54:25-56:21 and 61:14-65:3.) Specifically, the testimony of Dr. Salter cited by Plaintiff was that "the Jehovah's Witnesses" did not meet what Dr. Salter considered to be the "applicable standard of care for organizations who [sic] sponsor or promote activities that involve adults and children together in their handling of the Jonathan Kendrick report of abuse in 1993[.]" (Simons Decl., Ex. 7 at 61:14 -62:17.) However, a careful review of Dr. Salter's testimony shows that she testified only about standard of care issues. At no time did she testify about the issue of malice, nor did any of her testimony justify the jury in drawing any inference of malice against Watchtower.

Therefore, Dr. Salter's testimony does not provide any evidence of "malice" on the part of a managing agent of Watchtower, as the term malice was defined in the jury instructions, and her testimony certainly does not meet the requisite "clear and convincing evidence" standard. For example, Dr. Salter did not testify, and no reasonable inference can be drawn from her cited testimony, that the alleged failure to meet what she considered to be the standard of care was done with "malice." She never testified that Watchtower "acted with intent to cause injury or that [the] conduct was despicable and was done with a knowing disregard of the rights or safety of another." (CACI 3948 [italics added].)

The jury instructions also defined "despicable conduct" as "conduct so vile, base, or contemptible that it would be looked down on and despised by reasonable people." (Id.; see also College Hosp., Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 8 Cal.4th 704, 725 [malice sufficient to sustain an award of punitive damages requires "despicable conduct" in addition to "willful and conscious disregard" of the plaintiff's interests].) Here, Dr. Salter's cited testimony also fails to provide clear and convincing evidence of such "despicable conduct." (See Shade Foods, Inc. v. Innovative Products Sales & Marketing, Inc. (2000) 78 Cal.App.4th 847, 909-10 [punitive damages award against multiple defendants reversed where the record failed to establish clear and convincing evidence of conduct that could be described as "despicable," even where the conduct at issue amounted to bad faith]; see also Fariba v. Dealer Services Corp. (2009) 178 Cal.App.4th 156, 174-75 [directed verdict for defendant on plaintiff's punitive damages claims affirmed where there was no clear and convincing evidence of fraud, i.e., no clear and convincing evidence that defendant "intended to deprive [the plaintiff] of his property rights, or otherwise cause injury."].)

Once again, Plaintiff is left with the only evidence she offered to support her claim for punitive damages - the letter of July 1, 1989. The clear and undisputed language of that letter instructed elders to contact the Watchtower Legal Department for advice about their legal obligations and to protect victims from any further harm. That is Plaintiff's only evidence of alleged "malice" on the part of Watchtower. Yet obviously, that letter alone is not sufficient evidence of malice, much less "clear and convincing" evidence of malice.

Plaintiff's opposition also argues that the jury could "infer" from that letter of July 1, 1989, that Watchtower's policy was to avoid lawsuits. However, Plaintiff had the burden to present "clear and convincing" evidence of malice by Watchtower, not mere speculation from which the jury is required to draw inferences.

Plaintiff clearly failed to meet her high burden of proof for punitive damages. Accordingly, JNOV must be granted in favor of Watchtower, and the punitive damages award must be vacated in its entirety. Alternatively, if, arguendo, the Court should deny the motion for JNOV on this issue, Watchtower is entitled to a new trial on punitive damages because there was no clear and convincing evidence of malice on the part of a managing agent of Watchtower.

B. The punitive damages award must be vacated because it is unconstitutional to award punitive damages to change Watchtower's national policy.

Before, during, and even after trial, Plaintiff openly and repeatedly argued that Watchtower's alleged "policy of secrecy" (i.e., the July 1, 1989 letter to all bodies of elders) should be changed to protect not only Candace Conti but also other possible victims of alleged child abuse. In fact, Plaintiff's mandatory settlement conference statement (Schnack Decl. at Ex. J) very pointedly stated that the case was not subject to settlement until Watchtower's policy was changed "to allow parents, children, law enforcement, and congregation leaders (to) be notified of known sex abusers practicing their predatory evils on unsuspecting children and families."

Plaintiff goes on to argue that BMW of North America, Inc. v. Gore (1996) 517 U.S. 559, prohibiting a state from imposing economic sanctions on violations of its laws with the intent of changing the tortfeasor's lawful conduct in other states, is inapplicable to this case. Plaintiff submits that BMW does not apply because her expert, Dr. Salter, opined that the conduct of Watchtower did not meet the standard of care. Therefore, Plaintiff asserts that Watchtower's conduct was unlawful in all states. However, no court in the United States has found that Watchtower's alleged conduct is unlawful. Furthermore, other than this Court, no court in the United States has found that Watchtower has a duty to warn congregation members of the past sexual abuse committed by a rank-and-file congregation member. Thus, if this Court allows the punitive damages award against Watchtower to stand, it will unconstitutionally sanction Watchtower, knowing that the punitive damages were based on Plaintiff's intent to change Watchtower's lawful conduct. Indeed, doing so would be the equivalent of California imposing its policies on the entire United States.

Plaintiff correctly quotes from Johnson v. Ford Motor Company (2005) 35 Cal.4th 1191: "Nothing the high court [i.e., the U.S. Supreme Court] has said about due process review requires that California juries and courts ignore evidence of corporate policies and practices and evaluate the defendant's harm to the plaintiff in isolation." (Id. at p. 1207.) Under Johnson, an examination of "corporate" policies goes to the reprehensibility "guidepost" when evaluating punitive damages claims.

However, Plaintiff's citation to and reliance on Johnson is misplaced here, because in this case Plaintiff's counsel did not argue that the jury should look at the national policy as evidence of Watchtower's alleged reprehensible conduct toward Plaintiff. Instead, Plaintiff's counsel repeatedly argued that Watchtower's alleged "policy of secrecy" should be changed, referencing other alleged victims. For example, in Plaintiff's motion for leave to amend her complaint to include alleged facts supporting a punitive damages claim, Plaintiff states: "[Watchtower's] implementation and maintenance of the secrecy policy epitomizes despicable conduct carried on with a willful and conscious disregard of the rights or safety of children." (Schnack Decl., Exh. K at 11:25, 12:6-7) (italics added.) Plaintiff's counsel expressly used the plural "children," obviously staking out the position that punitive damages are proper because of the alleged policy of secrecy's effect on children other than Plaintiff. Similarly, during opening argument at trial, Plaintiff's counsel argued "[t]he governing body, through this policy, had made a determination that its own needs would be placed above the protection of children and an indifference to children like Candice who were placed at risk by the presence of known sexual abusers within the congregations and the secrecy that surrounded it . . . and [t]hat is what this case is about." (Id., Exh. A at 41:15-21) (italics added.) Again, Plaintiff argued the connection between the alleged national policy and other alleged victims, not just the effect the alleged national policy had on this particular Plaintiff.

Finally, Plaintiff makes no secret that Plaintiff's oft-stated goal in making these connections is to change Watchtower's policy. While Plaintiff is correct that there was no evidence of other victims based on the Court's granting of a defense motion in limine to exclude such evidence, Plaintiff's counsel's arguments to the jury strongly suggested, and allowed the jury to infer, that such other victims exist. In other words, Plaintiff undeniably sought to recover punitive damages based on alleged harm to children other than herself, which violates Watchtower's constitutional due process rights.

Again, it is abundantly clear that Plaintiff's purpose was to effect a change in Watchtower's alleged national "policy of secrecy" and that she intended to do so through a large punitive damages award. However, the U.S. Supreme Court has repeatedly held that such a purpose is constitutionally improper, as discussed in Watchtower's original memorandum of points and authorities in support of the motions for JNOV and new trial. The punitive damages award must be vacated. Alternatively, if, arguendo, the motion for JNOV on this issue should be denied, Watchtower is entitled to a new trial on the punitive damages issue because an award of punitive damages to change national policy is unconstitutional.

C. To the extent the Court does not grant JNOV and vacate the punitive damages award, a new trial should be ordered because the punitive damages award is excessive.

In her opposition, Plaintiff erroneously states that Watchtower's argument regarding the ratio of punitive to compensatory damages is not supported by law. (Pl's Opp. at 14:26 – 15:20.) Specifically, Plaintiff incorrectly argues that the proper ratio for calculating punitive damages is "[t]he ratio of total compensatory damages suffered by the Plaintiff is correct and Constitutional measure of disparity, not the ratio to the individual defendant's proportionate share of non-economic damages." (Pl's Opp. at 15:2 – 4) (italics added.)

The decision of the First District Court of Appeal in Bankhead v. ArvinMeritor, Inc. (2012) 205 Cal.App.4th 68 is instructive and, indeed, controlling, because there the appellate court held that, while a low percentage of liability does not affect the defendant's degree of reprehensibility when calculating punitive damages, the low percentage of liability does "reduce the amount of compensatory damages with which the amount of punitive damages is compared, when considering the ratio between the two." (Id. at p. 87.) The Court of Appeal in Bankhead affirmed a 2.4 to 1 ratio of punitive damages to compensatory against the defendant, and when calculating the ratio, the court used only the defendant's share of compensatory damages. (Id. at pp. 88–90.) Therefore, contrary to Plaintiff's contention, when calculating the ratio of punitive damages to compensatory damages awarded in the instant case, this Court is required to use the net compensatory damages awarded to Plaintiff against Watchtower rather than the entire amount of compensatory damages awarded against all defendants.

Here, the jury found Watchtower 27 percent liable for the alleged harm to Plaintiff. Therefore, Watchtower's share of the non-economic damages awarded is 27 percent of $6,870,000, or $1,854,900. Adding in the $130,000 in economic damages awarded by the jury (because economic damages are joint and several), the net amount of compensatory damages for which the jury found Watchtower liable is $1,984,900. Under Bankhead, it is that amount "with which the amount of punitive damages is compared, when considering the ratio between the two." (Id.) Therefore, because the jury awarded Plaintiff $21,000,001 in punitive damages against Watchtower, the ratio of punitive damages to compensatory damages in this case exceeds 10.5 to 1, which on its face is a constitutionally excessive ratio.

An important factor in determining whether an award of punitive damages falls within a constitutionally permissible ratio when compared to compensatory damages is whether the compensatory damages awarded include a punitive element. In Bankhead's discussion of the range of constitutionally permissible ratios, the Court of Appeal cites to Roby v. McKesson Corp. (2009) 47 Cal.4th 686, 718-19, to explain that a jury's substantial award of emotional distress damages already includes a punitive element and, therefore, the maximum constitutionally permissible ratio in Roby was 1 to 1. (Bankhead, 205 Cal.App.4th at p. 88.)

As noted above, in Bankhead the jury awarded punitive damages in a ratio of 2.4 times the amount of compensatory damages; Bankhead was a personal injury asbestos case in which the net compensatory damages awarded to the plaintiff against defendant/appellant ArvinMeritor was $1,845,000 with a punitive damages of $4,500,000. The Court of Appeal in Bankhead commented that the defendant "ArvinMeritor's conduct was highly reprehensible." (Id. at p. 90.) Bankhead further held that the gross award of $2,500,000 in non-economic damages to the plaintiff "is high enough that it appears to include a punitive component. The inclusion of a punitive element in emotional distress damages reduces the permissible ratio of punitive to compensatory damages." (Id., citing Roby v. McKesson Corp., supra, 47 Cal.4th at 718-20). Bankhead then affirmed the 2.4 to 1 ratio of punitive damages to the net compensatory damages awarded against ArvinMeritor. (Bankhead, supra, 205 Cal.App.4th at p. 90.)

In the instant case, the fact that the vast majority – over 98 percent - of compensatory damages were for non-economic damages ($130,000 in economic damages versus $6,870,000 in non-economic damages) demonstrates that the jury clearly included a punitive element in the non-economic damages, as held by Roby and Bankhead. Indeed, even if one considers only the net non-economic damages awarded against Watchtower of $1,854,900, it still demonstrates a punitive element in the non-economic damages awarded by the jury. Thus, it is beyond dispute that the more than 10.5 to 1 ratio of punitive damages to compensatory damages awarded against Watchtower is constitutionally impermissible. Under Roby and Bankhead, the constitutionally permissible ratio for the instant case would be a ratio of one-to-one up to 2.4 to 1, and it necessarily follows that an award of punitive damages, if any, constitutionally cannot be more than the range of $1,894,900 up to $4,547,760.

Therefore, a new trial is warranted to cure the grossly and constitutionally excessive award of punitive damages against Watchtower. Also, for the reasons discussed in Defendants' opening brief on the motions for JNOV and new trial, should the Court find the punitive damages and/or the non-economic damages awarded in this case excessive and order a new trial solely on the issue of damages, Defendants request remittitur pursuant to Civil Code section 662.5(b) and ask the Court to reduce the punitive and non-economic damages awards to amounts the Court independently determines to be fair and reasonable.

D. The failure to instruct the jury that clergy or ministers were not mandated reporters during the relevant time period was prejudicial error.

Plaintiff's opposition fails to even address the particular testimony of Dr. Salter that misled and confused the jury about whether clergy or ministers were mandated reporters under California law during the relevant time period. As cited in Defendants' opening brief, Dr. Salter's testimony was ambiguous at best, if not disingenuous, and Dr. Salter did indeed suggest that clergy were mandated reporters in 1993. (Schnack Decl., Exh. D at 71:3 – 72:15.) Dr. Salter said the mandated reporting law as it read in 1993 "Didn't exclude ministers or clergy." (Id. at 71:19-25) (italics added.) Further, when asked a second time to admit that "clergy and ministers were not required to report until January 1 of '97 in California," Dr. Salter responded, "Clergies [sic] and ministers were not singled out. I think there was a question about whether the case law applies to them." (Id. at p. 72:9-14) (italics added.)

Thus, Dr. Salter was allowed to mislead and confuse the jury, particularly because the Court's duty instruction to the jury included reference to the presence or absence of any warning about Jonathan Kendrick by the North Fremont Congregation elders. The confusion created by Dr. Salter could have been avoided by giving Defendants' requested instruction on mandated reporting, which made clear that clergy were not mandated reporters until January 1, 1997.

Plaintiff's counsel only further compounded the jury's confusion and misled the jury by arguing during closing that they had heard two expert opinions regarding whether the North Fremont Congregation elders were mandated reporters in 1993 and that there was thus a question about whether the elders had a duty to report Kendrick to the authorities. Specifically, Plaintiff's counsel argued to the jury in pertinent part as follows: "the question about the laws and mandated [] reporting and there is questions back and forth about, and you have heard two experts testify about that." (Id., Exh. F at 107:6-10.) This clearly misled the jury for two reasons. First, Plaintiff's counsel knew that there was no question on this legal issue because the law clearly did not make ministers or clergy (or elders) mandated reporters in 1993. Second, contrary to Plaintiff's counsel's argument that the jury had heard two experts testify about this question, a careful review of all the testimony in this case confirms that Defendants did not present any testimony on this issue because the law was clear: elders were not mandated reporters in 1993. The only expert testimony on this issue was the confusing and misleading testimony of Dr. Salter which erroneously, if not disingenuously, suggested that the elders were mandated reporters in 1993. Defendants' expert did not testify on this subject at trial.

Further, Plaintiff cannot have it both ways, saying in her opposition that Dr. Salter did not create confusion and then arguing in closing that there was an alleged question between the experts about whether the elders were mandated reporters, especially when the law was clearly contrary to Dr. Salter's testimony on this issue. The requested instruction would have made it clear to the jury that clergy – the elders - were not mandated reporters in 1993. Thus, the failure to give the requested mandated reporter instruction created prejudicial error.

E. The failure to allow the jury to allocate fault to non-parties was prejudicial error.

The undisputed evidence established that in February and March 1994, the Fremont Police Department, Child Protective Services, and the Alameda County District Attorney's Office had the same, if not more, information concerning Jonathan Kendrick's touching of his step-daughter in July 1993 than the North Fremont Congregation elders obtained in November 1993. Further, the evidence was undisputed that the Fremont Police Department and Child Protective Services knew that Mr. Kendrick attended the North Fremont Congregation. Despite having that information, and despite those governmental agencies having the responsibility to protect minors, those agencies took no steps whatsoever to warn congregation members about Kendrick. As discussed in Defendants' opening brief, there was ample evidence from which the jury could have allocated fault to those entities. The failure to allow the jury to even consider whether to allocate fault to any or all of them is prejudicial error that requires a new trial.

Further, if Plaintiff's evidence at trial was to be believed, one or both of her parents, Neal and Kathleen Conti, allowed Kendrick to: (a) improperly and forcibly hug her and forcibly sit her on his lap at the Kingdom Hall numerous times; and (b) allow Kendrick to take Plaintiff from the Kingdom Hall to his home after Sunday services hundreds of times from 1994 to 1996, where he would sexually abuse her. As noted in the opening brief, Plaintiff even testified that Kendrick abused her in her father's presence on an Amtrak train. For those reasons, among others, there was ample evidence from which the jury could have allocated fault to one or both of Plaintiff's parents. The failure to allow the jury to even consider whether to allocate fault to either them is prejudicial error that requires a new trial.

III. CONCLUSION

For each of the independent and alternative reasons discussed in Defendants' opening brief and in this reply, the Court should grant Watchtower's motion for JNOV on punitive damages, as well as Defendants' motions for new trial and request for remittitur.

I. INTRODUCTION

Stripped down to their essence, the claims of Jane Doe ("Plaintiff") at trial have attempted to deviate from well-established authority by imposing substantial liability on a religious organization, Defendant Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. ("Watchtower"), for the criminal acts of one of its rank-and-file members. Indeed, over $21 million in punitive damages have been awarded to the Plaintiff based solely upon one piece of evidence: Watchtower's July 1, 1989, letter regarding confidential communications to elders which, among other legal and spiritual subjects, discussed the importance of maintaining confidentiality. Notably, the only reference to child abuse in that six-page letter is where it mentions that elders who learn of such an allegation should immediately contact the Watchtower Legal Department and take steps to protect victims from further danger. Although Plaintiff vociferously argued that letter amounted to clear and convincing evidence of "malice" on Watchtower's part, that correspondence actually reveals the exact opposite of malice, demonstrating instead that Watchtower was not only concerned that reports of child abuse be handled promptly and appropriately, but also that the victims of such abuse be protected. In the absence of a requisite showing of malice—much less clear and convincing evidence of malice—that letter cannot serve as the basis for the jury's substantial punitive damages award, compelling this Court to grant Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict ("JNOV") in Watchtower's favor.

Moreover, Plaintiff and her trial counsel openly and repeatedly stated to the Court and the jury that the purpose of this lawsuit in general—and the claim for punitive damages in particular—was to force Watchtower to change its alleged national "policy of secrecy." As will be demonstrated below, doing so is a completely improper and unconstitutional use of a claim for punitive damages. On that basis, as well, JNOV is similarly mandated.

Additionally, Watchtower and North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Fremont, California ("North Fremont Congregation") (collectively "Church Defendants"), also seek a new trial on several related grounds. Specifically, during the trial of this action, Plaintiff presented evidence that her parents allowed Defendant Jonathan Kendrick ("Kendrick") to take Plaintiff to his home alone on numerous occasions, where he sexually abused her. Although related evidence further revealed that the North Fremont Police Department, Child Protective Services, and the District Attorney all were notified during February of 1994 that Kendrick had molested his step-daughter and was convicted of a misdemeanor for that conduct, none of those governmental agencies did anything to notify the North Fremont elders, the members of the North Fremont Congregation, or the public in general about Kendrick's conduct. Despite those undisputed facts, this Court refused to instruct the jury that it could properly allocate fault to the Plaintiff's parents, the North Fremont Police Department, Child Protective Services, and the District Attorney. Further, this Court refused to give the jury the special verdict form requested by the Church Defendants allowing the jury to so allocate fault. Doing so was error which now requires a new trial.

Plaintiff also inappropriately created confusion during trial about whether the law in force in 1993 required the North Fremont elders to report allegations of child abuse to the authorities when Kendrick confessed to them that he had inappropriately touched his stepdaughter. Plaintiff's expert witness, Anna Salter, Ph.D., offered misleading testimony that the elders had such a duty at that time. Contrary to unequivocal statutory authority on that very issue, this Court refused to instruct the jury that the North Fremont elders had no legal obligation to report child abuse until January 1, 1997, when the law subsequently changed. Doing so was error which allowed the Plaintiff's attorney to further mislead and confuse the jury during closing argument and now requires a new trial.

Finally, the Church Defendants further explain how both the award of non-economic damages and punitive damages are excessive as a matter of law, and therefore this Court should either remit those damages substantially or order a new trial.

In sum, the Church Defendants respectfully request this Court to exercise now the wide-ranging authority given to it under relevant post-trial statutes to reject substantial damages unsupported by the requisite standards of proof, to rectify instructional error and irregularities at trial, and to prevent a miscarriage of justice.

II. LEGAL ARGUMENT—JNOV

A. Standard for JNOV

JNOV must be granted where there is no substantial evidence to support a verdict. Code of Civil Procedure section 629 directs that on motion of a party against whom a verdict has been rendered:

> The court . . . shall render judgment in favor of the aggrieved party notwithstanding the verdict whenever a motion for a directed verdict . . . should have been granted had a previous motion been made.

(Emphasis added.) A court is also empowered in an appropriate case to order partial JNOV as to individual causes of action. (Beavers v. Allstate Ins. Co. (1991) 225 Cal.App.3d 310, 323-24.) A motion for JNOV must be granted where "there is no substantial evidence in support [of the verdict]." (McCoy v. Gustafson (2009) 180 Cal.App.4th 56, 84 (emphasis added); see also Hauter v. Zogarts (1975) 14 Cal.3d 104, 110 (motion for JNOV must be granted where the evidence at trial is insufficient to support the jury's verdict).)

In Roddenberry v. Roddenberry (1996) 44 Cal.App.4th 634, the Court of Appeal described the "substantial evidence" test as follows:

> "Substantial evidence" is evidence of ponderable legal significance, evidence that is reasonable, credible and of solid value. "Substantial evidence . . . is not synonymous with 'any' evidence." Instead, it is "'substantial' proof of the essentials which the law requires." The focus is on the quality, rather than the quantity, of the evidence. "Very little solid evidence may be 'substantial,' while a lot of extremely weak evidence might be 'insubstantial.'" Inferences may constitute substantial evidence, but they must be the product of logic and reason. Speculation or conjecture alone is not substantial evidence. . . . The ultimate test is whether it is reasonable for a trier of fact to make the ruling in question in light of the whole record.

(Id. at p. 651-52 (emphasis added) (citations omitted).) As explained below, there is no "substantial evidence" to support the jury's award of punitive damages against Watchtower.

The jury awarded Plaintiff a total of $21,000,001 in punitive damages. (Special Verdict Form filed June 14, 2012).

Because there is no substantial evidence supporting the jury's award of punitive damages against Watchtower, entry of JNOV is appropriate, and the award for punitive damages should be vacated in its entirety.

B. There Is No "Clear And Convincing Evidence" of Malice Supporting the Punitive Damages Award.

California law "codifies the universally recognized principle that '[t]he law does not favor punitive damages and they should be granted with the greatest caution.'" (Dyna-Med, Inc. v. Fair Employment & Housing Comm'n (1987) 43 Cal.3d 1379, 1392 (citation omitted).) Punitive damages are awarded, not to compensate a tort victim, but to punish persons "guilty of recklessness or wickedness." (White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal.4th 563, 569.) The Legislature has established a greater standard of proof, "clear and convincing evidence," as the predicate to punitive damages awards. (Civ. Code, §3294(a); Basich v. Allstate Ins. Co. (2001) 87 Cal.App.4th 1112, 1118-19.) A plaintiff must establish by clear and convincing evidence the existence of "despicable conduct." (College Hosp., Inc. v. Superior Court (Crowell) (1994) 8 Cal.4th 704, 725 (malice sufficient to sustain an award of punitive damages requires "despicable conduct" in addition to "willful and conscious disregard" of the plaintiff's interests); Kendall Yacht Corp. v. United Cal. Bank (1975) 50 Cal.App.3d 949, 958 (evil motive is a central element of malice).) Mere carelessness or ignorance does not justify the imposition of punitive damages. Punitive damages are proper only when the tortious conduct rises to levels of extreme indifference. (George F. Hillenbrand, Inc. v. Ins. Co. of N. America (2002) 104 Cal.App.4th 784, 815.) Finally, to hold an organization liable for punitive damages, a plaintiff must prove an "officer, director, or managing agent" either perpetrated or knowingly ratified conduct amounting to malice, oppression, or fraud. (Civ. Code, § 3294(b); College Hosp., supra, 8 Cal.4th at p. 723.)

Plaintiff's entire argument regarding malice to support the claimed punitive damages—malice was the only basis on which Plaintiff sought punitive damages at trial—was based solely on the July 1, 1989, letter from Defendant Watchtower to all bodies of elders. (Schnack Decl. at Exh. I.)[1] Plaintiff's counsel repeatedly styled that letter as a "policy of secrecy." (Id. at Exh. A at 30:23-31:4, 32:21-23, 41:5-9; Exh. F at 100:18-108:25, 121:18-19.) However, there was not one witness who testified at trial that the July 1, 1989, letter was a "policy of secrecy." Instead, it was only argument and statements by Plaintiff's counsel.

The only evidence at trial regarding the July 1, 1989, letter actually showed that there was no such "policy of secrecy," as testified to by elders from the North Fremont Congregation and by Defendant Watchtower's representative, Allen Shuster. (Id. at Exh. A at 188:3-190:5, 216:21-217:24; Exh. B at 16:21-17:2; Exh. E at 159:1-176:3.) Watchtower delivered the letter at issue to all bodies of elders because of "a growing concern regarding the handling of [the elders'] duties that may involve legal issues or questions." (Id. at Exh. I.) It is not uncommon at all for an organization to discuss matters of legal importance with its leadership. Watchtower also had a spiritual concern that elders follow the Bible's mandate regarding confidentiality. Thus, the letter also stated:

> Elders share the obligation to shepherd the flock. However, they must be careful not to divulge information about personal matters to unauthorized persons. There is "a time to keep quiet," when "your words should prove to be few." (Ecclesiastes 3:7; 5:2) Proverbs 10:19 warns: "In the abundance of words there does not fail to be transgression, but the one keeping his lips in check is acting discreetly." Problems are created when elders unwisely reveal matters that should be kept confidential. Elders must give special heed to the counsel: "Do not reveal the confidential talk of another." (Proverbs 25:9) Often the peace, unity, and spiritual well-being of the congregation are at stake.

Among other subjects of legal and spiritual concern to Watchtower, the letter instructed elders on the handling of confidential information so as to avoid legal and spiritual problems. As the Court is fully aware, there exist a number of causes of action based on the improper disclosure of confidential information, and the right to privacy is protected by both the U.S. and California Constitutions. The evidence showed that the purpose of the letter was not to keep reports of child abuse secret—indeed, the issue of child abuse was addressed in one short paragraph on page 3 of the six-page letter. (Id. at pg. 3.) Rather, the purpose of the letter was to help the elders, who are untrained in secular law, to navigate the potential legal pitfalls they might encounter in performance of their spiritual and church duties. For example, the letter instructs elders on how to handle search warrants and subpoenas, and how to handle sensitive information when a member moves to another congregation or when there are criminal or child custody proceedings involving a member. (Ibid.) Confidentiality can come up in countless situations unrelated to child abuse, and the instruction in this letter clearly shows that it was designed to assist elders in dealing with these situations, including child abuse.

As noted above, the six-page letter has only one short paragraph on page three that addressed the topic of child abuse:

> Many states have child abuse reporting laws. When elders receive reports of physical or sexual abuse of a child, they should contact the Society's Legal Department immediately. Victims of such abuse need to be protected from further danger.

(Id. at pg. 3 (emphasis added).) As a result, the entirety of the $21,000,001 punitive damages awarded by the jury is necessarily based solely on that short paragraph. It would take a contortionist to twist that paragraph or any other paragraph in that letter into a so-called "policy of secrecy." Neither that one paragraph nor any other paragraph in that letter says anything about keeping reports of child sex abuse secret. To the contrary, the paragraph quoted above acknowledges that many states have child abuse reporting laws and instructs the elders to immediately contact Watchtower's Legal Department when a report of child abuse is received, so that they can promptly and properly comply with the legal reporting requirements and protect victims from further danger.

In a letter full of instructions about keeping private information confidential, the single paragraph on child abuse acted as an exception to those instructions and set forth a policy in which sensitive information could be disclosed to the authorities where required by law. Doing so was not evidence of a "policy of secrecy," as Plaintiff's counsel argued, and neither does that paragraph nor any other paragraph in that letter support a jury finding of clear and convincing evidence of malice. Instead, it demonstrated just the opposite: Watchtower was seeking to have local congregation elders nationwide comply with child abuse reporting laws and wanted victims of child sexual abuse protected. In short, that letter in no way satisfied the clear and convincing standard required under Civil Code section 3294.

Watchtower, on the other hand, presented ample evidence regarding its views on child sexual abuse and its policies related thereto. Watchtower's representative, Service Department elder Allen Shuster, testified that Watchtower abhors child sexual abuse, because it is a gross, horrible sin. (Id. at Exh. E at 158:2-10, 172:11-173:18.) Watchtower's expert, Monica Applewhite, Ph.D., testified that in an organization like Jehovah's Witnesses where children are not separated from their parents, the best method of protecting children is to give parents information about the prevalence of sexual abuse, the warning signs of abuse, and the need for parents to protect their children and how to meet that need. She further testified that Jehovah's Witnesses have done an exceptional job in this regard since the 1970's through the 1990's. (Id. at Exh. E at 113:21-115:3.) In addition, Dr. Applewhite testified that during the mid-1990's, Jehovah's Witnesses well exceeded the standard of care for educating parents about sexual abuse. (Id. at Exh. E at 117:3-13.) Moreover, Dr. Applewhite testified that Watchtower does not provide unique or special access to children, because Jehovah's Witnesses do not separate children from their parents at any church meetings or in any church-sponsored activities. (Id. at Exh. E at 110:11-112:13.) Even Plaintiff's own expert, Anna Salter, PhD, opined that Watchtower has good policies in place. (Id. at Exh. D at 84:4-16.) Dr. Applewhite further testified that the wording of Watchtower's policy on confidentiality closely mirrored the concerns of other religious organizations and the codes of ethics for the National Association of Social Workers, the American Counseling Association, and Child Welfare League of America. (Id. at Exh. E at 119:9-121:19.)

Plaintiff presented no admissible evidence at trial regarding any alleged malice other than Watchtower's letter of July 1, 1989. That letter is completely insufficient to prove the element of malice at the high standard of proof the law requires. Further, Watchtower's evidence demonstrates that it abhors child abuse and has good educational materials and policies to protect children. None of the evidence demonstrates the "despicable conduct" and "willful and conscious disregard" of the plaintiff's interests or the "evil motive" required for malice sufficient to sustain an award of punitive damages. (Basich, supra, 87 Cal.App.4th at pp. 1118-19; College Hosp., supra, 8 Cal.4th at p. 725; Kendall Yacht, supra, 50 Cal.App.3d at p. 958.)

Because Plaintiff failed to carry her high burden for punitive damages, JNOV must be granted in favor of Watchtower, and the award for punitive damages must be vacated in its entirety.

C. The Punitive Damages Award Must Be Vacated Because It Is Unconstitutional to Award Punitive Damages to Change Watchtower's National Policy.

The punitive damages award must also be vacated in its entirety because Plaintiff's stated purpose for pursuing punitive damages was to effect a change in Watchtower's national policy. The U.S. Supreme Court has expressly and repeatedly held that seeking punitive damages for that purpose is improper. (BMW of North America, Inc. v. Gore (1996) 517 U.S. 559, 572, 585 ("While each State has ample power to protect its own [citizens], none may use the punitive damages deterrent as a means of imposing its regulatory policies on the entire Nation.") (emphasis added); State Farm Mutual Auto. Ins. Co. v. Campbell (2003) 538 U.S. 408, 420-21 (award of punitive damages reversed where plaintiff used case as a platform to expose and punish defendant for perceived deficiencies in its national operations; "as a general rule . . . a State [does not] have a legitimate concern in imposing punitive damages to punish a defendant for unlawful acts committed outside of the State's jurisdiction").)

Further, the U.S. "Constitution's Due Process Clause forbids a State to use a punitive damages award to punish a defendant for injury that it inflicts upon nonparties." (Philip Morris USA v. Williams (2007) 549 U.S. 346, 353.) Punitive damages cannot be used to punish a defendant for injury that it inflicts upon "strangers to the litigation." (Id.) This is because the defendant "has no opportunity to defend against the charge" by showing why one victim's case is different from another's. Id. Finally, to permit punishment for injuring a nonparty victim "would add a near standardless dimension to the punitive damages equation." (Id. at p. 354.) For example, how many such victims are there? How seriously were they injured? Under what circumstances did the injury occur? "The trial will not likely answer such questions as to nonparty victims [and] [t]he jury will be left to speculate." (Id.)

Here, Plaintiff and her counsel have openly admitted before and during trial, that their purpose was to effect a change in Watchtower's national policy. Plaintiff's mandatory settlement conference statement openly admitted:

> [A]t the time [Plaintiff] first reported her abuse to Jehovah's Witnesses' officials, [she] asked to have the policy of secrecy regarding the identity of known child molesters in local [c]ongregations changed. The [Jehovah's] Witnesses have refused to amend their policy . . . Until this policy is changed to allow parents, children, law enforcement, and congregation leaders be notified of known sex abusers practicing their predatory evils on unsuspecting children and families, the case is not subject to settlement.

(Schnack Decl. at Exh. J (emphasis added).) In other words, Plaintiff refused to discuss settlement and was going to take the matter to trial to change Watchtower's alleged national policy. Similarly, before trial, Plaintiff filed a motion for leave to amend her complaint to include facts supporting a claim for punitive damages. Her motion, which concerned only alleging a claim for punitive damages, is full of references to Watchtower's alleged national policy. For example, the motion states that "[a]ll of the disputed conduct involved following the policies of, and instructions of, [Watchtower]," and that "[Watchtower's] implementation and maintenance of the secrecy policy epitomizes despicable conduct carried on with a willful and conscious disregard of the rights or safety of children." (Id. at Exh. K at 11:25, 12:6-7.) In making this latter statement, Plaintiff cites to California Civil Code section 3294, thereby specifically tying her claim for punitive damages to Watchtower's alleged national policy.

At the May 21, 2012, hearing concerning motions in limine, Plaintiff's counsel argued that reports of child abuse to Watchtower from all parts of the nation should be admissible. (May 21, 2012, Pre-Trial Transcript, pp. 40, 41.) Plaintiff's counsel explained that Plaintiff intended to use these national reports to demonstrate a "deliberate indifference" on the part of Watchtower regarding its alleged "policy of secrecy," suggesting that Plaintiff intended to accomplish the desired change through a large award of punitive damages against Defendant Watchtower. (Id. at Exh. H at 40:1-25.) Further, at trial Plaintiff testified that she told the elders she wanted to change this alleged policy of secrecy and that she would not have brought this lawsuit had they agreed to change this alleged policy. (Id. at Exh. D at 150:22-151:17.) In addition, during opening statements, Plaintiff's counsel stated that "[t]he governing body, through this policy, had made a determination that its own needs would be placed above the protection of children and an indifference to children like Candice who were placed at risk by the presence of known sexual abusers within the congregations and the secrecy that surrounded it . . . and [t]hat is what this case is about." (Id. at Exh. A at 41:15-21.) Further, during closing arguments, Plaintiff's counsel argued that punitive damages were necessary to effect a change in Watchtower's policy. (Id. at Exh. G at 15:3-17; 24:21-25:10.)

It is abundantly apparent that Plaintiff's purpose was to change Watchtower's alleged national policy of secrecy and that she intended to do so through a large award of punitive damages. However, as discussed above, the U.S. Supreme Court has repeatedly and consistently held that such a purpose is improper and cannot be the basis for a punitive damages award. Thus, the punitive damages award here must be vacated in its entirety because Plaintiff's purpose in seeking punitive damages was to change Watchtower's alleged national policy.

In the alternative, if this Court denies this motion for JNOV on the punitive damages issue, Watchtower moves for a new trial on the punitive damages issue, as well as the other grounds set forth below. The application for this alternative relief is based on the grounds that there was no clear and convincing evidence of malice on the part of Watchtower, the award of punitive damages to "change national policy" is unconstitutional, and because the award of punitive damages was excessive.

III. LEGAL ARGUMENT—NEW TRIAL

A motion for new trial asks the Court to re-examine one or more issues of fact or law after trial. (Code Civ. Proc., § 656; Carney v. Simmonds (1957) 49 Cal.2d 84, 90.) Code of Civil Procedure section 657 expressly authorizes a verdict to be vacated and any other decision to be modified or vacated, and that section authorizes the Court to grant a new trial under various circumstances. The Court should order a new trial for each of the independent reasons discussed below.

A. Standard for Granting a New Trial

Code of Civil Procedure section 657(1) authorizes a new trial based on "any order of the court or abuse of discretion by which either party was prevented from having a fair trial." Error in jury instructions may be grounds for a new trial where the error is prejudicial to the moving party's right to a fair trial (i.e., the error led to a miscarriage of justice). (Mize-Kurzman v.

Marin Comm. College Dist. (2012) 202 Cal.App.4th 832, 845-46.) When evaluating whether an error of instructional omission was prejudicial, the Court must evaluate (1) the state of the evidence, (2) the effect of other instructions, (3) the effect of counsel's arguments, and (4) any indications by the jury itself that it was misled. (Id. at p. 863.) Instructional error is prejudicial "where it seems probable" that the error "prejudicially affected the verdict." (Id. at p. 846.) An erroneous failure to instruct may also be grounds for a new trial under Code of Civil Procedure section 657(7), which authorizes a new trial for an "[e]rror in law, occurring at the trial and excepted to by the party making the application." (Maher v. Saad (2000) 82 Cal.App.4th 1317, 1325; Hand Electronics, Inc. v. Snowline Joint Unified School Dist. (1994) 21 Cal.App.4th 862, 871 (trial court's instruction erroneously permitting jury to award damages using an improper measure of damages prejudiced defendant and required a new trial); Whiteley v. Philip Morris Inc. (2004) 117 Cal.App.4th 635, 657-65 (trial court's failure to instruct jury regarding certain aspects of negligence claim entitled defendants to a judgment on that claim).) Giving an instruction, refusing to give an instruction, or modifying an instruction requested are all "deemed excepted to." (Code Civ. Proc., § 647.)

B. The Court Erred by Refusing to Give the Church Defendants' Requested Jury Instruction Regarding Allocation of Fault to Non-Parties and to Include Non-Parties, Either Generally or Specifically, on the Special Verdict Form.

It is undisputed that trial courts can allow a jury to allocate fault to nonparties. Civil Code section 1431.2(a) (i.e., Proposition 51) provides that "the liability of each defendant for non-economic damages shall be several only and shall not be joint." The purpose of Proposition 51 was to eliminate the unfairness and cost of the so-called "deep pocket rule," which exploited relatively blameless defendants who are "perceived to have substantial financial resources." (Civil Code, § 1431.1.) Citing to Proposition 51, the California Supreme Court held that a defendant's liability for non-economic damages "cannot exceed his or her proportionate share of fault as compared with all fault responsible for plaintiff's injury, not merely that of defendants present in the lawsuit." (Dafonte v. Up-Right, Inc. (1992) 2 Cal.4th 593, 603 (emphasis added).)

Here, and consistent with Proposition 51, the Church Defendants each requested a jury instruction and a special verdict form that provided the jury the opportunity to allocate fault to "other persons," i.e., the universe of possible tortfeasors the jury might find contributed to Plaintiff's claimed damages. (Bly-Magee v. Budget Rent-A-Car Corp. (1994) 24 Cal.App.4th 318, 325; see also Roslan v. Permea, Inc. (1993) 17 Cal.App.4th 110, 113 (trial court erred by not including in the special verdict forms defendants who had settled before trial and by refusing to permit the trial defendant to present evidence of one settling defendant's culpability; the matter was remanded so that the jury could apportion liability among the "universe of tortfeasors").) Significantly, Bly-Magee involved the issue of allocation of the alleged negligent conduct of not only the named defendants, but also of two public entities, the California Highway Patrol and the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department. The Court of Appeal in Bly-Magee held it was appropriate for the trial court to include on the verdict form the phrase "other persons" so that the jury could "apportion damages among the defendants and the universe of tortfeasors." (Id.) The Bly-Magee court also discussed that counsel for the defendant Budget Rent-A-Car could argue to the jury that the "other persons" to whom or to which the jury should allocate fault included the public entities of the California Highway Patrol and the Los Angeles County Sheriff.

Despite the above authority, the Court here declined to provide the requested instruction or special verdict form, including expressing reluctance to allow the jury to allocate fault to public entities like the Fremont Police Department, the District Attorney, and Child Protective Services, even though those agencies had the same or even more information about individual defendant Jonathan Kendrick than had the Church Defendants and their elders. (Schnack Decl. at Exh. F at 13:18-14:25.) The instruction and verdict forms requested would have provided the jury the opportunity to properly allocate fault to nonparties. (Id. at Exhs. L and M.) The Court's refusal to allow the jury to allocate fault to nonparties severely prejudiced the Church Defendants and, as a result, a miscarriage of justice occurred because the jury was prevented from even considering allocating fault to nonparties. Given the jury's ultimate findings of liability, the jurors were thus forced to allocate more fault to the Church Defendants than they otherwise might have.

Furthermore, by not allowing the jury to allocate fault to nonparties, the Court violated the Church Defendants' free exercise of religion protected by the First Amendment and its California counterpart. A church is not spared from complying with "a neutral, generally applicable law [which is applied] to religiously motivated action." (Employment Div., Dept. of Human Resources of Ore. v. Smith (1990) 494 U.S. 872, 881.) However, by holding that only the Church Defendants can potentially be held liable for a failure to inform, the Court targeted only "religious conduct for distinctive treatment." (Church of the Lukumi Babalu Aye, Inc. v. City of Hialeah (1993) 508 U.S. 520, 534.) "The Free Exercise Clause 'protect[s] religious observers against unequal treatment,' and inequality results when a legislature decides that the governmental interests it seeks to advance are worthy of being pursued only against conduct with a religious motivation." (Id. at p. 542-43 (citation omitted).)

1. State of the Evidence. The undisputed trial testimony showed that on November 11, 1993, individual defendant Jonathan Kendrick confessed to two North Fremont Congregation elders that he had inappropriately touched his stepdaughter in July 1993 while they were in the Kendrick family home. The elders testified that on November 11, 1993, they advised the stepdaughter and her mother, Evelyn Kendrick, that they had the absolute right to report the July 1993 incident of abuse to the authorities. (Schnack Decl. at Exh. A at 102:21-103:13; 104:11-19; 120:22-121:7; 200:18-201:16.)

Evelyn Kendrick and Fremont Police Officer Davila each testified at trial that in February 1994, Evelyn Kendrick and her stepdaughter reported the July 1993 incident of abuse to the authorities, including Child Protective Services ("CPS"). Thereafter, still in February 1994, a CPS case worker and Officer Davila interviewed the stepdaughter, and in early March 1994, they interviewed Evelyn Kendrick and Jonathan Kendrick. (Id. at Exh. B at 52:22-55:9; Id. at Exh. D at 23:4-24:1.) After Jonathan Kendrick confessed to Officer Davila about the July 1993 incident of abuse, Officer Davila recommended to the Alameda County District Attorney's Office that Mr. Kendrick be charged with a sex crime for the July 1993 incident. (Id. at Exh. D at 21:5-13.) The District Attorney filed charges against Mr. Kendrick, and he was convicted of a misdemeanor as a result. However, the evidence from Officer Davila and from the North Fremont Congregation elders in this case is that Officer Davila, the Fremont Police Department, the District Attorney, and Child Protective Services did not inform the North Fremont Congregation members or elders about their investigation of Mr. Kendrick having molested his stepdaughter, the resulting charges brought against him, or his conviction, even though Officer Davila was aware that Kendrick was a congregation member at the North Fremont Congregation. (Id. at Exh. D at 23:4-27:4.) Also, Officer Davila, the Fremont Police Department, the District Attorney, and Child Protective Services did not inform Kendrick's neighbors or anyone else in the local community about Kendrick's incident of abuse of his stepdaughter. (Ibid.)

Furthermore, if Plaintiff's trial testimony was believed by the jury, Plaintiff's parents allegedly put Plaintiff in harm's way by allowing her to go alone with Kendrick to his home numerous times—perhaps hundreds of times—over a two to three-year period, where Plaintiff testified Kendrick sexually abused her many, many times. For example, Plaintiff's father, Neal Conti, testified about certain interactions with Kendrick that included Plaintiff in their activities (e.g., riding the train and a couple of other outings). (Id. at Exh. C at 67:4-70:8.) Plaintiff herself even testified to being abused by Kendrick in the presence of her father in an Amtrak dining car. (Id. at Exh. D at 129:20-130:24.) California law makes it the parents' responsibility to protect their child from the conduct of others. (E.g., Cal. Welfare and Institutions Code, § 300; Williams v. Garcetti (1993) 5 Cal.4th 561, 570.) In addition, trial testimony revealed that Plaintiff's mother was a drug addict and alcoholic, made poor choices, and, among other things, would parade around the house naked and engage in sexual conduct with boyfriends in front of Plaintiff and when Plaintiff was within earshot. (Schnack Decl. at Exh. B at 121:6-9; Exh. C at 184:18-185:7, 193:7-25; 201:4-202:10; 209:17-210:10; 215:5-21.)

Based on the foregoing, the jury had ample evidence from which it could have concluded that certain nonparties, including the Fremont Police Department, Child Protective Services, the District Attorney, and Plaintiff's parents, were at fault and contributed to Plaintiff's damages. As a result, the Court erroneously declined to allow the jury to allocate fault to those nonparties. On this basis alone, this matter should be remanded so that the jury can apportion liability among the "universe of tortfeasors."

2. The Effect of Other Instructions. The effect of the other instructions is entirely moot because the Court's refusal to include nonparties in its instructions and the special verdict form took away the jury's ability to allocate fault to any nonparties. The jury could only allocate fault between Kendrick and the Church Defendants.

3. The Effect of Counsel's Arguments. Because of the Court's refusal to instruct the jury on allocating fault to nonparties, the Church Defendants were precluded from arguing to the jury that fault should be attributed to certain nonparties on the special verdict form. Defense counsel did reference what the nonparties did or did not do, consistent with the evidence presented. However, these were arguments without any weight or practical effect, because the Court's refusal to include nonparties in its instructions and the special verdict form took away the jury's ability to allocate fault to any nonparties.

For each of the reasons set forth above, the Church Defendants were substantially and unfairly prejudiced by the Court's refusal to instruct the jury regarding the allocation of fault to nonparties and by the Court's refusal to provide a special verdict form that provided for such allocation.

C. The Court Erred by Refusing to Give the Church Defendants' Requested Jury Instruction Regarding Clergy Not Being Mandated Reporters Until January 1, 1997.

The Court also erroneously refused to provide an instruction to the jury that clergy were not mandated reporters of child sex abuse under California law until January 1, 1997, which was more than three years after Kendrick inappropriately touched his stepdaughter in 1993. This is significant because Plaintiff's "breach of duty" argument was premised in part on an alleged failure to warn, and the Court's so-called duty instruction to the jury included reference to the presence or absence of any warning about Kendrick by the North Fremont Congregation elders.

The statutory scheme in place in 1993 was analogous to that which the California Supreme Court dealt with in Nally v. Grace Community (1988) 47 Cal.3d 278. In Nally, the plaintiffs alleged that their son had committed suicide, in part due to the negligent counseling that had been provided to their son by a minister. As discussed above, however, the Court uniformly rejected that theory of liability. Of note, the Supreme Court held that the legislative exemption of the clergy from licensing requirements that were applicable to other counselors was an acknowledgement "that access to the clergy for counseling should be free from state imposed counseling standards, and that 'the secular state is not equipped to ascertain the competence of counseling when performed by those affiliated with religious organizations.'" (Id. at p. 298.) The Supreme Court in Nally further explained:

> Because of the differing theological views espoused by the myriad of religions in our state and practiced by church members, it would certainly be impractical, and quite possibly unconstitutional, to impose a duty of care on pastoral counselors. Such a duty would necessarily be intertwined with the religious philosophy of the particular denomination or ecclesiastical teachings of the religious entity.

Likewise, the Legislature recognized the need for ministers, such as the elders in the North Fremont Congregation, to provide counseling and spiritual assistance to congregation members without interference from the State. For this reason, the Legislature did not make ministers or clergy mandated reporters.

Here, because of the Court's refusal to give the requested instruction, the jury was misled and confused. They did not have the proper understanding that the elders, as agents of the Church Defendants, were not mandated reporters at the time they learned of Kendrick's 1993 misconduct.

1. State of the Evidence. Effective January 1, 1997, California Penal Code 11166 added ministers to its list of mandated reporters of suspected child abuse, unless the minister learned of this abuse as a result of a "penitential communication." However, Plaintiff's expert, Anna Salter, Ph.D., intentionally misled the jury on this issue by suggesting that clergy were legally obligated to report under the California mandated child abuse reporting law in 1993 and that the 1997 law simply clarified this reporting obligation. (Schnack Decl. at Exh. D at 71:3-72:15.) An instruction that clergy were not mandated reporters under California law at any time relevant to this action would have prevented Dr. Salter's intentionally misleading testimony from being used by Plaintiff's counsel during closing to plant in the jury's mind that the Church Defendants' elders had a legal duty to report child sexual abuse in 1993 was an open question, when the law is clear that no such legal duty existed.

2. The Effect of Other Instructions and the Effect of Counsel's Arguments. The Court's so-called "duty" instruction states that the Church Defendants "had a duty to take reasonable protective measures to protect [Plaintiff] from the risk of sexual abuse by . . . Kendrick." (Id. at Exh. F at 60:5-24.) Plaintiff's counsel argument suggested to the jury that one measure the Church Defendants could have taken was reporting Kendrick's confession regarding touching his stepdaughter to the authorities. (Id. at Exh. F at 107:6-10, 215:20-216:19.)

This argument by Plaintiff's counsel, combined with Dr. Salter's intentionally misleading the jury to make them think that the Church Defendants' elders had a legal duty to report child sexual abuse to the authorities in 1993, and the Court's refusal to properly instruct the jury that the Church Defendants were not mandated reporters under California law until 1997, misled, confused, and allowed the jury to conclude that the Church Defendants failed to comply with the mandatory child abuse reporting law and breached some alleged duty owed to Plaintiff.

Plaintiff's counsel also argued to the jury that the North Fremont elders had a duty to inform all of the congregation parents of the 1993 incident involving Kendrick, and to let them know that he was a child molester. (Id. at Exh. F at 95:6-17.) However, the testimony of the Church Defendant elders and the July 1, 1989, letter to all bodies of elders clearly showed that this would have been a serious breach of confidentiality in violation of the tenets and practices of their faith. The Court's duty instruction to the jury that it could consider the presence or the absence of any warning by the Church Defendants' in its determination of whether Church Defendants took reasonable steps to protect Plaintiff from abuse by Kendrick, in the absence of any statutory law that requires such action, resulted in an unconstitutional clergy malpractice claim in that the Church Defendants' elders' supposed failure to take action was the basis of Plaintiff's claim. (Nally, supra, 47 Cal.3d at p. 299 (California law does not recognize clergy malpractice claims, holding that it is unconstitutional to impose a duty of care on a church for counseling).)

For each of the reasons set forth above, the Church Defendants were each substantially and unfairly prejudiced by the Court's refusal to instruct the jury that clergy, including the elders in the North Fremont Congregation, were not mandated reporters under California law until January 1, 1997. Thus, a new trial is warranted.

D. The Non-Economic Damages Award Is Excessive.

Code of Civil Procedure section 657(5) authorizes a new trial where the award of damages is excessive. The Court has the power and responsibility to reweigh the evidence when deciding a motion for new trial:

> A new trial shall not be granted upon the ground of. . . excessive . . . damages, unless after weighing the evidence the court is convinced from the entire record, including reasonable inferences therefrom, that the . . . jury clearly should have reached a different verdict . . . .

(Code Civ. Proc., § 657 (emphasis added).) It has long been held that a trial court can order a new trial where the award is so disproportionate to the facts of the case that it shocks the sense of justice and immediately raises a strong presumption that it is based on prejudice or passion, rather than sober judgment. (Harrison v. Sutter Street Railway Co. (1897) 116 Cal. 156, 164; Gerard v. Ross (1988) 204 Cal.App.3d 968, 978 (new trial for excessive damages granted where award resulted from the passion and prejudice of the jury).)

During the trial, the only witness who testified that Plaintiff was abused was the Plaintiff herself. Her trial testimony varied greatly from her deposition testimony about the number of times she was abused, as well as the period of time during which she alleged that she was abused and the circumstances that led to her abuse. While she testified during her deposition that the abuse by Kendrick took place at his home when he took her from the Kingdom Hall hundreds of times after Sunday meetings over a two-year period, her trial testimony was that she was uncertain of the number of incidents of abuse or the time period during which the abuse occurred. She also testified to one incident of abuse by Kendrick in an Amtrak train dining car while her father was sitting across from them. In addition, during her trial testimony, she added for the first time that there were times when she was in field service with Kendrick and that after field service Kendrick took her to his home and abused her. (Schnack Decl. at Exh. D at 110:22-113:21, 125:25-126:23, 127:12-130:24, 148:25-149:3.) Furthermore, during closing argument, Plaintiff's counsel mislead the jury by suggesting that the Plaintiff was abused by Kendrick during field service even though there was no evidence to support this suggestion. (Id. at Exh. F at 212:14-21.)

In addition, the Plaintiff's description of being hugged by Kendrick at the Kingdom Hall and sitting on Kendrick's lap at the Kingdom Hall and being taken to Kendrick's home alone were disputed by her father, Neal Conti (id. at Exh. C at 48:17-21, 48:24-49:6, 61:2-11, 64:3-13, 65:23-66:22; 69:13-21, 77:2-13, 80:22-82:5, 83:11-84:1, 85:9-86:18), elders Abrahamson and Clarke (id. at Exh. A at 126:15-17, 139:16-23, 140:21-141:1, 143:22-144:9, 150:5-24, 208:20-209:11, 214:10-215:5), and elder Lamerdin (id. at Exh. B at 168:2-8, 173:9-12, 179:3-9, 181:24-184:3). They kept an eye on Kendrick after the 1993 incident with his stepdaughter and never saw such things happen. Congregation members Bernice Munoz, Sylvia Munoz, and Pamela Figuerido also testified that they never saw such conduct at the Kingdom Hall, that such conduct would have been inappropriate and they would have reported it to the elders if they had seen it. (Id. at Exh. E at 59:25-61:16, 68:13-70:10, 85:23-88:1.) Even Plaintiff's mother, Kathleen Conti, who was represented by Plaintiff's attorney during her deposition, testified at trial that she never saw Plaintiff sitting on Kendrick's lap at the Kingdom Hall, never saw Kendrick "bear hug" Plaintiff at the Kingdom Hall, and she never allowed Plaintiff to go alone to Kendrick's home. (Id. at Exh. B at 124:5-125:1.)

Another factor to keep in mind in evaluating the propriety of the award of non-economic damages in this case is that while Plaintiff testified at her deposition that the abuse by Kendrick occurred at his house while he lived alone, he only lived alone for a few weeks in 1996. After his separation from his wife and losing his home in foreclosure, he lived with the Francis family. (Id. at Exh. B at 91:6-14.) Thus, if Plaintiff was abused by Kendrick, it occurred over a very short time span.

While child sexual abuse is tragic, the only thing Plaintiff claims the Church Defendants did wrong was have a so-called "policy of secrecy." As fully discussed in Section II.B above, the single paragraph regarding child abuse in the July 1, 1989, letter did not provide for a "policy of secrecy" but was an instruction to the elders to immediately report information concerning child abuse, including sexual abuse, to Watchtower's Legal Department because certain states required reporting and Watchtower also wanted to ensure that the victims were protected from further harm. Despite Watchtower's stated concern for protecting children and compliance with child abuse reporting laws, Plaintiff's counsel manipulated and twisted language in this same letter that was unrelated to child abuse to concoct an argument that Watchtower had an alleged "policy of secrecy." As demonstrated by the extremely large non-economic damages awarded, Plaintiff's counsel's manipulation and twisting of the evidence so inflamed the jury's passions and prejudices that they awarded even more than Plaintiff's counsel asked for. The award for non-economic damages is way out of line with the evidence at trial and is excessive. Thus, a new trial is necessary.

E. A New Trial Is Necessary Because There Was No Clear and Convincing Evidence of Malice to Support the Punitive Damages Award.

In the interest of brevity and judicial economy, the Church Defendants do not here fully repeat the legal analysis set forth in Section II.B. For the same reasons discussed therein, this Court should order a new trial because there was not clear and convincing evidence of malice to support the $21,000,001 punitive damages award.

F. A New Trial Is Necessary Because it Was Unconstitutional to Award Punitive Damages to Change Watchtower's National Policy—Plaintiff's Stated Purpose for Her Claim of an Alleged Act of Malice.

Again in the interest of brevity and judicial economy, the Church Defendants also do not here fully repeat the legal analysis set forth in Section II.C. For the same reasons discussed therein, this Court should order a new trial because Plaintiff's stated purpose for her claim of punitive damages (to change Watchtower's national policy) is unconstitutional as a matter of law.

G. The Punitive Damages Award Is Excessive.

To the extent the Court does not vacate the damages award in its entirety, the Court should order a new trial pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure section 657(5) because the punitive damages award is excessive. In Gerard, 204 Cal.App.3d at 978-79, the court of appeal ordered a new trial on the basis that the damages awarded were excessive because the punitive damages award was "confiscatory in nature" and did not a bear reasonable relationship to compensatory damages or the defendant's total assets or annual income. (Id. at p. 978 n. 6.) The U.S. Supreme Court has held that "grossly excessive" or arbitrary punitive awards violate due process. (State Farm, supra, 538 U.S. at p. 416.) The Court recognized the following "guideposts" in assessing the reasonableness of a punitive damages award: (1) the degree of reprehensibility of defendant's conduct; and (2) the disparity between plaintiff's harm and the punitive damages award. (Id. at p. 418 (note that the Court also recognized a third guidepost not applicable here—the difference between the punitive award and any authorized civil penalties).) The Court further held that there are no mathematical limits to calculating a punitive damages award but that ordinarily, a single-digit ratio between punitive and compensatory damages is more likely to satisfy due process. (Id. at p. 424-26.) In a separate case, the U.S. Supreme Court held that due process requires that juries not punish defendants for harm caused to strangers to the action. (Philip Morris USA, supra, 549 U.S. at pp. 349, 356-57 (award based on jury's desire to punish defendant for harming nonparties would amount to taking of defendant's process without due process).)

1. Degree of Reprehensibility. As discussed in Section II.B above, the Church Defendant's July 1, 1989, letter was not a "policy of secrecy" but was an instruction to the elders to immediately report information concerning child abuse, including sexual abuse, to Watchtower's Legal Department because certain states required reporting, and Watchtower wanted to ensure that the victims were protected from further harm. This three-sentence paragraph is not reprehensible at all, much less so reprehensible as to justify an award of over $21,000,000 in punitive damages. The award is thus unconstitutional on its face.

2. Disparity Between Compensatory Damages and Punitive Damages Awarded. The compensatory damages awarded totaled $7,000,000. The jury found that Watchtower was twenty-seven percent (27%) responsible for Plaintiff's harm. Twenty-seven percent (27%) of the $6,870,000 in noneconomic damages awarded is $1,854,900, and there is a great disparity between that number and the punitive damages awarded. Furthermore, in light of the evidence in this case showing a lack of malice, a new trial is warranted to cure the grossly excessive and arbitrary award of punitive damages.

In addition, "[w]hen compensatory damages are substantial, then a lesser ratio, perhaps only equal to compensatory damages, can reach the outermost limit of the due process guarantee." (State Farm, supra, 538 U.S. at p. 425.) Here, the jury indisputably awarded Plaintiff a substantial amount of compensatory damages, whether one considers the $7,000,000 in total compensatory damages awarded against all defendants or only the $1,984,900 against Defendant Watchtower when the economic and noneconomic damages are combined. Either way, the Campbell case supports the view that a "ratio . . . equal to compensatory damages" reaches the outer limits of due process here. For this reason, too, a new trial is warranted to cure the grossly excessive and arbitrary award of punitive damages.

H. Request for Remittitur.

Should the Court find the damages, non-economic and/or punitive, awarded to Plaintiff excessive and order a new trial solely on the issue of damages, the Church Defendants request remittitur pursuant to Civil Code section 662.5(b) and asks that the Court reduce the non-economic and punitive damages awards to amounts the Court independently determines to be fair and reasonable. This request for remittitur is made for each and every reason discussed in Sections II.A through II.C and III.C through III.G.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the independent reasons discussed herein, the Church Defendants request that the Court grant Watchtower's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict on punitive damages, as well as the Church Defendants' motion for new trial, and request for remittitur. Further, the Church Defendants remind the Court that pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure sections 629, 659, and 660, the Court's jurisdiction to rule on these matters ends on August 13, 2012. Therefore, the Court must rule on this Motion by that date to avoid severe prejudice and irreparable harm to the Church Defendants.

FIRST CAUSE OF ACTION
Negligence
(As to Defendants WATCHTOWER NY, WATCHTOWER PA, GBJW, KHJW, and JWP Only)

6. In the time period of 1996 and 1997, plaintiff JANE DOE was a minor. During that time period, plaintiff JANE DOE, was a member of the religious group commonly known as the Jehovah's Witnesses, and attended, participated in, and was a member of the Jehovah's Witness religious facility located in the City of Fremont, and owned, managed, operated, supervised, and staffed by defendants WATCHTOWER NY, WATCHTOWER PA, GBJW, KHJW, JWP, and each of them. During that same time period, defendant JONATHAN KENDRICK was a volunteer, active member, and participant in the congregation and congregation leadership of the religious facility in Fremont. During that time period, defendant KENDRICK sexually molested and abused plaintiff JANE DOE on multiple occasions within the County of Alameda. Defendant KENDRICK accomplished the sexual abuse and molestation of plaintiff by use of the trust, position, and authority he held as a fellow member, volunteer, and leader of the religious facility and congregation in Fremont.

7. At all times herein, defendants WATCHTOWER NY, WATCHTOWER PA, GBJW, KHJW, JWP, and each of them, negligently supervised, managed, and controlled defendant KENDRICK in his membership and participation in the Fremont religious facility, and negligently failed to warn plaintiff JANE DOE, her family, and other members of the congregation, of the propensity and risk that defendant KENDRICK would sexually molest or abuse minor girls, a propensity and history of which defendants, and each of them, acting through their employees, agents, and volunteers, had actual notice. During the same time period, defendants, and each of them, were negligent in failing to exercise reasonable care to protect plaintiff JANE DOE, and other minors, who were members of, or participants in, activities at the religious facility in Fremont, from the risk of sexual abuse or molestation by perpetrators, including defendant JONATHAN KENDRICK.

8. As a result of the negligence of defendants, and each them, as herein alleged, plaintiff JANE DOE was caused to suffer the physical, mental, and emotional injuries of childhood sexual abuse and molestation; was caused to incur medical and other expenses for care, treatment, and counseling; and has suffered loss of earnings and earning capacity. Plaintiff will further continue to incur all such damages in the future, in amounts of which plaintiff will advise defendants at least sixty days prior to trial.

SECOND CAUSE OF ACTION
Willful and Intentional Acts
(As to Defendant Jonathan Kendrick Only)

9. Plaintiff realleges each and every allegation contained in paragraphs 1 through 8 as though fully set forth herein.

10. During the time period stated herein, defendant JONATHAN KENDRICK intentionally, willfully, and maliciously sexually abused and molested plaintiff JANE DOE during the time that she was a minor.

11. As a result of the intentional, willful conduct of defendant JONATHAN KENDRICK, as set forth herein, plaintiff has incurred, and will continue to incur the damages as set forth in paragraph 8 of this Complaint.

WHEREFORE, plaintiff prays for relief as follows:

1. For compensatory damages, including economic and non-economic, according to proof in amounts of which plaintiff will advise defendants at least 60 days prior to trial;

2. For costs of suit incurred herein; and

3. For such further relief as the Court deems just and proper.

MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN SUPPORT OF CHURCH DEFENDANTS' DEMURRER TO PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT

JUDGE: ROBERT MCGUINESS
DEPT.: 22
DATE: TIME:

TRIAL DATE: Not yet set

Defendants WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., WATCH TOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF PENNSYLVANIA, INC., JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES ON PERALTA BLVD., FREMONT, and KINGDOM HALL OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES,[1] by and through the undersigned counsel, submit this Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support of Church Defendants' Demurrer to Plaintiff's Complaint.

[1] This appearance is not made on behalf of JONATHAN KENDRICK, the individual named in the Complaint. Additionally, this appearance is not made on behalf of the entity described by the Plaintiff as "THE GOVERNING BODY OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES, an unincorporated association" because this entity has not yet been served with a copy of the Summons and Complaint in this matter.

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT

The Plaintiff's Complaint For Damages For Childhood Sexual Abuse (hereinafter "Complaint") is four pages long and contains two causes of action. In it, the Plaintiff is described as a 26-year-old female and resident of Los Angeles County, California. Complaint ¶1. The Defendants appearing in this motion include the two corporations, WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., WATCH TOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF PENNSYLVANIA, INC., as well as two other entities described as JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES ON PERALTA BLVD., FREMONT, and KINGDOM HALL OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES (collectively "Church Defendants"). Complaint ¶¶ 2, 4.

The lone cause of action against the Church Defendants is one for negligence that allegedly occurred in 1996 and 1997. In paragraph six, the Plaintiff is described as a minor who was a "member of the religious group commonly known as Jehovah's Witnesses, and attended, participated in, and was a member of the Jehovah's Witness religious facility located in the City of Fremont." Complaint ¶ 6. The individual defendant, JONATHAN KENDRICK (hereinafter "KENDRICK"), is described as a "volunteer, active member, and participant in the congregation and congregation leadership of the religious facility in Fremont." Id. He is also described as a "fellow member, volunteer, and leader of the religious facility and congregation in Fremont." Id.

The Church Defendants are alleged to have: (1) "negligently failed to warn" and/or fail to "exercise reasonable care to protect" Plaintiff Doe and others from the alleged criminal acts of Defendant KENDRICK; and (2) negligently supervised, managed, and controlled defendant KENDRICK "in his membership and participation in the Freemont religious facility." Complaint ¶ 7. Finally, as a result of the alleged negligence of the Church Defendants, Plaintiff Doe is said to have suffered physical and emotional damages. Complaint ¶ 8.

DEMURRER STANDARD

For the purposes of a demurrer, "the rule is that we accept as true all the material allegations of the complaint." Shoemaker v. Myers (1990) 52 Cal.3d 1, 7, 276 Cal.Rptr. 303, 305. The Court thus treats the demurrer as admitting all material facts properly pleaded, but not contentions, deductions, or conclusions of fact or law. Demurrers do not test the truth of a plaintiff's allegations or the accuracy with which they describe a defendant's alleged conduct. E.g., Baltins v. James (1995) 36 Cal.App.4th 1193, 1196-97, 42 Cal.Rptr.2d 896, 898.

ARGUMENT

I. Plaintiffs' Allegations Concerning Negligence Are Ambiguous And Subject To Demurrer Under Code Of Civil Procedure § 430.10(f)

The only claim alleged in the Complaint against the Church Defendants is one for "negligence." However, this cause of action, only three paragraphs long, is ambiguous as pled and subject to special demurrer under Civil Procedure Code § 430.10(f).

In Ankeny v. Lockheed Missiles and Space Co. (1979) 88 Cal.App.3d 531, 151 Cal.Rptr. 828, the Court of Appeal noted that the plaintiff's complaint was uncertain and alleged conclusions of law as opposed to facts. "It is settled law that a pleading must allege facts and not conclusions, and that material facts must be alleged directly and not by way of recital." Id. at 537, 151 Cal.Rptr. at 832 (emphasis added). These "essential facts upon which a determination of the controversy depends should be stated with clearness and precision so that nothing is left to surmise." Id. (emphasis added). Otherwise, "[t]hose recitals, references to, or allegations of material which are left to surmise are subject to special demurrer for uncertainty." Id.

As set forth more fully below, the Plaintiff has not alleged sufficient facts to show that either: 1) a "special relationship" existed between herself and the Church Defendants that would give rise to a duty to warn or aid; or that 2) an agency relationship existed between Defendant

KENDRICK and the Church Defendants. Thus, this Court should grant the Church Defendants' special demurrer on the negligence cause of action because the Complaint is vague and ambiguous and subject to demurrer under Code Of Civil Procedure § 430.10(f).

II. There Is No Legal Duty To Aid A Third Party Absent A "Special Relationship" Showing Custody Or Control.

A tort involves the violation of a legal duty, imposed by statute, contract or otherwise, owed by the defendant to the person injured. Romero v. Superior Court (2001) 89 Cal.App. 4th 1068, 1078, 107 Cal.Rptr.2d 801, 808. If a legal duty does not exist, "any injury is 'damnum absque injuria'— injury without wrong." 5 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (10th ed. 2005) Torts, § 6, p. 48; Romero, supra. Because the existence of a duty is an essential element of a tort claim and thus a necessary precondition for liability, the first determination a court must make when examining a negligence claim is whether a legal duty exists. Hooks v. Southern Ca. Permanente MedicalGroup (1980) 107 Ca1.App.3d 435, 443, 165 Cal.Rptr. 741, 745.

It is axiomatic that a person does not have a legal duty to come to the aid of another. RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS (1965) § 314. This is true irrespective of the gravity of the danger to which the other is subjected and the insignificance of the trouble, effort or expense of giving aid or protection. Id., § 314 comment c. "A determination that as a matter of law no duty is owed to the Plaintiff is particularly common in situations in which the defendant's responsibility for the activities of third parties is involved." Hooks, 107 Ca1.App.3d at 443, 165 Cal.Rptr. at 745. However, this general "no duty" rule is subject to an exception in certain situations where a "special relationship" exists between the parties. Id., § 314A.

California courts have long adhered to these "no duty to aid" principles. As the Court of Appeal noted, "'[a] person is ordinarily not liable for the actions of another and is under no duty to protect another from harm in the absence of a special relationship of custody or control.'" Romero, 89 Cal.App.4th at 1078-79, 107 Cal.Rptr.2d at 808 (emphasis in original) (citations omitted); see also Garcia v. Superior Court (1990) 50 Cal.3d 728, 734, 268 Cal.Rptr. 779, 782

("A special relationship is a prerequisite for liability based on a defendant's failure to act.") (emphasis in original). Furthermore, "[a]bsent a 'special relationship,' one cannot be held liable for mere nonfeasance, such as not protecting another from a criminal attack by a third party." Eric J. v. Betty M. (1999) 76 Cal.App.4th 715, 727, 90 Cal.Rptr.2d 549, 558.

In one recent case, the Court of Appeal considered whether a "special relationship" existed between a priest and a sexual abuse victim. Richelle L. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop (2003) 106 Cal.App.4th 257, 130 Cal.Rptr.2d 601. The court concluded that a "special relationship" did not exist, and affirmed the dismissal of the negligence claims against the priest and the supervising Archdiocese. The court reasoned that the priest "cannot be liable to appellant [the victim] for breach arising out of a duty arising out of a special relationship" because it would be the equivalent to a prohibited clergy malpractice claim. Id. at 270, 130 Cal.Rptr.2d at 609. Therefore, unlike physician/patient or attorney/client relationships, the Court determined that a church and its ministers did not have "special relationships" with their parishioners.

III. Plaintiff Has Not Alleged Sufficient Facts To Show That A "Special Relationship" Existed Between Herself And The Church Defendants.

In order to survive a special demurrer, Plaintiff's negligence claim must allege some facts or other circumstances sufficient to show that a "special relationship" existed between herself and the local and national Church Defendants. However, the Complaint only alleges that Plaintiff Doe was "a member of the religious group commonly known as Jehovah's Witnesses, and attended, participated in, and was a member of the Jehovah's Witness religious facility located in the City of Fremont." Complaint, ¶ 6 (emphasis added). Therefore, Plaintiff Doe was only alleged to be a "member" and/or a "participant" with one of the local Church Defendants.

This conclusory allegation is not sufficient to establish a "special relationship" between the Plaintiff and the local Church Defendant(s), let alone between the Plaintiff and the national Church Defendants. This is not a church daycare setting. This is not a situation where the minor was entrusted to the Church Defendants on a field trip. The Plaintiff is alleged to be simply a member who attended religious services with, presumably, her parents, although the Complaint is silent on that issue as well. The Complaint does not state where the minor's parents may have been when the abuse allegedly took place, or how the minor ended up with Defendant KENDRICK. In fact, there are no facts alleged about where, when, or how the abuse took place aside from the fact that it took place "on various occasions within the County of Alameda." Complaint, ¶ 6.

Using the standard set forth by the Plaintiff, every church, temple, or other religious institution forms a "special relationship" with the minors who may "attend" or "participate" in their religious services. This would be a wholesale expansion of the "special relationship" doctrine and eviscerate the "no duty to aid" rule found in the common law and California law. The nature of the relationship between the Plaintiff and the Church Defendants is one of the fundamental issues in this litigation. The Plaintiff cannot simply 'leave these essential facts to surmise' and ask the Court to guess at the nature of the relationship between herself and the Church Defendants. Ankeny, 88 Cal.App.3d at 537, 151 Cal.Rptr. at 832..

Because Plaintiff's allegations concerning negligence have left out material facts, such as the basis of the alleged "special relationship" with the Church Defendants, Plaintiff's cause of action for negligence is subject to a special demurrer under Civil Procedure Code § 430.10(f).

IV. Plaintiff Has Not Alleged Sufficient Facts to Show that Defendant KENDRICK Was An Agent Of The Church Defendants.

In order for the Church Defendants to have been responsible for negligently 'supervising, managing, and or controlling' Defendant KENDRICK, there must have existed an agency relationship between Church Defendants and Defendant KENDRICK at the time of the abuse. See e.g. Warfield v. Summerville Senior Living, Inc., 158 Cal.App.4th 443, 69 Cal.Rptr.3d 783 (2007) (holding that the formation of an agency relationship is a bilateral matter, and words or conduct by both principal and agent are necessary to create the relationship.).

However, there is no allegation of agency contained within the Complaint. The Complaint only notes that KENDRICK was a "fellow member, volunteer, and leader of the religious facility and congregation in is Fremont." Complaint, ¶ 6. The Church Defendants are alleged to have "negligently supervised, managed, and controlled Defendant KENDRICK in his membership and participation in the Fremont religious facility." Id. Thus, according to the Complaint, Defendant KENDRICK appears to have only been a fellow member of the congregation at the time of the alleged abuse, not an agent or employee of the church. Also, he is not alleged to have occupied any clerical position such as a priest, minister, or pastor. Furthermore, KENDRICK is not alleged to have been assigned any responsibilities to care for or supervise children, including, but not limited to, Plaintiff Doe.

If the Plaintiff is contending that a church, temple or other religious institution has a duty to protect one member of the congregation from sexual abuse committed by another member, this would be a novel cause of action in California – and one that has been rejected elsewhere. Cf. Meyer et al. v. Lindala et al., 675 N.W.2d 635, 640 (Minn. App. 2004) (holding that "special relationship" did not exist between victims and congregation, and thus congregation did not have affirmative duty to protect victims from abuse committed by another member); Bryan R. v. Watchtower et al., 738 A.2d 839, 843 (Me. 1999) (holding no fiduciary duty existed between congregation and member who was a victim of sexual abuse, where perpetrator was not an agent or employee of the church, and simply another member in congregation).

Because Plaintiff's allegations concerning negligent supervision, management, and control of Defendant KENDRICK leave out material facts, such as the description of his relationship with the Church Defendants, Plaintiff's cause of action for negligence on these issues is also subject to a special demurrer under Civil Procedure Code § 430.10(f).

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, this Court should grant Church Defendants' demurrer on Plaintiff's negligence cause of action.

COUNTY OF ALAMEDA

JANE DOE,

Plaintiff,

vs.

THE WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC, a corporation; THE WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF PENNSYLVANIA, a corporation; THE GOVERNING BODY OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES, an unincorporated association; JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES ON PERALTA BLVD. FREMONT, an entity; KINGDOM HALL OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES, a corporation; JONATHAN KENDRICK, an individual; and ROES 1 to 10, Defendants.

Case No.: HG11558324

DEFENDANTS' ANSWER TO PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT

Defendants The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc, and The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania, and the North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Freemont California erroneously sued as Jehovah's Witnesses on Peralta Blvd. Fremont, an entity, Kingdom Hall of Jehovah's Witnesses, a corporation (collectively hereinafter "Church Defendants") answer the complaint of plaintiff and admit, deny, and allege as follows:

Church Defendants generally deny each and every allegation of Paragraphs 1-9 of plaintiff's complaint pursuant to California Code of Civil Procedure § 431.30, deny having knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations of paragraphs 10 and 11 of plaintiff's complaint, and specifically deny that plaintiff is entitled to any damages from the Church Defendants. The Church Defendants also specifically deny that "Jehovah's Witnesses on Peralta Boulevard, Fremont" and "Kingdom Hall of Jehovah's Witnesses, a corporation, are existing legal entities. This answer to plaintiff's complaint is filed without prejudice to these answering Church Defendants' right to file an amended answer, including additional affirmative defenses and/or cross-complaints, after conducting further investigation and discovery.

For their separate and distinct affirmative defenses, Church Defendants allege as follows:

FIRST AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(First Amendment)

The complaint, and each cause of action thereof, is barred by the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution and/or Article 1, §4 of the California Constitution.

SECOND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(Constitutional Proscriptions)

The complaint, and each cause of action thereof, characterizes church hierarchy, doctrine, policy, and practices to establish a foundational basis for liability in violation of federal and state constitutional proscriptions.

THIRD AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(Failure to State a Claim)

The complaint, and each cause of action thereof, fails to state facts sufficient to constitute causes of action against each of these answering Church Defendants.

FOURTH AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(Statute of Limitations)

The complaint, and each cause of action thereof, is barred by the applicable statute of limitations set forth in California Code of Civil Procedure, including without limitation sections 335.1, 338, 340, 340.1, 340.3, 340.35, and 343.

FIFTH AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(Laches)

Plaintiff has unreasonably delayed in bringing this action to the prejudice of each of these answering Church Defendants and is therefore barred from bringing the action by the doctrine of laches.

SIXTH AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(Mitigation of Damages)

To the extent that plaintiff failed or neglected to use reasonable care to minimize and mitigate her claimed losses, injuries, and damages, if there are any, plaintiff's damages, if any, are barred or subject to reduction.

SEVENTH AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(Failure to Provide Notice)

Plaintiff failed to give appropriate or timely notices required to bring her claims.

EIGHTH AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(Waiver and/or Estoppel)

By her own conduct, plaintiff has waived and/or is estopped from pursuing the claims alleged in their complaint.

NINTH AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(Third Parties)

The acts or omissions of third parties, individuals, or entities for which Church Defendants have no responsibility, either directly or indirectly, whether or not presently named parties to this action, were the sole, intervening, or contributing cause of the plaintiff's claimed damages, if there are any. Such acts or omissions bar and/or proportionately reduce recovery, if any, by plaintiff against the Church Defendants.

TENTH AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(Superseding Acts)

The alleged acts or omissions, if any, of Church Defendants were not a substantial factor in bringing about plaintiff's claimed damages, if there are any, and thereafter were not a contributing cause thereof, but were superseded by the acts or omissions of other persons and/or entities, which were independent, intervening, and proximate causes of any damages suffered by plaintiff.

ELEVENTH AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(No Legal Duty)

None of the Church Defendants owed plaintiff an actionable legal duty of care necessary to support the causes of action alleged in the complaint.

TWELFTH AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(Lack of Personal Jurisdiction)

Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania lacks the contacts with California necessary for this Court to constitutionally exercise personal jurisdiction over it.

WHEREFORE, Church Defendants each pray for judgment as follows:

1. That plaintiff takes nothing from the Church Defendants by her complaint;
2. That Church Defendants each be dismissed with prejudice, with an award of costs; and
3. That Church Defendants each be awarded such other and further relief as the court deems just and proper.

MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN SUPPORT OF MOTION OF PLAINTIFF JANE DOE TO COMPEL PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS AND FOR SANCTIONS [C.C.P. §2031.310(a)(3) and (h)]

Date:	8/25/11
Time:	3:00 p.m.
Dept:	22
Reservation No:	1196202

STATEMENT OF FACTS

This action involves a complaint for damages for childhood sexual abuse brought by Jane Doe, now an adult, and arises out of sexual abuse by Jonathan Kendrick during the time that Jane Doe was a minor. The sexual abuse is alleged to have been accomplished by Mr. Kendrick "by use of the trust, position, and authority he held as a fellow member, volunteer, and leader of the religious facility and congregation in Fremont." (Complaint, ¶6, 3:11-13). It is alleged that the defendants "negligently supervised, managed, and controlled defendant Kendrick in his membership and participation in the Fremont religious facility, and negligently failed to warn plaintiff Jane Doe, her family, and other members of the congregation, of the propensity and risk that defendant Kendrick would sexually molest or abuse minor girls, a propensity and history of which defendants, and each of them, acting through their employees, agents, and volunteers had actual notice." (Complaint, ¶7, 3:15-21).

Plaintiff served Requests for Production of Documents upon the defendants, seeking records concerning Jonathan Kendrick, plaintiff, and her family. Defendants Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. and the Fremont Congregation each identified five items of correspondence, for which minister communicant privilege was claimed. Each of the five items of correspondence are letters from between elders of the North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Fremont, and the U.S. Service Department of Jehovah's Witnesses – The Watchtower New York Corporation. In addition to the issues of privilege, defendants generally raised objections to production of the correspondence on First Amendment grounds.

Meet and confer attempts were undertaken and unsuccessful. (See Meet and Confer Declaration of R. Simons in Support of Motion). Plaintiff now requests the Court order disclosure, as the clergy penitent privilege does not apply on its face, there is no legitimate First Amendment protective for sexual abuse of children, and any privacy interests of Mr. Kendrick or plaintiff's family are far outweighed by the need for discovery in this matter, and the other objections are without merit.

I. THERE IS NO FIRST AMENDMENT PROTECTION FOR SEXUAL ABUSE OF CHILDREN.

Defendants' First Amendment argument is supported by its citation to Serbian Eastern Orthodox Diocese v. Milivojevich (1976) 426 U.S. 696. That case does not involve issues of discovery regarding sexual abuse of children. ´ However, California courts have exhaustively looked at First Amendment issues where secular matters are concerned. The most complete discussion in this context is found in Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 417, at 430-40. In its thorough discussion of the First Amendment objections raised by Cardinal Mahoney in response to Grand Jury subpoenas, the Court of Appeal exhaustively rejected the applicability of First Amendment protection to a Civil Court inquiry into child molestation. The Court noted such an inquiry "does not involve an internal church dispute over religious authority or dogma" (131 Cal.App.4th at 432). The Court later added "the core issue in the case at bar is whether children were molested by priests who worked for the Archdiocese, an issue having no comparable religious doctrine aspect" (Id., at 435).

Defendants' objection does not cite any authority applying the First Amendment to bar Civil Court inquiry into matters related to childhood sexual abuse.

II. THE CLERGY PENITENT PRIVILEGE IS INAPPLICABLE TO THE DOCUMENTS SOUGHT.

A penitential communication "means a communication made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who, in the course of the discipline or practice of the clergy member's church, denomination, organization, is authorized or accustomed to hear those communications and, under the discipline or tenants of his or her church, denomination, or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret."

The key elements of a penitential communication are no third person is aware, and the duty to keep those communications secret. The party claiming a privilege normally has the burden of showing that the evidence it seeks to suppress is within the terms of the statute (Roman Catholic Archbishop, supra, 131 Cal.App.4th at 441). However, where a clergy penitent privilege is claimed and it is shown that the communication "sought to be disclosed is a communication made in confidence, in the course of the relationship, the applicability of the privilege is presumed and the burden of proof falls on the party challenging the privilege (Evidence Code §917(a)).

In this case, all of the letters sought in discovery are correspondence between elders of the North Congregation of Fremont, and the U.S. Service Department of The Watchtower. Therefore, defendants have not established their initial burden of showing that the communications sought were made in the course of the clergy penitent relationship. On the contrary, each of the five items of correspondence sought are communications by and between elders of the Congregation of Fremont, and U.S. Service Department personnel. The U.S. Service Dept. personnel are all third persons not present at the time of any communication. The privilege does not extend to communications which third parties participate in, or which are known by the penitent to be disclosed in the future to third parties (Doe 2 v. Superior Court, (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 1504, at 1518). No communications that are the subject of this motion are even identified as communications by and between any clergy and penitent, and all are communications involving third persons.

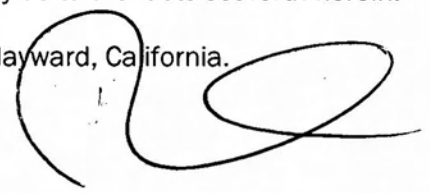
6. Defendants New York and Congregation's responses to the request for production of documents identified five documents for which privilege was claimed. These documents were all letters received by elders in the U.S. Service Department, from the North Congregation Elders and Circuit Overseer. The response to Request No. 5 of the production of documents identifies three of the letters, concerning Mr. Kendrick, and dates February 9, 1992; December 3, 1993; and November 15, 1993. Subsequent communications by and between counsel advised this declarant that a redacted copy of the February 9, 1992, letter would be produced, but it has not been produced as of the time of the filing of this Motion. Letters from the Elders of the North Congregation to the U.S. Service Department dated November 5, 1996, and November 7, 2002, were identified in response to Request No. 7, as to plaintiff's family. All of the correspondence was objected to as calling for violation of the minister communicant privilege.



7. Following the receipt of the initial responses to requests for production of documents, plaintiff's counsel sent a written "meet and confer" letter to defense counsel, Mr. McCabe, requesting production of the documents. A true and correct copy of plaintiff's correspondence is attached as Exhibit "4". Thereafter, defendant served amended responses no longer asserting the First Amendment objections, but maintaining the objections as to all of the documents except the February 9, 1992, letter on the grounds of clergy penitent privilege. Counsel for the defendants, Mr. McCabe, advised me by telephone message and correspondence that the privilege could not be waived and, in his view, remained applicable. A true and correct copy of Mr. McCabe's correspondence of July 8, 2011, is attached as Exhibit "5". The parties are unable to resolve this issue because of the privilege claim.

8. For the reasons set forth in plaintiff's Separate Statement, it is requested that the Court order the production of the disputed documents, and impose sanctions upon defendants and their counsel for the failure to produce such documents in discovery. This declarant submits that the objections were not reasonable or in good faith, on the grounds that none of the correspondence was a communication between any penitent or parishioner and any minister. All of the correspondence was between elders and officers of the Congregation, and persons at the service center of the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc.'s corporate offices. I have spent two hours in the preparation of this Motion, anticipate spending an additional hour in the review of any opposition and the preparation of a Reply, and in addition spending one half hour for the appearance for oral argument. In addition to the filing fee for this Motion of $40.00, sanctions in the amount of an additional $750.00 for attorney's fees are requested.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct and that I am competent to testify as to the facts set forth herein.

Executed this 18th day of July, 2011, at Hayward, California.

Dear Brothers:

After careful and prayerful consideration of the requirements for elders and ministerial servants as set out in God's Word, we submit the following recommendations for NEW appointments. To the best of our knowledge, the brothers recommended meet all the requirements set out in the Bible for the positions indicated. These brothers regularly participate in proclaiming the good news to others. (Matt. 24:14; Rom. 10:10)

ELDERS

	First name	Last name	Age	Date of Baptism	An't'd (A) or "other sheep" (O)	E or MS	If he has ever served as an elder (E) or ministerial servant (MS) state which and give name of last congregation. Also mention when all restrictions were removed and whether they have gained the respect of the congregation. If any elders have reservations about recommending a brother, state this and the reason. If you recommend the appointment of a brother previously removed as an elder or ministerial servant, provide complete information on his progress since being removed, mentioning the date of his removal and the reason why he was removed. Please see The Watchtower of March 15, 1983, page 29, regarding individuals who entered into an adulterous marriage.

* For any not recommended by previous congregation, please attach a copy of their letter to this form showing why not recommended. State how long the person has been with your congregation and why you recommend him.

DELETIONS

It is recommended that the following brothers be deleted from the list of appointed elders and ministerial servants, as indicated, for the reasons stated. If reason for deletion is other than moving, death, disassociation or disfellowshipping, etc., supply complete information below or in supplementary letter as to Scriptural reasons for recommending removal. Also state whether elders discussed matter with individual and if he agrees he no longer qualifies Scripturally to serve. If he does not and wishes to express himself, please attach his letter to this form.

Re: Doe v. Watchtower, et al.

Dear Mr. McCabe:

Thank you for the Supplemental Responses to discovery you recently provided. The sole remaining issues now are limited to 2 issues. The first is the 2 letters dated December 3, 1993, and November 15, 1993 relevant to Mr. Kendrick, and identified in the privilege log of NY's responses to document request, number 5. The second is the redacted February 9, 1992 letter identified as produced in that same response, but not attached to the production I received. The last issue is the 3 letters regarding the Conti family identified in the privilege log provided as part of Response 7. As I previously stated, I do not see that these letters are subject to the clergy-penitent privilege as defined in Evidence Code 1032.

Since a motion to compel production of these materials is due July 19, I must ask you to let me know immediately if the objection will not be withdrawn and the 5 letters produced.

Thank you for your professional cooperation in this matter.

Very truly yours,

Re: Doe v. Watchtower, et. al.

Dear Mr. Simons:

I left a voice mail with your office today. I understand that you are in depositions for the day. I have reviewed your July 5, 2011 letter and must respectfully disagree with your view of the withheld documents. The privilege we are debating is two fold and belongs to the minister and the communicant. Documents relating to other Conti family members are privileged in my view as are the documents relating to Mr. Kendrick himself. I have been away from the office all week and will track down the redacted February 9, 1992 letter that indicate was not attached to our response and provide it to you by Monday July 11, 2011.

If you need additional time to file your motion to compel I will cooperate with you for this purpose. Thank you for your continued courtesy and cooperation in this matter.

Very truly yours,

James M. McCabe

I. REQUEST NO. 5 FOR PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENT TO DEFENDANT WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY, INC.

(a) REQUEST: Any and all files, records, correspondence, disciplinary or investigatory records, photographs, memorandum, notes, emails, or other documentary, tangible, or electronically created or stored information of any kind, under the control of or possessed by this responding defendant, concerning Jonathan Kendrick, date of birth: January 31, 1954, including but not limited to, any such information evidencing his participation in any Jehovah's Witnesses institutions or activities at or arising from the Jehovah's Witnesses on Peralta Blvd., Fremont, or any Kingdom Hall or Jehovah's Witnesses organization in Oakdale, Stanislaus County, California.

(b) AMENDED RESPONSE: This Defendant objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents protected from discovery by the minister-communicant privilege. California Evidence Code §1034. In addition, this Defendant objects to this request as vague and ambiguous. Further, this Defendant objects to this request to the extent that it overbroad as to time since the relevant time period in this complaint ended in 1997. Finally, this Defendant objects to this request to the extent that it seeks information that would invade the privacy of persons who are not parties to this litigation.

Subject to and without waiving the above objections, this Defendant attaches the following documents:

1. Letter received by elders in U.S. Service Department on February 9, 1992, from the North Congregation, Fremont, California elders and the circuit overseer. (Redacted to remove information protected by the minister-communicant privilege related to the appointment or deletion of elders and ministerial servants that had nothing to do with Jonathan Kendrick or any alleged incident(s) between Jonathan Kendrick and plaintiff.)

Privilege log: The following documents responsive to this request are not produced based on the minister-communicant privilege, California Evidence Code §1034.

1. December 3, 1993, letter from elders in the U.S. Service Department to elders in the North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Fremont, California (2 pages).
2. November 15, 1993, letter from elders in the North Congregation, Fremont, California, to elders in the U.S. Service Department (2 pages).

(c) ARGUMENT:

1. Claim of Privilege:

A "penitential communication" "means a communication made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who...has a duty to keep those communications secret." All three items of correspondence at issue are communications between elders in the "U.S. Service Department" and elders in the "North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Fremont." The existence of the communications evidences that the correspondence does not include communications which any clergy member had "a duty to keep those communications secret." In fact, the communications are not communications between Mr. Kendrick and any clergy member at all, but rather communications between members of the defendants' organizations.

2. Vague and Ambiguous:

The request is neither vague nor ambiguous as it specifically sets forth in the request what specific information is requested – information evidencing Jonathan Kendrick's participation in Jehovah's Witnesses institutions or activities.

3. Overbroad:

The objection of overbroad because information subsequent to 1997 is sought is of no relevance, as all three items of correspondence are prior to 1997.

4. Privacy:

Defendants' claim of the right of privacy is inapplicable to this case. None of the documents are "Personal records" requiring notice to a consumer before production, as defined in C.C.P. section 1985.3(a). To establish a third party's privacy interest to shield information from civil discovery, the party claiming the privacy must establish 3 elements (Alch v. Superior Court (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 1412, at 1423-4). These are 1) A well established social norm recognizing the need to maintain the privacy of the information; 2) A reasonable expectation of privacy on the part of the third party; and 3) That the invasion of the privacy is a substantial and serious one. (Ibid.)

Mr. Kendrick's records of work and participation in the Congregation are hardly "private." He was not a secret agent, but an established appointee of the elders to a position of leadership and trust as Ministerial Servant" (Simons Dec., Ex. 3). If a person in such a position is a threat to children's safety, and that information came to an Elder or other official of the Congregation through some source other than the abuser Mr. Kendrick himself, it does not qualify as a "private" matter for which Mr. Kendrick can state a claim of privacy.

II. REQUEST NO. 7 FOR PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENT TO DEFENDANT WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY, INC.

(a) REQUEST: Any and all records, files, photographs, or other information, documents, or tangible materials of any kind, concerning Candace Conti, her mother Kathleen Conti, or any present or past member of her immediate family.

(b) AMENDED RESPONSE: This Defendant objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents protected from discovery by the minister-communicant privilege, California Evidence Code §1034.

In addition, this Defendant objects to this request to the extent that it overbroad as to time since the relevant time period in this complaint ended in 1997. Finally, this Defendant objects to this request to the extent that it seeks information that would invade the privacy of persons not party to this litigation.

Privilege log: The following documents responsive to this request are not produced based on the minister-communicant privilege, California Evidence Code §1034.

3. Letter from elders on the North Congregation, Fremont, California Judicial Committee to elders in the U.S. Service Department (date-stamped as received on November 7, 2002), involving a Non-Party to this action.
4. Letter from the elders on the North Congregation, Fremont, California Judicial Committee to elders in the U.S. Service Department (date-stamped as received on November 5, 1996), involving a Non-Party to this action.

(c) ARGUMENT:

1. Claim of Privilege:

The penitent clergy privilege only extends to communications made in confidence by a penitent, to a member of the clergy, who has a duty to keep those communications secret. (Evidence Code §1032). The correspondence of 1996 and 2002 are not communications between a penitent and any clergy member, but correspondence between elders of the North Congregation and the U.S. Service Department.

2. Vague and Ambiguous:

The request is neither vague nor ambiguous as to the specific correspondence identified, and this objection is of no consequence.

3. Overbroad:

Information concerning plaintiff, including information obtained after her molestation in 1997, is relevant to the action. Similarly, information concerning plaintiff's family members is relevant to issues of damages, since defendant may argue that plaintiff's long term and current emotional and mental health issues are related to family dysfunction rather than her sexual molestation by Mr. Kendrick. Therefore, the time period is not overbroad in the context of this specific request.

4. Privacy:

Defendants' claim of the right of privacy is inapplicable to this case. None of the documents are "Personal records" requiring notice to a consumer before production, as defined in C.C.P. section 1985.3(a). To establish a third party's privacy interest to shield information from civil discovery, the party claiming the privacy must establish 3 elements (Alch v. Superior Court (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 1412, at 1423-4). These are 1) A well established social norm recognizing the need to maintain the privacy of the information; 2) A reasonable expectation of privacy on the part of the third party; and 3) That the invasion of the privacy is a substantial and serious one. (Ibid.)

Conti family information or records could not reasonably be expected to be private from a family member like Plaintiff, since they were openly shared with a third person at the Congregation. Family history, such as the Dissolution of the Conti marriage, is in large part public court record. No basis for any privacy interest is established by the description of the documents.

III. REQUEST NO. 5 FOR PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENT TO DEFENDANT JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES OF PERALTA BLVD., FREMONT.

(a) REQUEST: Any and all files, records, correspondence, disciplinary or investigatory records, photographs, memorandum, notes, emails, or other documentary, tangible, or electronically created or stored information of any kind, under the control of or possessed by this responding defendant, concerning Jonathan Kendrick, date of birth: January 31, 1954, including but not limited to, any such information evidencing his participation in any Jehovah's Witnesses institutions or activities at or arising from the Jehovah's Witnesses on Peralta Blvd., Fremont, or any Kingdom Hall or Jehovah's Witnesses organization in Oakdale, Stanislaus County, California.

(b) RESPONSE: This Defendant objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents protected from discovery by the minister-communicant privilege. In addition, this Defendant objects to this request to the extent that it requests documents related to religious faith, custom or law, or to internal church organization which are protected from discovery by the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution and it's Florida analog, which bar civil court inquiry into such matters. See, Serbian Eastern Orthodox Diocese v. Milivojevich (1976) 426 U.S. 696. Further, this Defendant objects to this request to the extent that it overbroad as to time since the relevant time period in this complaint ended in 1997. Finally, this Defendant objects to this request to the extent that it seeks information that would invade the privacy of persons who are not parties to this litigation.

Privilege log: The following documents responsive to this request are not produced based on objections noted above, and more specifically based on the First Amendment and its California analog, the minister-communicant privilege, California Evidence Code §1030, and §1033.

1. December 3, 1993, letter from elders to the U.S. Service Department to elders in the North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Fremont, California (2 Pages).
2. November 15, 1993, letter from elders in the North Congregation, Fremont, California, to elders in the U.S. Service Department (2 Pages).

(c) ARGUMENT:

1. First Amendment:

Cases involving whether or not a child was molested by an individual who worked for or was a volunteer in a position of leadership with a religious institution have no religious doctrine aspect, and discovery of information concerning sexual molestation of minors in a religious institution violates no First Amendment prohibition as to either the establishment clause or the free exercise clause of the First Amendment. (Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 417, 430-440).

2. Claim of Privilege:

A "penitential communication" "means a communication made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who...has a duty to keep those communications secret." All three items of correspondence at issue are communications between elders in the "U.S. Service Department" and elders in the "North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Fremont." IV. REQUEST NO. 7 FOR PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENT TO DEFENDANT JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES OF PERALTA BLVD., FREMONT.

(a) REQUEST: Any and all records, files, photographs, or other information, documents, or tangible materials of any kind, concerning Candace Conti, her mother Kathleen Conti, or any present or past member of her immediate family.

(b) RESPONSE: This Defendant objects to this request to the extent that it seeks documents protected from discovery by the minister-communicant privilege, California Evidence Code §1030, and §1033.

In addition, this Defendant objects to this request to the extent that it requests documents related to religious faith, custom or law, or to internal church organization which are protected from discovery by the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution and it's Florida analog, which bar civil court inquiry into such matters. *See, Serbian Eastern Orthodox Diocese v. 4. Privacy:

Defendants' claim of the right of privacy is inapplicable to this case. None of the documents are "Personal records" requiring notice to a consumer before production, as defined in C.C.P. section 1985.3(a). To establish a third party's privacy interest to shield information from civil discovery, the party claiming the privacy must establish 3 elements (Alch v. Superior Court (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 1412, at 1423-4). These are 1) A well established social norm recognizing the need to maintain the privacy of the information; 2) A reasonable expectation of privacy on the part of the third party; and 3) That the invasion of the privacy is a substantial and serious one. (Ibid.)

Conti family information or records could not reasonably be expected to be private from a family member like Plaintiff, since they were openly shared with a third person at the Congregation. Family history, such as the Dissolution of the Conti marriage, is in large part public court record. No basis for any privacy interest is established by the description of the documents.

III. THERE IS NO RIGHT OF PRIVACY VIOLATION IN THE DISCOVERY REQUEST AT ISSUE

Defendants' claim of the right of privacy is inapplicable to this case. None of the documents are "Personal records" requiring notice to a consumer before production, as defined in C.C.P. section 1985.3(a). To establish a third party's privacy interest to shield information from civil discovery, the party claiming the privacy must establish 3 elements (Alch v. Superior Court (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 1412, at 1423-4). These are 1) A well established social norm recognizing the need to maintain the privacy of the information; 2) A reasonable expectation of privacy on the part of the third party; and 3) That the invasion of the privacy is a substantial and serious one. (Ibid.)

There is no such showing here. Conti family information or records could not reasonably be expected to be private from a family member like Plaintiff, since they were openly shared with a third person at the Congregation. Family history, such as the Dissolution of the Conti marriage, is in large part public court record. No basis for any privacy interest is established by the description of the documents.

Similarly, Mr. Kendrick's records of work and participation in the Congregation are hardly "private." He was not a secret agent, but an established appointee of the elders to a position of leadership and trust as Ministerial Servant" (Simons Dec., Ex. 3). If a person in such a position is a threat to children's safety, and that information came to an Elder or other official of the Congregation through some source other than the abuser Mr. Kendrick himself, it does not qualify as a "private" matter for which Mr. Kendrick can state a claim of privacy. No privacy basis has been established for any of the requested documents.

IV. SANCTIONS ARE APPROPRIATE IN THIS CASE.

The Court has the power to issue an Order compelling further responses to a demand for production of documents where the responding party has posed an objection that is without merit. (C.C.P. §2031.310(a)(3)). The Motion must be accompanied by a Declaration setting forth the specific facts showing good cause for the discovery, and showing efforts to meet and confer. The Declaration of Richard Simons in support of this Motion meets both prongs of this test. Good cause for this discovery is shown because of the relevance of the information sought to both issues of liability and those of damages (Simons Dec., ¶5 p. 2:13-26). Meet and confer efforts were unsuccessful. (Simons Dec., ¶7 p.3:10-20 and Exs.4 & 5).

The Court "shall impose a monetary sanction" against any party who unsuccessfully opposes a Motion to Compel, unless it finds that one subject of the sanction acted with substantial justification or other circumstances making the imposition of the sanction unjust (2031.310(h)). In this case, communications which are clearly not between a clergy and penitent are objected to as clergy penitent privilege, and First Amendment claims are made without any citation or reference to the authorities holding that inquiries into childhood sexual abuse are not in violation of the First Amendment. Plaintiff's counsel has been required to expend both time and filing fees to obtain discovery to which plaintiff is legitimately entitled (See Simons Dec.¶8 p. 3:21-4:8).

I, Richard J. Simons, hereby declare:

1. That I am an attorney at law licensed to practice before all Courts of the State of California and am the attorney for the plaintiff in the above-entitled action.

2. That the complaint in this matter alleges that plaintiff, now an adult under the age of 26, was sexually molested during the time that she was a child by defendant Jonathan Kendrick who was a leader and member of the Jehovah's Witnesses Congregation in Fremont.

3. During the course of initial exchanges of written discovery in this matter, I served upon the defendants Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. and the defendant North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Fremont (erroneously named as Jehovah's Witnesses on Peralta Blvd., Fremont), Demands for Inspection of Documents. True and correct copies of the pertinent requests and proof of service of the Demands for Inspection of Documents on defendant Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. and pertinent Responses are attached as Exhibit "1". True and correct copies of the pertinent requests and proof of service of the Demands for Inspection of Documents on defendant Jehovah's Witnesses on Peralta Blvd., Fremont, and pertinent Responses are attached as Exhibit "2".

4. In response to the requests, certain documents were produced by defendants establishing that Jonathan Kendrick, the perpetrator of the sexual abuse, did serve in the Congregation as an appointed "ministerial servant", a position of official responsibility, and that notice of the appointment was sent to the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. True and correct copies of the documents produced by defendant Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. establishing the appointment of Mr. Kendrick as a ministerial servant as of September 10, 1990, a time period well before the sexual molestation of plaintiff Jane Doe, is attached as Exhibit "3".

5. That the request for production of documents served upon both defendants New York and the Congregation requested files, records, disciplinary and investigative records, or other information concerning Jonathan Kendrick (Request No. 5), including information "evidencing his participation in any Jehovah's Witness institution or activities", and files or documents concerning plaintiff, her mother, and family members (Request No. 7). The information requested is relevant to both liability and damage issues. Information concerning Mr. Kendrick, knowledge of his propensity for sexual abuse of children, the institutional defendants' knowledge of past reports of any reports of sexual abuse of children, the nature and extent of his involvement in the Congregation, and of his involvement with youth, are all relevant as to issues of liability. Information concerning plaintiff, her mother, and other family members, is relevant as to both issues of liability concerning their involvement in and reliance upon the Congregation, and is relevant to issues of damages caused by the sexual abuse of plaintiff, in that defendant will likely point to other "stressors" and family relationship issues as possible causes of emotional distress and mental health damage to plaintiff both as a child and later in life.

INTRODUCTION

The Watchtower New York and the North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Fremont (referred to collectively as "the Church defendants") opposed the Motion to Compel production of written communications between management personnel involving (1) childhood sexual abuse perpetrator Jonathan Kendrick, and (2) plaintiff's family members. The Church defendants raise three issues. First, they claim disclosure should be denied because of the confidentiality of spiritual communications. Secondly, they argue that the statutory clergy/penitent privilege does not apply. Lastly, the Church defendants claim that the privacy rights of non-parties, plaintiff's parents, are a basis to deny discovery.

The so-called "spiritual privilege" is contrary to California law. Defendants' evidentiary showing demonstrates plaintiff's argument that the clergy/penitent privilege is inapplicable. The privacy rights of plaintiff's parents do not prevent discovery under the facts of this case.

I. THERE IS NOT "SPIRITUAL CONFIFENTIALITY" PRIVILEGE FOR SEXUAL ABUSE CLAIMS

Defendants urge the Court to apply a "spiritual confidentiality" privilege that extends "to all confidential communications of a spiritual nature, including those that take place in the course of judicial investigations or committees, or while seeking and providing spiritual counsel and advice. Additionally, based upon Scripture and church tradition, such confidentiality requirements also extend to congregation files, notes, papers, reports, minutes, or other documents prepared in conjunction with, or as a result of, confidential or spiritual communications." (Church Defendants' MPA 5:14-21). In essence, the Church defendants claim that all communications involving childhood sexual abusers within its ranks, and all proceedings concerning the childhood sexual abusers, are strictly confidential because they are "spiritual". No authority is cited to support this proposition. The argument is identical to the argument made by the Roman Catholic Church that, "under the tenants of the Church", communications between managerial personnel regarding childhood sexual abuse by priests must be kept secret. The argument was squarely rejected. (Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 417, at 444-5). Production of all such communications was ordered. (Id., at 445-6).

Evidentiary privileges are available only as defined by statute. (Evidence Code §911; American Airlines, Inc. v. Superior Court (2003) 114 Cal.App.4th 881, 887). As stated by the Court in American Airlines, after a review of multiple decisions over the decades, "Courts may not add to the statutory privileges except as required by State or Federal Constitutional law, nor may courts imply unwritten exceptions to existing statutory privileges." (Ibid).

The Church defendants are attempted to distinguish Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court by claiming it involved Grand Jury proceedings. However, as the opinion aptly demonstrates by its reliance on civil discovery cases, this is a distinction without a difference. The Constitutional and statutory privilege issues presented are identical.

II. THE CHURCH DEFENDANTS' INTERPRETATION OF EVIDENCE CODE PRIVILEGES IS OUTSIDE THE SCOPE OF THE STATUTE.

The Church defendants' argument of privilege is not consistent with the statutory language.

The Church defendants argue that disclosure of penitent communications where the penitent has knowledge that disclosure to other church officials may occur does not constitute disclosure to a "third party", and resulting waiver of the Evidence Code privilege. As held by the Court in Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court, supra, in rejecting this very argument, no third persons means no third persons. (131 Cal.App.4th at 440-441, and Fn.11, and 444-446).

III. THE FIRST AMENDMENT ARGUMENT IS WITHOUT SUPPORT.

As clearly set forth in Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court, supra, there is no First Amendment issue in the protection of children from institutional sexual abuse.

The Church defendants have produced a compendium of foreign cases. None have any applicability to the discovery issue at hand. None of the cases address the secular nature of the issue of protecting children from sexual abuse by adults. None address the discoverability of internal corporate communications regarding a leader involved in sexual abuse of children.

Abington School District v. Schemp (1963) 374 U.S.203 involves the issue of opening the school day with reading from the bible. Employment Division Dept of Human Resources of Oregon v. Smith (1990) 494 U.S. 872, addresses the use of ceremonial peyote. Lemon v. Kurtzman (1971) 403 U.S. 602, addresses state funding of religious schools. NAACP v. Alabama ex rel. Patterson (1958) 357 U.S. 449, addresses the political persecution by the State of Alabama against the NAACP, and a discovery order requiring it to disclose the names and addresses of all members. It is a freedom of association, not establishment, case. Shelley v. Kramer (1948) 334 U.S. 1, addresses racially restrictive covenants on real property. West Virginia Bd. of Educ. v. Barnette (1943) 319 U.S. 624 addresses mandatory American flag salutes in public schools.

IV. THE PRIVACY CONCERNS OF "THIRD PARTIES" ARE NOT SUFFICIENT TO PREVENT DISCOVERY OF PLAINTIFF'S FAMILY RECORDS.

The Church defendants agree that "private information about non-parties" sought in discovery is subject to a "balancing test to evaluate the need for the information sought against the asserted right of privacy." (CD MPA 12:10-15). In this case, the "third persons" are plaintiff's parents. Plaintiff's parents divorced within the same time frame as Jonathan Kendrick was sexually abusing her. The Church defendants will argue that plaintiff's emotional distress and subsequent mental health issues arise from her parental divorce, and not her sexual abuse. Every Church defendant has always made that argument. In addition, the Church defendants will doubtlessly inquire of plaintiff at her upcoming deposition about family history matters, in order to obtain evidence to support this argument.

Given the need for this information for both parties to define and identify damages caused by plaintiff's childhood sexual abuse at the hands of Mr. Kendrick, and the fact that the information sought directly involves plaintiff herself as a child in a family of divorcing parents, the balancing clearly supports plaintiff's rights to this information.

In addition, the nature of the information obtained, particularly as it supports the knowledge of Church Elders of plaintiff's vulnerability to sexual abuse by Mr. Kendrick, and the policies and practices of the Church defendants demonstrated by their treatment of the parents, are relevant to issues of the liability of the Church defendants for failing to fulfill their duty to protect plaintiff and other children from sexual abuse by Mr. Kendrick arising out of church activities.

I. Introduction

This lawsuit arises from the alleged conduct of co-defendant Jonathan Kendrick that occurred in 1996/1997. (See Plaintiffs' Complaint at ¶¶ 6-8) Plaintiff's counsel served his Demand for Inspection of Documents, Things, and/or Places, Set Number One on each of the Watchtower Defendants on April 13, 2011.[1] Plaintiff's document requests include overly broad and irrelevant requests for documents without any time restrictions at all, even though the last alleged abuse occurred in 1997. The Watchtower Defendants responded to those demands by producing numerous documents and providing a privilege log as to four documents. A fifth document was provided to Plaintiff after redacting references to non-parties and information totally unrelated to co-defendant Kendrick. It is unclear from Plaintiff's motion papers whether Plaintiff is seeking the production of the unredacted version of that document. The five documents that are listed in her Notice of Motion as being the subject of Plaintiff's motion to compel are also protected by the penitential privilege and the Watchtower Defendants have provided Plaintiff's counsel a complete privilege log identifying documents by title and the specific objections and privilege that attach thereto.

Two of the documents relate solely to the internal organizational discipline of persons who are not parties to this litigation. Those non-parties have privacy rights which would be violated by the disclosure of those documents. The fifth document has been provided in a redacted form removing only information about non-parties unrelated to this litigation.

[1] Defendants Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. and North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Fremont, California (erroneously sued as the "Jehovah's Witnesses on Peralta Blvd. Fremont" and "Kingdom Hall of Jehovah's Witnesses") referred to herein collectively as "Watchtower Defendants."

II. Statement of Facts

All of the five documents involve spiritual communications with ordained elders and appointed congregation elders (hereinafter referred to as "elders") which are private and confidential communications pursuant to the religious practices, beliefs, tenets and teachings of Jehovah's Witnesses based upon Scripture and tradition. See Exhibit '1' Affidavit of Allen Shuster[2] ¶¶ 8-10, 12-13, 18-22; Exhibit '2'Affidavit of Michael L. Clarke[3] ¶¶ 7-13.

Each congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses is provided with spiritual oversight on a local level by a small group of appointed elders who form the congregation's body of elders. Before elders are appointed, they must meet the strict Scriptural qualifications outlined in the Bible and be recommended and approved by current body of elders, a circuit overseer (i.e. traveling elder), and elders who serve in the Service Department at the Branch Office of Jehovah's Witnesses in New York. Once an individual is approved and appointed to serve as a congregation elder, a letter from the Branch Office is read to the congregation and the individual is officially vested with ministerial authority as an ordained minister and appointed as an elder. All elders of the North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Fremont California (hereinafter "North Congregation") are and were at all times relevant to this case ordained ministers and spiritual leaders of the congregation. See Exhibit '1' Shuster Affidavit ¶¶ 5-7, 11; Exhibit '2' Clarke Affidavit ¶ 5.

Congregation elders are responsible for the spiritual development and spiritual teaching of the members of the congregation, as well as for pastoral care. Elders frequently provide spiritual counsel and advice to members of the congregation concerning highly confidential personal and spiritual matters. For example, congregation elders are authorized to hear confessions and other private, confidential communications and to provide spiritual guidance and spiritual counsel by virtue of the Holy Scriptures and the Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses. According to the religious beliefs and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses, congregation elders are expected to maintain the confidentiality of confessions and other confidential spiritual communications. See Exhibit '1' Shuster Affidavit ¶¶ 8-10, 12; Exhibit '2' Clarke Affidavit ¶¶ 5-10.

[3] Hereinafter "Exhibit '2' Clarke Affidavit."

From time to time, congregation elders, including those in the North Congregation, communicated with elders in the Branch Office in order to receive spiritual counsel and advice as to how to apply the religious doctrine and procedures of Jehovah's Witnesses to issues concerning the congregation and its members. All such spiritual communications between congregation elders and Branch Office elders must be kept strictly confidential under the religious tenets and teachings of Jehovah's Witnesses. See Exhibit '1' Shuster Affidavit ¶¶ 13, 19.

Congregation elders are also responsible for conducting "judicial investigations" or "judicial committees" where a member of the congregation is accused of serious wrongdoing or a sin. The goal of a judicial investigation or judicial committee is to ensure that the congregation remains spiritually and morally clean. In addition, the elders endeavor to provide spiritual counseling and assistance to those who may have erred, with the hope of helping them to regain their spirituality and relationship with God. When the elders on a judicial committee confirm that a congregant has in fact committed a serious sin for which spiritual discipline is required based on Jehovah's Witnesses' understanding of the Bible, the judicial committee will decide what that spiritual discipline should be. Based on the religious beliefs, practices, and procedures of Jehovah's Witnesses, at least two elders are required to conduct a judicial investigation and at least three elders are required for a judicial committee involving a congregant who is alleged to have committed a serious sin. Jehovah's Witnesses believe that men are imperfect and, therefore, three elders can provide more full and complete spiritual counsel and advice based on a broader range of experience and knowledge than can a single elder alone. Pursuant to the beliefs, practices, and procedures of Jehovah's Witnesses, all spiritual communications taking place during a "judicial investigation" or "judicial committee," are considered extremely private and strictly confidential by all present, including the accused congregant and elders. See Exhibit '1' Shuster Affidavit ¶¶ 14-16, 19-21.

Where a serious sin is confirmed by the elders on the judicial committee, the judicial committee may give private or public reproof or disfellowship that congregant, depending on whether the individual is repentant. When a member is subject to public reproof or disfellowshipping, an announcement is made during a congregation meeting simply to the effect that "[name] has been reproved" or "[name] is no longer one of Jehovah's Witnesses." If a congregation member is disfellowshipped, the judicial committee elders forward a notice of disfellowshipping to Branch Office elders for their review to ensure that their decision was spiritually-based and well-founded. The notice of disfellowshipping has the name of the disfellowshipped person, the date of disfellowshipping, and the Scriptural basis for disfellowshipping. See Exhibit '1' Shuster Affidavit ¶¶ 16, 19.

The confidentiality of spiritual communication between congregation members and elders is a foundational element of the religious beliefs and teachings of Jehovah's Witnesses. Jehovah's Witnesses recognize the Bible's admonition to confess one's sins to God and believe that there is a great benefit from speaking to congregation elders regarding such confidential spiritual matters. As such, Jehovah's Witnesses encourage those who need spiritual assistance to approach the congregation elders and convey to them whatever information may be necessary to provide such spiritual assistance. See Exhibit '1' Shuster Affidavit ¶¶ 17-21; Exhibit '2' Clarke Affidavit ¶¶ 6-11.

Since open and free communication between congregation members and elders is required to provide spiritual counsel and advice under the religious beliefs and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses, emphasis is placed on privacy and strict confidentiality. The confidentiality requirements with respect to such spiritual communications are explained in official literature and publications of Jehovah's Witnesses. Congregants expect that all spiritual communications with congregation elders will remain strictly confidential. Further, revealing confidential spiritual communications would call into question an elder's qualifications and could result in his removal as an elder in the congregation. Moreover, if an elder was compelled to disclose confidential information, his credibility and effectiveness as an elder, as well as the credibility and effectiveness of other elders in the congregation, would be adversely affected and compromised, since congregants would not trust and rely upon their belief that personal problems and information they disclose would not be revealed and used against them in a court action. See Exhibit '1' Shuster Affidavit ¶¶ 10, 18-21; Exhibit '2' Clarke Affidavit ¶¶ 7-11.

Jehovah's Witnesses do not believe that the confidentiality of spiritual communications they may have with congregation elders is limited to confessions. Such confidentiality extends to all confidential communications of a spiritual nature, including those that take place in the course of judicial investigations or committees, or while seeking and providing spiritual counsel and advice. Additionally, based upon Scripture and church tradition, such confidentiality requirements also extend to congregation files, notes, papers, reports, minutes or other documents prepared in conjunction with, or as a result of, confidential spiritual communications. Should the disclosure of such documents be compelled, the credibility and effectiveness of those in charge of the spiritual well being of entire congregations will be compromised. See Exhibit '1' Shuster Affidavit ¶¶ 19-22; Exhibit '2' Clarke Affidavit ¶¶ 7, 11-13.

III. Penitential Privilege

The penitential privilege should apply to all five of the documents in question because (1) the drafters meet the definition of "penitent" under Cal. Evid. Code Section 1031; (2) the recipients of the documents meet the definition of "member of the clergy" under Cal. Evid. Code section 1030; (3) the documents are "penitential communications" under Cal. Evid. Code section 1032.

A. California's Penitential Privilege

The documents Plaintiff seeks to compel the Watchtower Defendants to disclose are protected by the penitential privilege set forth in California Evidence Code section 1030, et seq. California Evidence Code section 1033 provides: "Subject to section 912, a penitent, whether or not a party, has a privilege to refuse to, and to prevent another from disclosing, a penitential communication if he claims the privilege." California Evidence Code section 1034 further provides: "Subject to section 912, a clergyman, whether or not a party, has a privilege to refuse to disclose a penitential communication if he claims the privilege." Under California's statutory scheme, a "member of the clergy" is defined as a "priest, minister, religious practitioner, or similar functionary of a church or of a religious denomination or religious organization." California Evidence Code section 1031. Therefore, appointed elders of Jehovah's Witnesses are clearly within this definition of "clergyman."

Furthermore, a "penitent" is defined simply as "a person who has made a penitential communication to a clergyman." California Evidence Code section 1031. In turn, a "penitential communication" is defined as follows:

> As used in this article, 'penitential communication' means a communication made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a clergyman who, in the course of the discipline or practice of his church, denomination, or organization, is authorized or accustomed to hear such communications and, under the discipline or tenants of his church, denomination or organization, has a duty to keep such communication secret.

Under Evidence Code section 1032, there is no requirement that the communication "have as its purpose the confession of a 'flawed act' to 'receive religious consolation and guidance in return' in order to be privileged." Doe 2 v. Superior Court (2005) 132 Cal.App.4th 1504, 1518. Rather, the privilege applies to any communication that fits the statutory description. See Cal. Law Revision Com. com., West's Ann. Evid. Code (2011) foll. § 1032 (statute extends protection of privilege beyond just "confessions"). Consequently, a "penitential communication" is not limited to just confessions in the stereotypical sense of the word. It is any communication that fits the statutory description.

California case law supports the foregoing analysis. The court in People v. Edwards (1988) 203 Cal.App.3d 1358, 1362-63,[4] defined the elements of the rule of privilege.

B. The Withheld Documents Constitute Penitential Communications

The written communications at issue were made in a fashion that requires the rule of privilege to apply. The evidence indicates that the written communications were made by a "penitent" as defined by California Evidence Code section 1031 to an elder or elders of Jehovah's Witnesses (clergy) with a reasonable expectation of privacy under the religious beliefs and tenets of Jehovah's Witnesses. More specifically, each of the documents sought by Plaintiff are communications among elders regarding internal organizational matters relating to the discipline of a congregation member. Each was intended to remain strictly confidential. Each was made to elders, members of the "clergy." (See Exhibit '1' Shuster Affidavit ¶¶ 13-22.) Each elder has a duty under the tenets of the Jehovah's Witness faith to keep such communications secret. As pointed out in the Affidavit of Allen Shuster, the sharing of this information between the elders in Mr. Kendrick's congregation and the elders in the Service Department (headquarters) is part of the spiritual counsel and advice as to the proper application of religious doctrine and procedures. The sharing of that information does not affect the confidentiality of those communications, or destroy the privilege for such "penitential communications." Under these circumstances, Evidence Code section 917 provides that the confidential quality of the communications must be presumed. California Evidence Code section 917 provides that the opponent of the claim of privilege has the burden of proof to establish that the communication was not confidential.

1. There is No Evidence that Penitential Communications Were Made With the Knowledge that they Would be Revealed to Anyone Other than Elders

From time to time, congregation elders communicate with elders serving in the Branch Office's Service Department, as well as with elders serving as circuit overseers, in order to receive spiritual guidance and advice as to how to apply the religious doctrine and procedures of Jehovah's Witnesses to issues concerning the congregation and its members. All such spiritual communications between congregation elders and the Branch Office Service Department or circuit overseer must be kept strictly confidential under the religious tenets and teachings of Jehovah's Witnesses. See Shuster Affidavit ¶¶ 13, 19.

Congregation elders are required by the tenets of their faith to keep confessions and other confidential spiritual communications strictly confidential. Similarly, Jehovah's Witnesses doctrine requires that all confidential spiritual communications between congregation elders and elders serving in the Branch Office's Service Department, as well as with elders serving as circuit overseers, be kept in the strictest confidence. Additionally, confidential spiritual communications taking place during a 'judicial investigation" and during "judicial committee" meetings are considered to be extremely private and elders must keep such confidential spiritual communications strictly confidential. Plaintiff asserts that the penitential privilege does not apply because the elders were required to communicate information it obtained regarding potential cases of child molestation to the Watchtower Society Headquarters. First, this argument does not apply to each document. Second, the elders' communications to the elders in the Service Department does not automatically result in a breach of their duty to keep penitential communications—whether made to an individual elder or a judicial committee—secret and confidential. Rather, the relevant inquiry is (1) what information was communicated in those documents (i.e. did the congregation elders reveal the penitent's actual communications?), and (2) did the penitent know or expect that his confidential communication would be disclosed to the Service Department elders.

With regard to the first question, it is unlikely that the congregation elders in this case revealed the contents of the actual communications they had with Jonathan Kendrick (penitent). Thus, any such communication would not be a waiver under Section 912(a) (a waiver would occur only if the holder of a privilege "has disclosed a significant part of the communication or has consented to disclosure made by anyone"). If the Court finds any legal validity to Plaintiff's arguments, it would then be necessary for the Court to undertake an in camera inspection of the documents in question that relate to Mr. Kendrick to determine whether any confidential communications that the elders may have made to elders serving in the Service Department disclosed "a significant part" of a communication resulting in a waiver. (It should be noted that the other documents listed in the privilege log do not even relate in any way to Mr. Kendrick, but to non-parties.)

With regard to the second question, in Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal. App 4th 417, 445, upon which plaintiff relies, a priest discussed his psychological and sexual problems with the cardinal and an appointed "vicar for clergy." The priest knew that his conversations, along with the documents that were created as a result of the conversations, were routinely shared with the archbishop, the cardinal, the vicar for clergy, as well as other employees of the archdiocese. Although the priest claimed that these communications were privileged under Section 1032, the court held that the privilege was waived because "both parties to the original communication knew it likely would be transmitted to a third person." Id. Importantly, it was noted by that court that disclosure of this confidential information to the bishop and vicar was not required by Catholic tenets or doctrine. Thus, any privilege was waived by the communicant, since he knew the information would not be kept in confidence. In this case, Plaintiff provides no evidence to refute the fact that Jonathan Kendrick expected his communications with his congregation elders to remain strictly confidential. Under the tenets and doctrines of the Jehovah's Witness faith, the communications between Mr. Kendrick and his congregation elders and between his congregation elders and the Branch Office elders were all confidential. In determining whether a penitent's communication to a clergy member qualifies as a penitential communication, courts look to whether the penitent had an expectation of confidentiality at the time of their communication. Doe 2, 132 Cal.App.4th at 1518.

2. A Disclosure That is Privileged Itself Does Not Waive the Privilege

Plaintiff asserts that the penitential privilege was waived when the elders sought the spiritual advice of the elders in the Service Department. Again, a plain reading of Section 912 of the Evidence Codes indicates that such a disclosure does not constitute a waiver.

First, it must be acknowledged that elders (i.e., clergy) may also be penitents under Evidence Code section 1031, when they engage in confidential spiritual communications with other elders. Therefore, any confidential spiritual communications between congregation elders, circuit overseers (i.e., traveling elders), and Branch Office elders in New York for the purpose of obtaining spiritual counsel and advice are also penitential communications under Evidence Code section 1032 and thus protected from disclosure by Evidence Code sections 1033 and 1034.

According to the provisions of Section 912(c), "[a]disclosure that is itself privileged is not a waiver of any privilege." Thus, California recognizes that there will be situations when a privilege holder will have the need to speak to others about matters relating to their privileged communications. And, as long as the privilege holder limits these communications to individuals with whom he also has a privilege, then the privilege is not waived.

Thus, an elder who sought spiritual advice and direction from another elder—no matter where he was physically situated—regarding a privileged communication he received from a penitent, will not be deemed to have been waived the privilege as long as the three requirements of Section 1032 are met. The three requirements are met in this case. See Shuster Affidavit ¶ 19.

IV. Withheld Documents Referred to as 1, 4, and 5 in Plaintiff's Notice of Motion Contain Confidential and Private Information Regarding Individual(s) who are Not a Party to this Lawsuit and are Unrelated to Plaintiff's Claims or Defendant Kendrick

If this court finds that the Watchtower Defendants' objections to production based on the penitential privilege do not apply to some of the documents in question, the Watchtower Defendants submit that Withheld Documents 1, 4 and 5 should not have to be produced because they contain confidential and private information regarding individual(s) who are not a party to this lawsuit. In particular, document 1 (February 9, 1992, letter received by elders in U.S. Service Department from the North Congregation, Fremont, California elders and the circuit overseer), as provided to Plaintiff, redacted only information related to the appointment and/or deletion of person other than Mr. Kendrick. No information relevant to Plaintiff or Mr. Kendrick was redacted. Also, documents 4 (November 7, 2002, letter from the elders on the North Congregation, Fremont, California Judicial Committee to elders in the U.S. Service Department) and 5 (November 5, 1996, letter from the elders on the North Congregation, Fremont, California Judicial Committee to elders in the U.S. Service Department) deal with internal organizational disciplinary action involving family members of Plaintiff. They are totally unrelated to the claims in this action or to Mr. Kendrick. They relate to personal matters of persons who are not parties to this action.

Plaintiff's attorney alleges on this motion that those documents could not reasonably be expected to be private from Plaintiff, who is a family member, since the information was shared with elders. However, Plaintiff's attorney has produced no evidence or affidavits from family members stating that the non-parties mentioned in those documents told Plaintiff everything they told the elders, or that those family members expected or consented to the disclosure of that information to Plaintiff.

Where private information about non-parties is sought, courts will generally perform a balancing test to evaluate the need for the information sought against the asserted right of privacy. "Drawing this ultimate balance requires a careful evaluation of the privacy right asserted, the magnitude of the imposition on that right, and the interests militating for and against any intrusion on privacy." Pioneer Electronics (USA), Inc. v. Superior Court, (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 360, 370, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 513.

In weighing the privacy interests of third parties, courts will also consider "the nature of the information sought, its inherent intrusiveness, and any specific showing of a need for privacy, including any specific harm that disclosure of the information might cause." Schnabel v. Superior Court, (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 704, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 200. For example, the third party may demonstrate that public disclosure of confidential information would embarrass persons not involved in the litigation. Id.

The more sensitive the nature of the personal information that is sought to be discovered, the more substantial the showing of the need for the discovery that will be required before disclosure will be permitted." Tien v. Superior Court, (2006) 139 Cal.App.4th 528, 43 Cal .Rptr.

3d 121. One would hope that the Court would recognize that forcing an individual to reveal that he was sexually abused fits in the realm of 'sensitive.'

With respect to sensitive information, in determining whether disclosure is required, the court must indulge in a "careful balancing" of the right of a civil litigant to discover relevant facts, on the one hand, and the right of the third parties to maintain reasonable privacy regarding their sensitive personal affairs, on the other. Schnabel v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal.4th 704, 712, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 200.

In this case, with respect to disputed documents 1, 4, and 5, the information about non-parties relates to their appointments or deletions from positions in the congregation (document 1) and internal disciplinary matters (documents 4 and 5). Thus, they include very sensitive information that these non-parties have a right to expect will be kept confidential.

It is respectfully submitted that Plaintiff has no right to confidential information about persons, even her family members, who are not parties to this action. To force disclosure of those documents would compel elders (clergy) to violate the confidence placed in them by those non-parties. In addition, these documents will not lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

Even when the state has enough of an interest in discovering the truth in legal proceedings, that it may compel disclosure of confidential material, before a court can make such a determination, it must afford the parties whose privacy rights are at issue an opportunity to present their views. Doe 2, 132 Cal.App.4th 1504.

Finally, if this court eventually finds that despite the privacy interests of individuals who are not a party to this lawsuit these documents must be produced, the Watchtower Defendants request that they be allowed to redact the name(s) and any other identifying information so as to protect the privacy of these individuals who are not parties to this lawsuit.

V. First Amendment

The establishment clause in the First Amendment to the federal constitution provides that, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion...." Among other things, the U.S. Supreme Court has held that this clause prohibits the government's excessive entanglement with religion. See Lemon v. Kurtzman (1971) 403 U.S. 602, 621-24. Under the established clause, every religion is guaranteed the same rights and protections. The U.S. Supreme Court has decisively settled that these protections have been made wholly applicable to the states by the Fourteenth Amendment. Abington School Dist. v. Schemp (1963) 374 U.S. 203, 216; NAACP v. Alabama ex ret Patterson (1958) 357 U.S. 449, 463; West Virginia Bd. of Educ. v. Barnette (1943) 319 U.S. 624, 637. "Judicial action is to be regarded as action of the state for the purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment [and) is not immunized from the operation of the Fourteenth Amendment simply because it is taken pursuant to the state's common law policy." Shelley v. Kramer (1948) 334 U.S. 1, 15, 20.

As explained above, the tenets and religious beliefs of Jehovah's Witnesses doctrine establish the requirement that three or more elders receive and investigate penitent communications regarding allegations of serious transgression or sin. They also require that the Branch Office elders be informed. However, all elders are obligated to keep the information confidential. If this court denies the penitential privilege on the basis of a distinction between Jehovah's Witnesses' pastoral procedures and those of other religions, it would essentially establish "acceptable" religious practices in violation of the federal and state constitutional prohibitions of excessive governmental entanglement with religion.

Additionally, of this Court refused to apply the penitential privilege to the religious practices and doctrines of Jehovah's Witnesses for confidential communications, it would inhibit the free exercise of religion of Jehovah's Witnesses and the Watchtower Defendants in violation of the free exercise clauses of the state and federal constitutions. Only a neutral law of general applicability may burden the right to free exercise of religion. Employment Division Dep't of Human Resources of Oregon v. Smith (1990) 494 U.S. 872, 879-80. California courts also apply the strict scrutiny standard when deciding matters under the free exercise clause of the California Constitution. Catholic Charities of Sacramento, Inc. v. Superior Court (2004) 32 Cal.4th 527, 562.

The decision in Roman Catholic Archbishop is inapplicable because it concerned testimony and evidence to be presented to a grand jury in a criminal proceeding. Disclosure was required in that instance, the court held, "because the government had a compelling interest in prosecuting child molesters." In contrast, this case involves civil actions and not the criminal prosecutions of child molesters.

Here, the government has no compelling interest for granting the penitent-clergy privilege to religions that require a penitent confess to one minister but denying the same privilege to religions that require that a penitent confess to more than one minister. Because there is no compelling state interest for the court's non-neutral judicial interpretation of the rule of privilege, Plaintiffs' arguments must be rejected.

VI. Trial Court Should Conduct an in Camera Inspection

Should this Court look favorably upon Plaintiff's Motion, the Watchtower Defendants alternatively request that this Court inspect each of the requested documents in camera before determining whether or not the privilege should apply as to each document in question. An in camera review by the trial court is appropriate to resolve a dispute as to whether requested documents, which contain privileged information, are discoverable. Lipton v. Superior Court (1996) 48 Cal.App.4th 1599, 1619-20.

VII. There is No Basis for Awarding Sanctions against the Watchtower Defendants

Plaintiff admits that sanctions are only appropriate where the party seeking disclosure has shown good cause and that the objections to that disclosure are totally meritless. In this case, it seems clear that Plaintiff has not shown any good cause for seeking privileged confidential documents relating to non-parties (documents 1, 4, and 5). Plaintiff has not even shown how the production of those documents would lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

In addition, the Watchtower Defendants have shown that there are valid legal arguments against the forced disclosure of each of the five documents sought by Plaintiff. Therefore, it is respectfully submitted that, regardless of the outcome of this motion, Plaintiff's application for sanctions against the Watchtower Defendants should be denied.

VIII. Conclusion

The Watchtower Defendants have attempted in good faith to reasonably respond to all of Plaintiff's requests for documents and information. In the face of overly broad and irrelevant document requests, however, the Watchtower Defendants asserted all appropriate objections and privileges. While Plaintiff is entitled to information reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence (i.e., "relevant" information), Plaintiff is not entitled to obtain documents that are protected from disclosure by the penitential privilege, that are irrelevant, or that invade the privacy of individuals not party to this action.

Therefore, based on the foregoing, the Watchtower Defendants respectfully request that Plaintiffs' application re production of withheld documents be denied.

Case No.: HG11558324

AFFIDAVIT OF ALLEN SHUSTER

I, Allen Shuster, after being duly sworn, depose and state and if called to testify would do so as follows:

1. I am over 18 years of age, of sound mind, and competent to make this Affidavit. I have personal knowledge of the matters contained herein, and they are all true and correct.

2. I reside in Patterson, New York and have served as an elder in the faith of Jehovah's Witnesses since 1979.

3. Since February 1981, I have served in the Service Department at the U.S. Branch Offices of Jehovah's Witnesses in New York. I provide spiritual assistance to congregation elders who call or write the Service Department for help. Prior to March 2001, the spiritual assistance provided by the Service Department, along with the appointment of elders, was communicated to congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses through the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. Since March 2001, this has been communicated through the Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses.

4. My duties in the Service Department also include monitoring the functioning, organization, and staffing of congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses, including reviewing the qualifications for the appointment of elders to congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses in the United States.

QUALIFICATIONS OF ELDERS

5. Jehovah's Witnesses are not automatically appointed to serve as congregation elders. Rather, they must first meet certain qualifications that are outlined in the Bible, as follows: Before a male member of the congregation can be considered for appointment as a congregation elder, he must first be baptized as one of Jehovah's Witnesses. Next the individual must gain further knowledge of the Holy Scriptures and show a willingness to be used in a further way to assist others in the congregation. If he shows such a willingness, he must then meet Scriptural qualifications set out in 1 Timothy 3:8-13. Thereafter, he may qualify and be appointed as a ministerial servant. Although a ministerial servant would not provide spiritual supervision in the congregation, he could be assigned certain tasks to assist the congregation elders as they carry out their duties. After a period of time—perhaps many years—a ministerial servant who has faithfully carried out his assignments and has gained more experience may meet the qualifications of a congregation elder as outlined in 1 Timothy 3:1-7 and Titus 1:6-9.

When this occurs, the congregation body of elders will make this recommendation to the circuit overseer (a representative of the Branch office who is also an experienced elder). If the circuit overseer agrees with the recommendation, it will then be forwarded to the Branch office's Service Department. Approved elders in the Service Department will then review the recommendation in accord with the guidelines outlined in the Holy Scriptures, adopted by the Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses. The Branch office will then inform the local congregation's body of elders, in writing, of their determination with regards the recommendation.

6. If an individual is appointed to serve as a congregation elder, the letter of appointment from the Branch office is read to the congregation. It is at this time that he is officially vested with ministerial authority. In other words, he is appointed as a congregation elder.

7. Jehovah's Witnesses who serve as appointed elders are recognized as ordained ministers and congregation elders.

8. Like Jesus and his apostles, congregation elders do not receive a salary for their ministerial work. Nonetheless, as ordained ministers and congregation elders, they are responsible for providing spiritual supervision to the congregations, which includes hearing confessions and other confidential spiritual communications made to them by congregation members who are seeking spiritual counsel, advice or comfort.

9. Congregation elders are authorized to hear confessions and other confidential spiritual communications and to provide confidential spiritual counsel, advice, and comfort by virtue of the Holy Scriptures and the Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses.

10. According to the religious beliefs and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses, congregation elders are expected to keep confession and other confidential spiritual communications confidential. An elder who reveals such a confession or other confidential spiritual communication, without the express permission of the one making the confession or confidential spiritual communication may be disqualified from serving as an elder.

11. All elders of local congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses, including the North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses in Fremont, California (hereinafter "North Congregation"), are and were at all times relevant to this case ordained ministers and the spiritual leaders of their respective congregations.

DUTIES OF ELDERS

12. As with all congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses, the North Congregation elders frequently provide spiritual counsel, advice, and comfort to congregation members concerning highly confidential and personal matters of a spiritual nature.

13. In addition, at all times relevant to this case, the North Congregation elders occasionally communicated with elders serving in the Branch Office's Service Department, as well as with elders serving as circuit overseers, in order to receive spiritual counsel and advice as to how to apply the religious doctrine and procedures of Jehovah's Witnesses to issues concerning the congregation and its members. As discussed more fully below, the religious beliefs of these elders also require that any confidential spiritual communications between elders serving in the Branch Office's Service Department, elders serving as circuit overseers, and congregation elders must be kept strictly confidential. The spiritual counsel and advice given by the elders serving in the Branch Office's Service Department, elders serving as circuit overseers, and congregation elders is based on Jehovah's Witnesses' understanding of the Bible.

14. The elders of congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses are also responsible for conducting what is referred to as "judicial investigations" when a member of a congregation is accused of serious Scriptural wrongdoing. Judicial investigations are carried out by two elders selected by the congregation body of elders.

15. The goal of a judicial investigation is to make certain that the Christian congregation remains spiritually and morally clean. (James 1:26) In doing so, if the elders confirm that serious Scriptural wrongdoing has occurred, a judicial committee of at least three elders is selected by the congregation body of elders to endeavor to provide spiritual assistance to the congregant who may have sinned, with the hope of assisting them to regain their spirituality and relationship with God. (Galatians 6:1, 2) At times, a judicial committee will determine that an accused congregant should be spiritually disciplined internally, based on Jehovah's Witnesses' understanding of the Bible.

16. Spiritual discipline administered by elders of Jehovah's Witnesses serving on a judicial committee is based solely on Jehovah's Witnesses' understanding of the Bible as applied to the facts of the matter. Where a serious sin is involved and the accused person is repentant, the judicial committee may recommend private or public reproof. But if the person who committed a serious sin cannot be brought back to repentance, the individual will have to be disfellowshipped. When a member is subject to public reproof or disfellowshipping, an announcement is made during a congregation meeting simply to the effect that "[name] has been reproved" or "[name] is no longer one of Jehovah's Witnesses."

17. Jehovah's Witnesses recognize the Bible's admonition to confess ones sins to God. 1 John 1:8, 9 ("If we confess our sins, he is faithful and righteous so as to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.").

18. In addition Jehovah's Witnesses also believe that there can be much benefit from speaking to the congregation elders ("older men") regarding such confidential matters. James 5:13-16 ("Is there anyone suffering evil among YOU? Let him carry on prayer. Is there anyone in good spirits? Let him sing psalms. Is there anyone sick among YOU? Let him call the older men of the congregation to [him], and let them pray over him, greasing [him] with oil in the name of Jehovah. And the prayer of faith will make the indisposed one well, and Jehovah will raise him up. Also, if he has committed sins, it will be forgiven him. Therefore openly confess YOUR sins to one another and pray for one another, that YOU may get healed."). Jehovah's Witnesses view confessions and other confidential and private communications of a spiritual nature between congregation members and elders as communications that elders must keep confidential. Proverbs 25:9.

19. Jehovah's Witnesses do not believe that the confidentiality of spiritual communications they may have with the congregation elders is limited to confessions. Rather, as outlined in James 5:13-16, Jehovah's Witnesses are encouraged to seek the spiritual counsel and advice of the elders in a variety of life situations. Congregation elders are also encouraged to seek spiritual counsel and advice from elders serving in the Branch Office's Service Department, or from elders serving as circuit overseers, in order to receive spiritual counsel and advice as to how to apply the religious doctrine and procedures of Jehovah's Witnesses to issues concerning the congregation and its members, and on occasion congregation elders seek such spiritual counsel and advice. Such confidential spiritual communications from congregation elders are only handled by elders in the Branch Office Service Department. In addition, if a congregation member is disfellowshipped, the judicial committee elders forward a notice of disfellowshipping to Branch Office elders for their review to ensure that their decision was spiritually based and well founded. The notice of disfellowshipping has the name of the disfellowshipped person, the date of disfellowshipping, and the Scriptural basis for disfellowshipping. Jehovah's Witnesses view all such spiritual communications as confidential communications that must be kept strictly confidential.

20. Elders do not allow unnecessary third parties to be a party to a confidential communication. However, at times more than one elder may be a party to the conversation. For instance, it is Jehovah's Witnesses religious belief and practice to have at least two elders present during a judicial investigation and at least three elders present during a judicial committee. (Deuteronomy 17:6; Deuteronomy 19:15; Matthew 18:15-17; 2 Corinthians 13:1; 1 Timothy 5:19) Before one becomes one of Jehovah's Witnesses, he would be made aware of this provision. Your Word Is a Lamp To My Foot, pages 176-79; Organization for Kingdom-Preaching and Disciple-Making, pages 159-65; Organized to Accomplish Our Ministry, pages 145-47; Organized To Do Jehovah's Will, pages 151-2. In addition, there may be instances where a husband and wife, or a parent and child, may together seek or would be provided with spiritual counsel, advice or comfort from the elders. Jehovah's Witnesses believe that men are imperfect and, therefore, three elders serving on a judicial committee can provide more full and complete spiritual counsel and advice based on a broader range of experience and knowledge than can a single elder alone. The elders and participants to these confidential and private spiritual communications would view these communications as confidential and congregants would expect the elders to keep such communications strictly confidential.

21. In addition, the religious doctrine of Jehovah's Witnesses requires that all elders keep these confidential and private spiritual communications strictly confidential. The Watchtower, April 1, 1971, pages 222-224; Kingdom Ministry, July 1975; The Watchtower, December 15, 1975, pages 764-66; The Watchtower, September 1, 1983, pages 21-26; The Watchtower, September 15, 1989, pages 10-15; The Watchtower, September 1, 1991, pages 22-27; The Watchtower, November 15, 1991, pages 19-23. Indeed, an elder who reveals the contents of such a confidential communication may be subject to removal.

22. In this case, Withheld Documents one through five referenced in Plaintiff's Notice of Motion and Motion to Compel, were all received by or sent by elders serving in the Branch Office's Service Department and are the type of confidential communications and documents described in paragraphs 13-21 above, which must be kept strictly confidential. The undersigned therefore claims and does not waive the penitent privilege as to any of the Withheld Documents.

SIGNED this the 11th day of August, 2011.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of New York that the foregoing is true and correct to the best of my information, belief, and knowledge.

Case No.: HG11558324

AFFIDAVIT OF MICHAEL L. CLARKE

I, Michael L. Clarke, after being duly sworn, depose and state and if called to testify would do so as follows:

1. That I am over 21 years of age and reside in Fremont, California.

2. That I have been a member of the North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, in Fremont, California since 1989.

3. That from August 29, 1989, until the present I have served as a duly ordained minister and elder of the North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses in Fremont, California.

4. That I am thoroughly familiar with the religious beliefs, teachings, practices, and organization of Jehovah's Witnesses.

5. That Jehovah's Witnesses who are responsible for teaching and pastoral care of congregation members are called "elders."

6. That it is a religious belief and practice of Jehovah's Witnesses based on God's Word, the Bible, that an elder has a responsibility to provide spiritual counsel and advice to those who seek or need it, and that a person who seeks or needs spiritual counsel and advice conveys to the elders whatever information may be needed to provide this spiritual assistance.—Isaiah 32:2; James 5:14-16; Hebrews 13:17.

7. That it is the religious belief and practice of Jehovah's Witnesses, based upon Scripture and tradition, that elders must maintain in strict confidence any church communications connected with such spiritual counsel and advice and congregants expect that their communications to elders will remain confidential.—Proverbs 15:22; 25:9, 10.

8. That revealing such confidential communications would call into question an elder's qualifications and could result in his removal as an elder in the congregation.

9. That if Affiant or any other elder is compelled to disclose such confidential information, his credibility and effectiveness as an elder, as well as the credibility and effectiveness of the other elders in the congregation, would be adversely affected and compromised, since congregation members will no longer be able to trust and rely that problems and confidential information they disclose to elders will not be revealed through discovery and used against them in a court action or otherwise violate their expectation of privacy and confidentiality.

10. That the requirement of keeping the above-described confidential and spiritual communications to elders confidential is explained in the official publications of Jehovah's Witnesses as follows:

> In each congregation of Jehovah's witnesses there are mature ministers appointed to care for various assignments. (1 Tim. 3:2, 12) As they discharge their duties they often are told about confidential things, and it is essential that they respect this confidence. For instance, James 5:13-16 shows that a member of the congregation who has some spiritual problem, perhaps even having committed a sin, should go to the spiritually older men for help. Isaiah 32:2 prophetically pictured these men as places of comfort and protection. What a fine thing it is to be able to explain one's problem and get balanced spiritual help, and at the same time have full confidence that the matter will not become general knowledge in the congregation or community.
> Those mature ministers will not discuss even with their wives and close friends what they thus learn in confidence. They know that if they did so it would undermine respect for their positions; it would make individuals hesitant to come to them; yes, in time it might even make it impossible for them to fulfill their role as spiritual shepherds.

The Watchtower, April 1, 1971, p. 223.

11. That it is also the religious belief and practice of Jehovah's Witnesses, based upon Scripture and church tradition, to keep congregation files, papers, reports, minutes or other documents prepared in conjunction with, or as a result of, the above-described confidential communications, strictly confidential.

12. That Withheld Documents one through five referenced in Plaintiffs' Ex Parte Application Re Production of Withheld Documents, were all prepared, signed, and sent by Affiant or received by Affiant as an elder in the North Congregation, and are the type of confidential communications and documents described in paragraph 6-11 above, which must be kept strictly confidential. The undersigned Affiant therefore claims and does not waive the penitential privilege as to any of the Withheld Documents.

13. That if Affiant or any other elder is compelled to produce any papers, reports, minutes or other documents prepared in conjunction with or as a result of the above-described confidential communications, the credibility and effectiveness of Petitioner and other elders in the congregation, will be adversely affected and compromised, and the confidentiality of the oral communications will be rendered worthless.

SIGNED this the 11 day of August, 2011.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct to the best of my information, belief, and knowledge.

John N. CURLETT, President, et al., Individually, and Constituting the Board of School Commissioners of Baltimore City.

Nos. 142 and 119.
Argued Feb. 27 and 28, 1963.
Decided June 17, 1963.

Two companion cases presenting issues in the context of state action requiring that schools begin each day with readings from the Bible. In one case, No. 142, an action by parents to enjoin enforcement of a Pennsylvania statute providing for Bible reading in public schools, the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, 201 F.Supp. 815, rendered judgment for the plaintiffs and a direct appeal was taken. In the other action, No. 119, a Maryland mandamus proceeding to compel a school board to rescind a rule providing for opening exercises in public schools embracing reading of the Bible or recitation of the Lord's Prayer, the Superior Court of Baltimore City, Maryland, rendered judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appealed. The Court of Appeals of Maryland, 228 Md. 239, 179 A.2d 698, affirmed. Certiorari was granted. The Supreme Court, Mr. Justice Clark, held that the practices at issue and the laws requiring them were unconstitutional under the Establishment Clause, as applied to the states under the Fourteenth Amendment.

Judgment in No. 142 affirmed; judgment in No. 119 reversed and cause remanded with directions.

Mr. Justice Stewart dissented.

Once again we are called upon to consider the scope of the provision of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution which declares that 'Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof * * *.' These companion cases present the issues in the context of state action requiring that schools begin each day with readings from the Bible. While raising the basic questions under slightly different factual situations, the cases permit of joint treatment. In light of the history of the First Amendment and of our cases interpreting and applying its requirements, we hold that the practices at issue and the laws requiring them are unconstitutional under the Establishment Clause, as applied to the States through the Four-

The Facts in Each Case: No. 142. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania by law, 24 Pa.Stat. s 15-1516, as amended, Pub.Law 1928 (Supp.1960) Dec. 17, 1959, requires that 'At least ten verses from the Holy Bible shall be read, without comment, at the opening of each public school on each school day. Any child shall be excused from such Bible reading, or attending such Bible reading, upon the written request of his parent or guardian.' The Schempp family, husband and wife and two of their three children, brought suit to enjoin enforcement of the statute, contending that their rights under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States are, have been, and will continue to be violated unless this statute be declared unconstitutional as violative of these provisions of the First Amendment. They sought to enjoin the appellant school district, wherein the Schempp children attend school, and its officers and the 206 Superintendent of Public Instruction of the Commonwealth from continuing to conduct such readings and recitation of the Lord's Prayer in the public schools of the district pursuant to the statute. A three-judge statutory District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania held that the statute is violative of the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment as applied*1563 to the States by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment and directed that appropriate injunctive relief issue. D.C., 201 F.Supp. 815.[FN1] On appeal by the District, its officials and the Superintendent, under 28 U.S.C. s 1253, we noted probable jurisdiction. 371 U.S. 807, 83 S.Ct. 25, 9 L.Ed.2d 52.

FN1. The action was brought in 1958, prior to the 1959 amendment of s 15-1516 authorizing a child's nonattendance at the exercises upon parental request. The three-judge court held the statute and the practices complained of unconstitutional under both the Establishment Clause and the Free Exercise Clause. D.C., 177 F.Supp. 398. Pending appeal to this Court by the school district, the statute was so amended, and we vacated the judgment and remanded for further proceedings. 364 U.S. 298, 81 S.Ct. 268, 5 L.Ed.2d 89. The same three-judge court granted appellees' motion to amend the pleadings, D.C., 195 F.Supp. 518, held a hearing on the amended pleadings and rendered the judgment, D.C., 201 F.Supp. 815, from which appeal is now taken.

The appellees Edward Lewis Schempp, his wife Sidney, and their children, Roger and Donna, are of the Unitarian faith and are members of the Unitarian Church in Germantown, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where they, as well as another son, Ellory, regularly attend religious services. The latter was originally a party but having graduated from the school system pendente lite was voluntarily dismissed from the action. The other children attend the Abington Senior High School, which is a public school operated by appellant district.

On each school day at the Abington Senior High School between 8:15 and 8:30 a.m., while the pupils are attending their home rooms or advisory sections, opening exercises207 are conducted pursuant to the statute. The exercises are broadcast into each room in the school building through an intercommunications system and are conducted under the supervision of a teacher by students attending the school's radio and television workshop. Selected students from this course gather each morning in the school's workshop studio for the exercises, which include readings by one of the students of 10 verses of the Holy Bible, broadcast to each room in the building. This is followed by the recitation of the Lord's Prayer, likewise over the intercommunications system, but also by the students in the various classrooms, who are asked to stand and join in repeating the prayer in unison. The exercises are closed with the flag salute and such pertinent announcements as are of interest to the students. Participation in the opening exercises, as directed by the statute, is voluntary. The student reading the verses from the Bible may select the passages and read from any version he chooses, although the only copies furnished by the school are the King James version, copies of which were circulated to each teacher by the school district. During the period in which the exercises have been conducted the King James, the Douay and the Revised Standard versions of the Bible have been used, as well as the Jewish Holy Scriptures. There are no prefatory statements, no questions asked or solicited, no comments or explanations made and no interpretations given at or during the exercises. The students and parents are advised that the student may absent himself from the classroom or, should he elect to remain, not participate in the exercises.

It appears from the record that in schools not having an intercommunications system the Bible reading and the recitation of the Lord's Prayer were conducted by the 208 home-room teacher,[FN2] who chose the text of the verses and read them herself or had students read them in rotation or by volunteers. This *1564 was followed by a standing recitation of the Lord's Prayer, together with the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag by the class in unison and a closing announcement of routine school items of interest.

> FN2. The statute as amended imposes no penalty upon a teacher refusing to obey its mandate. However, it remains to be seen whether one refusing could have his contract of employment terminated for 'wilful violation of the school laws.' 24 Pa.Stat. (Supp.1960) s 11-1122.

At the first trial Edward Schempp and the children testified as to specific religious doctrines purveyed by a literal reading of the Bible 'which were contrary to the religious beliefs which they held and to their familial teaching.' 177 F.Supp. 398, 400. The children testified that all of the doctrines to which they referred were read to them at various times as part of the exercises. Edward Schempp testified at the second trial that he had considered having Roger and Donna excused from attendance at the exercises but decided against it for several reasons, including his belief that the children's relationships with their teachers and classmates would be adversely affected.[FN3]

> 'Edward Schempp, the children's father, testified that after careful consideration he had decided that he should not have Roger or Donna excused from attendance at these morning ceremonies. Among his reasons were the following. He said that he thought his children would be 'labeled as 'odd balls'' before their teachers and classmates every school day; that children, like Roger's and Donna's classmates, were liable 'to lump all particular religious difference(s) or religious objections (together) as 'atheism'' and that today the word 'atheism' is often connected with 'atheistic communism', and has 'very bad' connotations, such as 'un-American' or 'anti-Red', with overtones of possible immorality. Mr. Schempp pointed out that due to the events of the morning exercises following in rapid succession, the Bible reading, the Lord's Prayer, the Flag Salute, and the announcements, excusing his children from the Bible reading would mean that probably they would miss hearing the announcements so important to children. He testified also that if Roger and Donna were excused from Bible reading they would have to stand in the hall outside their 'homeroom' and that this carried with it the imputation of punishment for bad conduct.' 201 F.Supp., at 818.

209 Expert testimony was introduced by both appellants and appellees at the first trial, which testimony was summarized by the trial court as follows:

'Dr. Solomon Grayzel testified that there were marked differences between the Jewish Holy Scriptures and the Christian Holy Bible, the most obvious of which was the absence of the New Testament in the Jewish Holy Scriptures. Dr. Grayzel testified that portions of the New Testament were offensive to Jewish tradition and that, from the standpoint of Jewish faith, the concept of Jesus Christ as the Son of God was 'practically blasphemous'. He cited instances in the New Testament which, assertedly, were not only sectarian in nature but tended to bring the Jews into ridicule or scorn. Dr. Grayzel gave as his expert opinion that such material from the New Testament could be explained to Jewish children in such a way as to do no harm to them. But if portions of the New Testament were read without explanation, they could be, and in his specific experience with children Dr. Grayzel observed, had been, psychologically harmful to the child and had caused a divisive force within the social media of the school.

'Dr. Grayzel also testified that there was significant difference in attitude with regard to the respective Books of the Jewish and Christian Religions in that Judaism attaches no special significance to the reading of the Bible per se and that the Jewish Holy Scriptures are source materials to be studied. But Dr. Grayzel did state that many portions of the New,

210 as well as of the Old, Testament contained passages of great literary and moral value.

*1565 'Dr. Luther A. Weigle, an expert witness for the defense, testified in some detail as to the reasons for and the methods employed in developing the King James and the Revised Standard Versions of the Bible. On direct examination, Dr. Weigle stated that the Bible was non-sectarian. He later stated that the phrase 'non-sectarian' meant to him non-sectarian within the Christian faiths. Dr. Weigle stated that his definition of the Holy Bible would include the Jewish Holy Scriptures, but also stated that the 'Holy Bible' would not be complete without the New Testament. He stated that the New Testament 'conveyed the message of Christians.' In his opinion, reading of the Holy Scriptures to the exclution of the New Testament would be a sectarian practice. Dr. Weigle stated that the Bible was of great moral, historical and literary value. This is conceded by all the parties and is also the view of the court.' 177 F.Supp. 398, 401-402.

The trial court, in striking down the practices and the statute requiring them, made specific findings of fact that the children's attendance at Abington Senior High School is compulsory and that the practice of reading 10 verses from the Bible is also compelled by law. It also found that:

'The reading of the verses, even without comment, possesses a devotional and religious character and constitutes in effect a religious observance. The devotional and religious nature of the morning exercises is made all the more apparent by the fact that the Bible reading is followed immediately by a recital in unison by the pupils of the Lord's Prayer. The fact that some pupils, or theoretically all pupils, might be excused from attendance at the exercises 211 does not mitigate the obligatory nature of the ceremony for * * * Section 1516 * * * unequivocally requires the exercises to be held every school day in every school in the Commonwealth. The exercises are held in the school buildings and perforce are conducted by and uner the authority of the local school authorities and during school sessions. Since the statute requires the reading of the 'Holy Bible', a Christian document, the practice * * * prefers the Christian religion. The record demonstrates that it was the intention of * * * the Commonwealth * * * to introduce a religious ceremony into the public schools of the Commonwealth.' 201 F.Supp., at 819.

No. 119. In 1905 the Board of School Commissioners of Baltimore City adopted a rule pursuant to Art. 77, s 202 of the Annotated Code of Maryland. The rule provided for the holding of opening exercises in the schools of the city, consisting primarily of the 'reading, without comment, of a chapter in the Holy Bible and/or the use of the Lord's Prayer.' The petitioners, Mrs. Madalyn Murray and her son, William J. Murray III, are both professed atheists. Following unsuccessful attempts to have the respondent school board rescind the rule, this suit was filed for mandamus to compel its rescission and cancellation. It was alleged that William was a student in a public school of the city and Mrs. Murray, his mother, was a taxpayer therein; that it was the practice under the rule to have a reading on each school morning from the King James version of the Bible; that at petitioners' insistence the rule was amended[FN4] to permit children to 212 be excused from the exercise on request of the parent and that William *1566 had been excused pursuant thereto; that nevertheless the rule as amended was in violation of the petitioners' rights 'to freedom of religion under the First and Fourteenth Amendments' and in violation of 'the principle of separation between church and state, contained therein. * * *' The petition particularized the petitioners' atheistic beliefs and stated that the rule, as practiced, violated their rights

> FN4. The rule as amended provides as follows:
> 'Opening Exercises. Each school, either collectively or in classes, shall be opened by the reading, without comment, of a chapter in the Holy Bible and/or the use of the Lord's Prayer. The Douay version may be used by those pupils who prefer it. Appropriate patriotic exercises should be held as a part of the general opening exercise of the school or class. Any child shall be excused from participating in the opening exercises or from attending the opening exercises upon the written request of his parent or guardian.'

all moral and spiritual values, equating these values with religious values, and thereby renders sinister, alien and suspect the beliefs and ideals of your Petitioners, promoting doubt and question of their morality, good citizenship and good faith.'

The respondents demurred and the trial court, recognizing that the demurrer admitted all facts well pleaded, sustained it without leave to amend. The Maryland Court of Appeals affirmed, the majority of four justices holding the exercise not in violation of the First and Fourteenth Amendments, with three justices dissenting. 228 Md. 239, 179 A.2d 698. We granted certiorari. 371 U.S. 809, 83 S.Ct. 21, 9 L.Ed.2d 52.

II.

It is true that religion has been closely identified withour history and government. As we said in Engel v. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421, 434, 82 S.Ct. 1261, 1268, 8 L.Ed.2d 601 (1962), 'The history of man is inseparable from the history of religion. And * * * since 213 the beginning of that history many people have devoutly believed that 'More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of.'' In Zorach v. Clauson, 343 U.S. 306, 313, 72 S.Ct. 679, 684, 96 L.Ed. 954 (1952), we gave specific recognition to the proposition that '(w)e are a religious people whose institutions presuppose a Supreme Being.' The fact that the Founding Fathers believed devotedly that there was a God and that the unalienable rights of man were rooted in Him is clearly evidenced in their writings, from the Mayflower Compact to the Constitution itself. This background is evidenced today in our public life through the continuance in our oaths of office from the Presidency to the Alderman of the final supplication, 'So help me God.' Likewise each House of the Congress provides through its Chaplain an opening prayer, and the sessions of this Court are declared open by the crier in a short ceremony, the final phrase of which invokes the grace of God. Again, there are such manifestations in our military forces, where those of our citizens who are under the restrictions of military service wish to engage in voluntary worship. Indeed, only last year an official survey of the country indicated that 64% of our people have church membership, Bureau of the Census, U.S. Department of Commerce, Statistical Abstract of the United States (83d ed. 1962), 48, while less than 3% profess no religion whatever. Id., at p. 46. It can be truly said, therefore, that today, as in the beginning, our national life reflects a religious people who, in the words of Madison, are 'earnestly praying, as * * * in duty bound, that the Supreme Lawgiver of the Universe * * * guide them into every measure which may be worthy of his (blessing * * *.)' Memorial and Remonstrance Against Religious Assessments, quoted in *1567Everson v. Board of Education, 330 U.S. 1, 71-72, 67 S.Ct. 504, 538-539, 91 L.Ed. 711 (1947) (Appendix to dissenting opinion of Rutledge, J.).

214 This is not to say, however, that religion has been so identified with our history and government that religious freedom is not likewise as strongly imbeded in our public and private life. Nothing but the most telling of personal experiences in religious persecution suffered by our forebears, see Everson v. Board of Education, supra, 330 U.S., at 8-11, 67 S.Ct., at 507-509, 91 L.Ed. 711, could have planted our belief in liberty of religious opinion any more deeply in our heritage. It is true that this liberty frequently was not realized by the colonists, but this is readily accountable by their close ties to the Mother Country.[FN5] However, the views of Madison and Jefferson, preceded by Roger Williams,[FN6] came to be incorporated not only in the Federal Constitution but likewise in those of most of our States. This freedom to worship was indispensable in a country whose people came from the four quarters of the earth and brought with them a diversity of religious opinion. Today authorities list 83 separate religious bodies, each with membership exceeding 50,000, existing among our people, as well as innumerable smaller groups. Bureau of the Census, op. cit., supra, at 46-47.

FN5. There were established churches in at least eight of the original colonies, and various degrees of religious support in others as late as the Revolutionary War. See Engel v. Vitale, supra, 370 U.S. at 428, n. 10, 82 S.Ct., at 1265, 8 L.Ed.2d 601.

FN6. 'There goes many a ship to sea, with many hundred souls in one ship, whose weal and woe is common, and is a true picture of a commonwealth, or human combination, or society. It hath fallen out sometimes, that both Papists and Protestants, Jews and Turks, may be embarked in one ship; upon which supposal, I affirm that all the liberty senting, agreed:

'There is no answer to the proposition * * * that the effect of the religious freedom Amendment to our Constitution was to take every form of propagation of religion out of the realm of things which could directly or indirectly be made public business and thereby be supported in whole or in part at taxpayers' expense. * * * This freedom was first in the Bill of Rights because it was first in the forefathers' minds; it was set forth in absolute terms, and its strength is its rigidity.' Id., 330 U.S., at 26, 67 S.Ct., at 516, 91 L.Ed. 711.

217 Further Mr. Justice Rutledge, joined by Justices Frankfurter, Jackson and Burton, declared:

'The (First) Amendment's purpose was not to strike merely at the official establishment of a single sect, creed or religion, outlawing only a formal relation such as had prevailed in England and some of the colonies. Necessarily it was to uproot all such relationships. But the object was broader than separating church and state in this narrow sense. It was to create a complete and permanent separation of the spheres of religious activity and civil authority by comprehensively forbidding every form of public aid or support for religion.' Id., 330 U.S., at 31-32, 67 S.Ct., at 519, 91 L.Ed. 711.

The same conclusion has been firmly maintained ever since that time, see Illinois ex rel. McCollum, supra, 333 U.S., at pp. 210-211, 68 S.Ct., at pp. 464-465, *1569 92 L.Ed. 648; McGowan v. Maryland, supra, 366 U.S., at 442-443, 81 S.Ct., at 1113-1114, 6 L.Ed.2d 393; Torcaso v. Watkins, supra, 367 U.S., at 492-493, 495, 81 S.Ct., at 1682-1683, 1684, 6 L.Ed.2d 982, and we reaffirm it now.

While none of the parties to either of these cases has questioned these basic conclusions of the Court, both of which have been long established, recognized and consistently reaffirmed, others continue to question their history, logic and efficacy. Such contentions, in the light of the consistent interpretation in cases of this Court, seem entirely untenable and of value only as academic exercises.

IV.

The interrelationship of the Establishment and the Free Exercise Clauses was first touched upon by Mr. Justice Roberts for the Court in Cantwell v. Connecticut, supra, 310 U.S., at 303-304, 60 S.Ct., at 903, 84 L.Ed. 1213, where it was said that their 'inhibition of legislation' had

'a double aspect. On the one hand, it forestalls compulsion by law of the acceptance of any creed or the practice of any form of worship. Freedom of 218 conscience and freedom to adhere to such religious organization or form of worship as the individual may choose cannot be restricted by law. On the other hand, it safeguards the free exercise of the chosen form of religion. Thus the Amendment embraces two concepts,-freedom to believe and freedom to act. The first is absolute but, in the nature of things, the second cannot be.'

A half dozen years later in Everson v. Board of Education, supra, 330 U.S., at 14-15, 67 S.Ct., at 511, 91 L.Ed. 711, this Court, through Mr. Justice BLACK, stated that the 'scope of the First Amendment * * * was designed forever to suppress' the establishment of religion or the prohibition of the free exercise thereof. In short, the Court held that the Amendment 'requires the state to be a neutral in its relations with groups of religious believers and non-believers; it does not require the state to be their adversary. State power is no more to be used so as to handicap religions, than it is to favor them.' Id., 330 U.S., at 18, 67 S.Ct. at 513, 91 L.Ed. 711.

And Mr. Justice Jackson, in dissent, declared that public schools are organized 'on the premise that secular education can be isolated from all religious teaching so that the school can inculcate all needed temporal knowledge and also maintain a strict and lofty neutrality as to religion. The assumption is that after the individual has been instructed in worldly wisdom he will be better fitted to chose his religion.' Id., 330 U.S., at 23-24, 67 S.Ct. at 515, 91 L.Ed. 711.

Moreover, all of the four dissenters, speaking through Mr. Justice Rutledge, agreed that 'Our constitutional policy * * * does not deny the value or the necessity for religious training, teaching or observance. Rather it secures their free exercise. But to that end it does deny that the state can undertake or sustain them in any form or degree. For this 219 reason the sphere of religious activity, as distinguished from the secular intellectual liberties, has been given the twofold protection and, as the state cannot forbid, neither can it perform or aid in performing the religious function. The dual prohibition makes that function altogether private.' Id., 330 U.S., at 52, 67 S.Ct., at 529, 91 L.Ed. 711.

Only one year later the Court was asked to reconsider and repudiate the 1570 doctrine of these cases in McCollum v. Board of Education. It was argued that 'historically the First Amendment was intended to forbid only government preference of one religion over another * * *. In addition they ask that we distinguish or overrule our holding in the Everson case that the Fourteenth Amendment made the 'establishment of religion' clause of the First Amendment applicable as a prohibition against the States.' 333 U.S., at 211, 68 S.Ct., at 465, 92 L.Ed. 648. The Court, with Mr. Justice Reed alone dissenting, was unable to 'accept either of these contentions.' Ibid. Mr. Justice Frankfurter, joined by Justices Jackson, Rutledge and Burton, wrote a very comprehensive and scholarly concurrence in which he said that '(s)eparation is a requirement to abstain from fusing functions of Government and of religious sects, not merely to treat them all equally.' Id., 333 U.S., at 227, 68 S.Ct., at 473, 92 L.Ed. 648. Continuing, he stated that:

'the Constitution * * * prohibited the Government common to all from becoming embroiled, however innocently, in the destructive religious conflicts of which the history of even this country records some dark pages.' Id., 333 U.S., at 228, 68 S.Ct., at 473, 92 L.Ed. 648.

In 1952 in Zorach v. Clauson, supra, Mr. Justice DOUGLAS for the Court reiterated:

'There cannot be the slightest doubt that the First Amendment reflects the philosophy that Church and State should be separated. And so far as interference with the ';ree exercise' of religion and an *220 'ESTABLISHMENT' OF RELIGION ARE CONCERNED, the separation must be complete and unequivocal. The First Amendment within the scope of its coverage permits no exception; the prohibition is absolute. The First Amendment, however, does not say that in every and all respects there shall be a separation of Church and State. Rather, it studiously defines the manner, the specific ways, in which there shall be no concert or union or dependency one on the other. That is the common sense of the matter.' 343 U.S., at 312, 72 S.Ct., at 683, 96 L.Ed. 954.

And then in 1961 in McGowan v. Maryland and in Torcaso v. Watkins each of these cases was discussed and approved. Chief Justice WARREN in McGowan, for a unanimous Court on this point, said:

'But, the First Amendment, in its final form, did not simply bar a congressional enactment establishing a church; it forbade all laws respecting an establishment of religion. Thus, this Court has given the Amendment a 'broad interpretation * * * in the light of its history and the evils it was designed forever to suppress * * *.'' 366 U.S., at 441-442, 81 S.Ct., at 1113, 6 L.Ed.2d 393.

And Mr. Justice BLACK for the Court in Torcaso, without dissent but with Justices FRANKFURTER and HARLAN concurring in the result, used this language:

'We repeat and again reaffirm that neither a State nor the Federal Government can constitutionally force a person 'to profess a belief or disbelief in any religion.' Neither can constitutionally pass laws or impose requirements which aid all religions as against non-believers, and neither can aid those religions based on a belief in the existence of God as against those religions founded on different beliefs.' 367 U.S., at 495, 81 S.Ct., at 1683, 6 L.Ed.2d 982.

Finally, in Engel v. Vitale, only last year, these principles were so universally recognized that the Court, without*221 the citation of a single case and over the sole dissent of Mr. Justice STEWART, 1571 reaffirmed them. The Court found the 22-word prayer used in 'New York's program of daily classroom invocation of God's blessings as prescribed in the Regents' prayer * * * (to be) a religious activity.' 370 U.S., at 424, 82 S.Ct., at 1264, 8 L.Ed.2d 601. It held that 'it is no part of the business of government to compose official prayers for any group of the American people to recite as a part of a religious program carried on by government.' Id., 370 U.S., at 425, 82 S.Ct., at 1264, 8 L.Ed.2d 601. In discussing the reach of the Establishment and Free Exercise Clauses of the First Amendment the Court said:

'Although these two clauses may in certain instances overlap, they forbid two quite different kinds > of conscience I ever pleaded for, turns upon these two hinges, that none of the Papists, Protestants, Jews, or Turks be forced to come to the ship's prayers or worship, nor compelled from their own particular prayers or worship, if they practice any.'

III.

Almost a hundred years ago in Minor v. Board of Education of Cincinnati, [FN7] Judge Alphonso Taft, father 215 of the revered Chief Justice, in an unpublished opinion stated the ideal of our people as to religious freedom as one of > FN7. Superior Court of Cincinnati, February 1870. The opinion is not reported but is published under the title, The Bible in the Common Schools (Cincinnati: Robert Clarke & Co. 1870). Judge Taft's views, expressed in dissent, prevailed on appeal. See Board of Education of Cincinnati v. Minor, 23 Ohio St. 211, 253 (1872), in which the Ohio Supreme Court held that:

>
> 'The great bulk of human affairs and human interests is left by any free government to individual enterprise and individual action. Religion is eminently one of these interests, lying outside the true and legitimate province of government.'

'absolute equality before the law, of all religious opinions and sects * * *.

'The government is neutral, and, while protecting all, it prefers none, and it disparages none.'

Before examining this 'neutral' position in which the Establishment and Free Exercise Clauses of the First Amendment place our Government it is well that we discuss the reach of the Amendment under the cases of this Court.

[1] First, this Court has decisively settled that the First Amendment's mandate that 'Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof' has been made wholly applicable to the States by the Fourteenth Amendment. Twenty-three years ago in *1568Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 303, 60 S.Ct. 900, 903, 84 L.Ed. 1213 (1940), this Court, through Mr. Justice Roberts, said:

'The fundamental concept of liberty embodied in that (Fourteenth) Amendment embraces the liberties guaranteed by the First Amendment. The First Amendment declares that Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. The Fourteenth Amendment"216 has rendered the legislatures of the states as incompetent as Congress to enact such laws. * * *'[FN8]

> FN8. Application to the States of other clauses of the First Amendment obtained even before Cantwell. Almost 40 years ago in the opinion of the Court in Gitlow v. People of State of New York, 268 U.S. 652, 666, 45 S.Ct. 625, 630, 69 L.Ed. 1138 (1925), Mr. Justice Sanford said: 'For present purposes we may and do assume that freedom of speech and of the press-which are protected by the First Amendment from abridgment by Congress-are among the fundamental personal rights and 'liberties' protected by the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment from impairment by the States.'

In a series of cases since Cantwell the Court has repeatedly reaffirmed that doctrine, and we do so now. Murdock v. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 319 U.S. 105, 108, 63 S.Ct. 870, 872, 87 L.Ed. 1292 (1943); Everson v. Board of Education, supra; Illinois ex rel. McCollum v. Board of Education, 333 U.S. 203, 210-211, 68 S.Ct. 461, 464-465, 92 L.Ed. 648 (1948); Zorach v. Clauson, supra; McGowan v. Maryland, 366 U.S. 420, 81 S.Ct. 1101, 6 L.Ed.2d 393 (1961); Torcaso v. Watkins, 367 U.S. 488, 81 S.Ct. 1680, 6 L.Ed.2d 982 (1961); and Engel v. Vitale, supra.

[2] Second, this Court has rejected unequivocally the contention that the Establishment Clause forbids only governmental preference of one religion over another. Almost 20 years ago in Everson, supra, 330 U.S., at 15, 67 S.Ct., at 511, 91 L.Ed. 711, the Court said that '(n)either a state nor the Federal Government can set up a church. Neither can pass laws which aid one religion, aid all religions, or prefer one religion over another.' And Mr. Justice Jackson, dis-of governmental encroachment upon religious freedom. The Establishment Clause, unlike the Free Exercise Clause, does not depend upon any showing of direct governmental compulsion and is violated by the enactment of laws which establish an official religion whether those laws operate directly to coerce non-observing individuals or not. This is not to say, of course, that laws officially prescribing a particular form of religious worship do not involve coercion of such individuals. When the power, prestige and financial support of government is placed behind a particular religious belief, the indirect coercive pressure upon religious minorities to conform to the prevailing officially approved religion is plain.' Id., 370 U.S., at 430-431, 82 S.Ct., at 1267, 8 L.Ed.2d 601.

And in further elaboration the Court found that the 'first and most immediate purpose (of the Establishment Clause) rested on the belief that a union of government and religion tends to destroy government and to degrade religion.' Id., 370 U.S. at 431, 82 S.Ct., at 1267, 8 L.Ed.2d 601. When government, the Court said, allies itself with one particular form of religion, the 222 inevitable result is that it incurs 'the hatred, disrespect and even contempt of those who held contrary beliefs.' [3][4][5][6][7][8][9] The wholesome 'neutrality' of which this Court's cases speak thus stems from a recognition of the teachings of history that powerful sects or groups might bring about a fusion of governmental and religious functions or a concert or dependency of one upon the other to the end that official support of the State or Federal Government would be placed behind the tenets of one or of all orthodoxies. This the Establishment Clause prohibits. And a further reason for neutrality is found in the Free Exercise Clause, which recognizes the value of religious training, teaching and observance and, more particularly, the right of every person to freely choose his own course with reference thereto, free of any compulsion from the state. This the Free Exercise Clause guarantees. Thus, as we have seen, the two clauses may overlap. As we have indicated, the Establishment Clause has been directly considered by this Court eight times in the past score of years and, with only one Justice dissenting on the point, it has consistently held that the clause withdrew all legislative power respecting religious belief or the expression thereof. The test may be stated as follows: what are the purpose and the primary effect of the enactment? If either is the advancement or inhibition of religion then the enactment exceeds the scope of legislative power as circumscribed by the Constitution. That is to say that to withstand the strictures of the Establishment Clause there must be a secular legislative purpose and a primary effect that neither advances nor inhibits religion. Everson v. Board of Education, supra; McGowan v. Maryland, supra, 366 U.S., at 442, *157281 S.Ct. at 1113-114, 6 L.Ed.2d 393. The Free Exercise Clause, likewise considered many times here, withdraws from legislative power, state and federal, the exertion of any restraint on the free exercise223 of religion. Its purpose is to secure religious liberty in the individual by prohibiting any invasions thereof by civil authority. Hence it is necessary in a free exercise case for one to show the coercive effect of the enactment as it operates against him in the practice of his religion. The distinction between the two clauses is apparent-a violation of the Free Exercise Clause is predicated on coercion while the Establishment Clause violation need not be so attended.

[10] Applying the Establishment Clause principles to the cases at bar we find that the States are requiring the selection and reading at the opening of the school day of verses from the Holy Bible and the recitation of the Lord's Prayer by the students in unison. These exercises are prescribed as part of the curricular activities of students who are required by law to attend school. They are held in the school buildings under the supervision and with the participation of teachers employed in those schools. None of these factors, other than compulsory school attendance, was present in the program upheld in Zorach v. Clauson. The trial court in No. 142 has found that such an opening exercise is a religious ceremony and was intended by the State to be so. We agree with the trial court's finding as to the religious character of the exercises. Given that finding, the exercises and the law requiring them are in violation of the Establishment Clause.

[11] There is no such specific finding as to the religious character of the exercises in No. 119, and the State contends (as does the State in No. 142) that the program is an effort to extend its benefits to all public school children without regard to their religious belief. Included within its secular purposes, it says, are the promotion of moral values, the contradiction to the materialistic trends of our times, the perpetuation of our institutions and the teaching of literature. The case came up 224 on demurrer, of course, to a petition which alleged that the uniform practice under the rule had been to read from the King James version of the Bible and that the exercise was sectarian. The short answer, therefore, is that the religious character of the exercise was admitted by the State. But even if its purpose is not strictly religious, it is sought to be accomplished through readings, without comment, from the Bible. Surely the place of the Bible as an instrument of religion cannot be gainsaid, and the State's recognition of the pervading religious character of the ceremony is evident from the rule's specific permission of the alternative use of the Catholic Douay version as well as the recent amendment permitting nonattendance at the exercises. None of these factors is consistent with the contention that the Bible is here used either as an instrument for nonreligious moral inspiration or as a reference for the teaching of secular subjects.

[12][13][14][15][16] The conclusion follows that in both cases the laws require religious exercises and such exercises are being conducted in direct violation of the rights of the appellees and petitioners.[FN9] *1573 Nor are these required exercises mitigated by the fact that individual students may absent 225 themselves upon parental request, for that fact furnishes no defense to a claim of unconstitutionality under the Establishment Clause. See Engel v. Vitale, supra, 370 U.S., at 430, 82 S.Ct., at 1266-1267, 8 L.Ed.2d 601. Further, it is no defense to urge that the religious practices here may be relatively minor encroachments on the First Amendment. The breach of neutrality that is today a trickling stream may all too soon become a raging torrent and, in the words of Madison, 'it is proper to take alarm at the first experiment on our liberties.' Memorial and Remonstrance Against Religious Assessments, quoted in Everson, supra, 330 U.S., at 65, 67 S.Ct., at 536, 91 L.Ed. 711.

> FN9. It goes without saying that the laws and practices involved here can be challenged only by persons having standing to complain. But the requirements for standing to challenge state action under the Establishment Clause, unlike those relating to the Free Exercise Clause, do not include proof that particular religious freedoms are infringed. McGowan v. Maryland, supra, 366 U.S., at 429-430, 81 S.Ct., at 1106-1107, 6 L.Ed.2d 393. The parties here are school children and their parents, who are directly affected by the laws and practices against which their complaints are directed. These interests surely suffice to give the parties standing to complain. See Engel v. Vitale, supra. Cf. McCollum v. Board of Education, surpa; Everson v. Board of Education, supra. Compare Doremus v. Board of Education, 342 U.S. 429, 72 S.Ct. 394, 96 L.Ed. 475 (1952), which involved the same substantive issues presented here. The appeal was there dismissed upon the graduation of the school child involved and because of the appellants' failure to establish standing as taxpayers.

[17][18] It is insisted that unless these religious exercises are permitted a 'religion of secularism' is established in the schools. We agree of course that the State may not establish a 'religion of secularism' in the sense of affirmatively opposing or showing hostility to religion, thus 'preferring those who believe in no religion over those who do believe.' Zorach v. Clauson, supra, 343 U.S., at 314, 72 S.Ct., at 684, 96 L.Ed. 954. We do not agree, however, that this decision in any sense has that effect. In addition, it might well be said that one's education is not complete without a study of comparative religion or the history of religion and its relationship to the advancement of civilization. It certainly may be said that the Bible is worthy of study for its literary and historic qualities. Nothing we have said here indicates that such study of the Bible or of religion, when presented objectively as part of a secular program of education, may not be effected consistently with the First Amendment. But the exercises here do not fall into those categories. They are religious exercises, required by the States in violation of the command of the First Amendment that the Government maintain strict neutrality, neither aiding nor opposing religion.

[19][20] Finally, we cannot accept that the concept of neutrality, which does not permit a State to require a religious exercise even with the consent of the majority of those 226 affected, collides with the majority's right to free exercise of religion.[FN10] While the Free Exercise Clause clearly prohibits the use of state action to deny the rights of free exercise to anyone, it has never meant that a majority could use the machinery of the State to practice its beliefs. Such a contention was effectively answered by Mr. Justice Jackson for the Court in West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 628, 63 S.Ct. 117,, 1185, 87 L.Ed. 1628 (1943):

> FN10. We are not of course presented with and therefore do not pass upon a situation such as military service, where the Government regulates the temporal and geographic environment of individuals to a point that, unless it permits voluntary religious services to be conducted with the use of government facilities, military personnel would be unable to engage in the practice of their faiths.

'The very purpose of a Bill of Rights was to withdraw certain subjects from the vicissitudes of political controversy, to place them beyond the reach of majorities and officials and to establish them as legal principles to be applied by the courts. 1574 [21] The place of religion in our society is an exalted one, achieved through a long tradition of reliance on the home, the church and the inviolable citadel of the individual heart and mind. We have come to recognize through bitter experience that it is not within the power of government to invade that citadel, whether its purpose or effect be to aid or oppose, to advance or retard. In the relationship between man and religion, the State is firmly committed to a position of neutrality. Though the application of that rule requires interpretation of a delicate sort, the rule itself is clearly and concisely stated in the words of the First Amendment. Applying that rule to the facts of these cases, we affirm the judgment in No. 142. *227 In No. 119, the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded to the Maryland Court of Appeals for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Judgment in No. 142 affirmed; judgment in No. 119 reversed and cause remanded with directions.

Mr. Justice DOUGLAS, concurring.

I join the opinion of the Court and add a few words in explanation.

While the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment is written in terms of what the State may not require of the individual, the Establishment Clause, serving the same goal of individual religious freedom, is written in different terms.

Establishment of a religion can be achieved in several ways. The church and state can be one; the church may control the state or the state may control the church; or the relationship may take one of several possible forms of a working arrangment between the two bodies.[FN1] Under all of these arrangements the church typically has a place in the state's budget, and church law usually governs such matters as baptism, marriage, divorce and separation, at least for its members and sometimes for the entire body politic.[FN2] Education, too, is usually high on the priority *228 list of church interests.[FN3] In the past schools were often made the exclusive responsibility of the church. Today in some state-church countries the state runs the public schools, but compulsory religious exercises are often required of some or all students. Thus, under the agreement Franco made with the Holy See when he came to power in Spain, 'The Church regained its place in the national budget. It insists on baptizing all children and has made the catechism obligatory in state schools.' [FN4]

The vice of all such arrangements under the Establishment Clause is that the state is lending its assistance to a church's efforts to gain and keep adherents. Under the First Amendment it is strictly a matter for the individual and his church as to what church he will belong1575 to and how much support, in the way of belief, time, activity or money, he will give to it. 'This pure Religious Liberty' 'declared * * * (all forms of church-state relationships) and their fundamental idea to be oppressions of conscience and abridgments of that liberty which God and nature had conferred on every living soul.'[FN5]

In these cases we have no coercive religious exercise aimed at making the students conform. The prayers announced are not compulsory, though some may think they have that indirect effect because the nonconformist student may be induced to participate for fear of being called an 'oddball.' But that coercion, if it be present, *229 has not been shown; so the vices of the present regimes are different.

These regimes violate the Establishment Clause in two different ways. In each case the State is conducting a religious exercise; and, as the Court holds, that cannot be done without violating the 'neutrality' required of the State by the balance of power between individual, church and state that has been struck by the First Amendment. But the Establishment Clause is not limited to precluding the State itself from conducting religious exercises. It also forbids the State to employ its facilities or funds in a way that gives any church, or all churches, greater strength in our society than it would have by relying on its members alone. Thus, the present regimes must fall under that clause for the additional reason that public funds, though small in amount, are being used to promote a religious exercise. Through the mechanism of the State, all of the people are being required to finance a religious exercise that only some of the people want and that violates the sensibilities of others.

The most effective way to establish any institution is to finance it; and this truth is reflected in the appeals by church groups for public funds to finance their religious schools.[FN6] Financing a church either in its strictly religious activities or in its other activities is equally unconstitutional, as I understand the Establishment Clause. Budgets for one activity may be technically separable from budgets for others.[FN7] But the institution is an inseparable whole, a living organism, which is strengthened in proselytizing when it is strengthened in any department by contributions from other than its own members.

FN6. See II Stokes, op. cit., supra, n. 1, at 681-695.

FN7. See Accountants' Handbook (4th ed. 1956) 4.8-4.15.

*230 Such contributions may not be made by the State even in a minor degree without violating the Establishment Clause. It is not the amount of public funds expended; as this case illustrates, it is the use to which public funds are put that is controlling. For the First Amendment does not say that some forms of establishment are allowed; it says that 'no law respecting an establishment of religion' shall be made. What may not be done directly may not be done indirectly lest the Establishment Clause become a mockery.

Mr. Justice BRENNAN, concurring.

Almost a century and a half ago, John Marshall, In M'Culloch v. Maryland, enjoined: '* * * we must never forget, that it is a constitution we are expounding.' 4 Wheat. 316, 407, 4 L.Ed. 579. The Court's historic duty to expound the meaning of the Constitution has encountered few issues more intricate or more demanding than that of the relationship between religion and the public schools. Since undoubtedly we are 'a religious people whose institutions presuppose a Supreme Being,' 1576Zorach v. Clauson, 343 U.S. 306, 313, 72 S.Ct. 679, 684, 96 L.Ed. 954, deep feelings are aroused when aspects of that relationship are claimed to violate the injunction of the First Amendment that government may make 'no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof * * *.' Americans regard the public schools as a most vital civic institution for the preservation of a democratic system of government. It is therefore understandable that the constitutional prohibitions encounter their severest test when they are sought to be applied in the school classroom. Nevertheless it is this Court's inescapable duty to declare whether exercises in the public schools of the States, such as those of Pennsylvania and Maryland questioned here, are involvements of religion in public institutions of a kind which offends the First and Fourteenth Amendments.

231 When John Locke ventured in 1689, 'I esteem it above all things necessary to distinguish exactly the business of civil government from that of religion and to settle the just bounds that lie between the one and the other,' [FN1] he anticipated the necessity which would be thought by the Framers to require adoption of a First Amendment, but not the difficulty that would be experienced in defining those 'just bounds.' The fact is that the line which separates the secular from the sectarian in American life is elusive. The difficulty of defining the boundary with precision inheres in a paradox central to our scheme of liberty. While our institutions reflect a firm conviction that we are a religious people, those institutions by solemn constitutional injunction may not officially involve religion in such a way as to prefer, discriminate against, or oppress, a particular sect or religion. Equally the Constitution enjoins those involvements of religious with secular institutions which (a) serve the essentially religious activities of religious institutions; (b) employ the organs of government for essentially religious purposes; or (c) use essentially religious means to serve governmental ends where secular means would suffice. The constitutional mandate expresses a deliberate and considered judgment that such matters are to be left to the conscience of the citizen, and declares as a basic postulate of the relation between the citizen and his government that 'the rights of conscience are, in their nature, of peculiar delicacy, and will little bear the gentlest touch of governmental hand * * *.' I join fully in the opinion and the judgment of the Court. I see no escape from the conclusion that the exercises 232 called in question in these two cases violate the constitutional mandate. The reasons we gave only last Term in Engel v. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421, 82 S.Ct. 1261, 8 L.Ed.2d 601, for finding in the New York Regents' prayer an impermissible establishment of religion, compel the same judgment of the practices at bar. The involvement of the secular with the religious is no less intimate here; and it is constitutionally irrelevant that the State has not composed the material for the inspirational exercises presently involved. It should be unnecessary to observe that our holding does not declare that the First Amendment manifests hostility to the practice or teaching of religion, but only applies prohibitions incorporated in the Bill of Rights in recognition of historic needs shared by Church and State alike. While it is my view that not every involvement of religion in public life is unconstitutional, I consider the exercises at bar a form of involvement which clearly violates the Establishment Clause.

The importance of the issue and the deep conviction with which views on *1577 both sides are held seem to me to justify detailing at some length my reasons for joining the Court's judgment and opinion.

I.

The First Amendment forbids both the abridgment of the free exercise of religion and the enactment of laws 'respecting an establishment of religion.' The two clauses, although distinct in their objectives and their applicability, emerged together from a common panorama of history. The inclusion of both restraints upon the power of Congress to legislate concerning religious matters shows unmistakably that the Framers of the First Amendment were not content to rest the protection of religious liberty exclusively upon either clause. 'In assuring the free exercise of religion,' Mr. Justice Frankfurter has said, 233 'the Framers of the First Amendment were sensitive to the then recent history of those persecutions and impositions of civil disability with which sectarian majorities in virtually all of the Colonies had visited deviation in the matter of conscience. This protection of unpopular creeds, however, was not to be the full extent of the Amendment's guarantee of freedom from governmental intrusion in matters of faith. The battle in Virginia, hardly four years won, where James Madison had led the forces of disestablishment in successful opposition to Patrick Henry's proposed Assessment Bill levying a general tax for the support of Christian teachers, was a vital and compelling memory in 1789.' McGowan v. Maryland, 366 U.S. 420, 464-465, 81 S.Ct. 1101, 1155-1156, 6 L.Ed.2d 393.

It is true that the Framers' immediate concern was to prevent the setting up of an official federal church of the kind which England and some of the Colonies had long supported. But nothing in the text of the Establishment Clause supports the view that the prevention of the setting up of an official church was meant to be the full extent of the prohibitions against official involvements in religion. It has rightly been said:

'If the framers of the Amendment meant to prohibit Congress merely from the establishment of a 'church,' one may properly wonder why they didn't so state. That the words church and religion were regarded as synonymous seems highly improbable, particularly in view of the fact that the contemporary state constitutional provisions dealing with the subject of establishment used definite phrases such as 'religious sect,' 'sect,' or 'denomination.' * * * With such specific wording in contemporary state constitutions, why was not a similar wording adopted for the First Amendment if its framers intended to prohibit nothing more than what the States were prohibiting?234 ' Lardner, How Far Does the Constitution Separate Church and State? 45 Am.Pol.Sic.Rev. 110, 112 (1951).

Plainly, the Establishment Clause, in the contemplation of the Framers, 'did not limit the constitutional proscription to any particular, dated form of state-supported theological venture.' 'What Virginia had long practiced, and what Madison, Jefferson and others fought to end, was the extension of civil government's support to religion in a manner which made the two in some degree interdependent, and thus threatened the freedom of each. The purpose of the Establishment Clause was to assure that the national legislature would not exert its power in the service of any purely religious end; that it would not, as Virginia and virtually all of the Colonies had done, make of religion, as religion, an object of legislation. * * * The Establishment Clause withdrew from the sphere of legitimate legislative concern and competence a specific, but comprehensive, area of human conduct: man's belief or disbelief in the verity *1578 of some transcendental idea and man's expression in action of that belief or disbelief.' McGowan v. Maryland, supra, 366 U.S. at 465-466, 81 S.Ct. at 1156-1157 (opinion of Frankfurter, J.).

In sum, the history which our prior decisions have summoned to aid interpretation of the Establishment Clause permits little doubt that its prohibition was designed comprehensively to prevent those official involvements of religion which would tend to foster or discourage religious worship or belief.

But an awareness of history and an appreciation of the aims of the Founding Fathers do not always resolve concrete problems. The specific question before us has, for example, aroused vigorous dispute whether the architects of the First Amendment-James Madison and Thomas Jefferson particularly-understood the prohibition against any 'law respecting an establishment of 235 religion' to reach devotional exercises in the public schools. [FN3] It may be that Jefferson and Madison would have held such exercises to be permissible-although even in Jefferson's case serious doubt is suggested by his admonition against 'putting the Bible and Testament into the hands of the children at an age when their judgments are not sufficiently matured for religious inquiries. * * *'[FN4] But 236 I doubt that their view, even if perfectly clear one way or the other, would supply a dispositive answer to the question presented by these cases. A more fruitful inquiry, it seems to me, is whether the practices here challenged threaten those consequences which the Framers deeply feared; whether, in short, they tend to promote that type of interdependence between religion and state which the First Amendment was designed to prevent.[FN5] Our task is to translate*1579 'the majestic generalities of the Bill of Rights, conceived as part of the pattern of liberal government in the eighteenth century, into concrete restraints on officials 237 dealing with the problems of the twentieth century * * *.' FN4. Jefferson's caveat was in full:

'Instead, therefore, of putting the Bible and Testament into the hands of the children at an age when their judgments are not sufficiently matured for religious inquiries, their memories may here be stored with the most useful facts from Grecian, Roman, European and American history.' 2 Writings of Thomas Jefferson (Memorial ed. 1903), 204.

Compare Jefferson's letter to his nephew, Peter Carr, when the latter was about to begin the study of law, in which Jefferson outlined a suggested course of private study of religion since '(y)our reason is now mature enough to examine this object.' Letter to Peter Carr, August 10, 1787, in Padover, The Complete Jefferson (1943), 1058. Jefferson seems to have opposed sectarian instruction at any level of public education, see Healey, Jefferson on Religion in Public Education (1962), 206-210, 256, 264-265. The absence of any mention of religious instruction in the projected elementary and secondary schools contrasts significantly with Jefferson's quite explicit proposals concerning religious instruction at the University of Virginia. His draft for 'A Bill for the More General Diffusion of Knowledge' in 1779, for example, outlined in some detail the secular curriculum for the public schools, while avoiding any references to religious studies. See Padover, supra, at 1048-1054. The later draft of an 'Act for Establishing Elementary Schools' which Jefferson submitted to the Virginia General Assembly in 1817 provided that 'no religious reading, instruction or exercise, shall be prescribed or practiced inconsistent with the tenets of any religious sect or denomination.' Padover, supra, at 1076. Reliance upon Jefferson's apparent willingness to permit certain religious instruction at the University seems, therefore, to lend little support to such instruction in the elementary and secondary schools. Compare, e.g., Corwin, A Constitution of Powers in a Secular State (1951), 104-106; Costanzo, Thomas Jefferson, Religious Education and Public Law, 8 J.Pub.Law 81, 100-106 (1959).

The problem of Church and State in the United States, (1959) Pub.Law 374. One author has suggested these reasons for cautious application of the history of the constitution's religious guarantees to contemporary problems:

'First, the brevity of Congressional debate and the lack of writings on the question by the framers make any historical argument inconclusive and open to serious question. Second, the amendment was designed to outlaw practices which had existed before its writing, but there is no authoritative declaration of the specific practices at which it was aimed. And third, most of the modern religious-freedom cases turn on issues which were at most academic in 1789 and perhaps did not exist at all. Public education was almost nonexistent in 1789, and the question of religious education in public schools may not have been foreseen.' Beth, The American Theory of Church and State (1958), 88.

A too literal quest for the advice of the Founding Fathers upon the issues of these cases seems to me futile and misdirected for several reasons: First, on our precise problem the historical record is at best ambiguous, and statements can readily be found to support either side of the proposition. The ambiguity of history is understandable if we recall the nature of the problems uppermost in the thinking of the statesmen who fashioned the religious guarantees; they were concerned with far more flagrant intrusions of government into the realm of religion than any that our century has witnessed.[FN6] While it is clear to me that the Framers meant the Establishment Clause to prohibit more than the creation of an established federal church such as existed in England, I have no doubt that, in their preoccupation with the imminent question of established churches, they gave no distinct*238 consideration to the particular question whether the clause also forbade devotional exercises in public institutions.

II; Kruse, The Historical Meaning and Judicial Construction of the Establishment of Religion Clause of the First Amendment, 2 Washburn L.J. 65, 79-83 (1962). Compare also Alexander Hamilton's conception of 'the characteristic difference between a tolerated and established religion' and his grounds of opposition to the latter, in his remarks on the Quebec Bill in 1775, 2 Works of Alexander Hamilton (Hamilton ed. 1850), 133-138. Compare, for the view that contemporary evidence reveals a design of the Framers to forbid not only formal establishment of churches, but various forms of incidental aid to or support of religion, Lardner, How Far Does the Constitution Separate Church and State? 45 Am.Pol.Sci.Rev. 110, 112-115 (1951).

Second, the structure of American education has greatly changed since the First Amendment was adopted. In the context of our modern emphasis upon public education available to all citizens, any views of the eighteenth century as to whether the exercises at bar are an 'establishment' offer little aid to decision. Education,1580 as the Framers knew it, was in the main confined to private schools more often than not under strictly sectarian supervision. Only gradually did control of education pass largely to public officials. [FN7] It would, therefore, *239 hardly be significant if the fact was that the nearly1581 universal devotional exercises in the schools of the young Republic did not provoke criticism; even today religious ceremonies in church-supported private schools are constitutionally unobjectionable.

FN7. The origins of the modern movement for free state-supported education cannot be fixed with precision. In England, the Levellers unavailingly urged in their platform of 1649 the establishment of free primary education for all, or at least for boys. See Brailsford, The Levellers and the English Revolution (1961), 534. In the North American Colonies, education was almost without exception under private sponsorship and supervision, frequently under control of the dominant Protestant sects. This condition prevailed after the Revolution and into the first quarter of the nineteenth century. See generally Mason, Moral Values and Secular Education (1950), c. II; Thayer, The Role of the School in American Society (1960), c. X; Greene, Religion and the State: The Making and Testing of an American Tradition (1941), 120-122. Thus, Virginia's colonial Governor Berkeley exclaimed in 1671: 'I thank God there are no free schools nor printing, and I hope we shall not have them these hundred years; for learning has brought disobedience, and heresy, and sects into the world * * *.' (Emphasis deleted.) Bates, Religious Liberty: An Inquiry (1945), 327.

The exclusively private control of American education did not, however, quite survive Berkeley's expectations. Benjamin Franklin's proposals in 1749 for a Philadelphia Academy heralded the dawn of publicly supported secondary education, although the proposal did not bear immediate fruit. See Johnson and Yost, Separation of Church and State in the United States (1948), 26-27. Jefferson's elaborate plans for a public school system in Virginia came to naught after the defeat in 1796 of his proposed Elementary School Bill, which found little favor among the wealthier legislators. See Bowers, The Young Jefferson (1945), 182-186. It was not until the 1820's and 1830's, under the impetus of Jacksonian democracy, that a system of public education really took root in the United States. See 1 Beard, The Rise of American Civilization (1937), 810-818. One force behind the development of secular public schools may have been a growing dissatisfaction with the tightly sectarian control over private education, see Harner, Religion's Place in General Education (1949), 29-30. Yet the burgeoning public school systems did not immediately supplant the old sectarian and private institutions; Alexis de Tocqueville, for example, remarked after his tour of the Eastern States in 1831 that '(a)lmost all education is entrusted to the clergy.' 1 Democracy in America (Bradley ed. 1945) 309, n. 4. And compare Lord Bryce's observations, a half century later, on the still largely denominational character of American higher education, 2 The American Commonwealth (1933), 734-735.

Efforts to keep the public schools of the early nineteenth century free from sectarian influence were of two kinds. One took the form of constitutional provisions and statutes adopted by a number of States forbidding appropriations from the public treasury for the support of religious instruction in any manner. See Moehlman, The Wall of Separation Between Church and State (1951), 132-135; Lardner, How Far Does the Constitution Separate Church and State? 45 Am.Pol.Sci.Rev. 110, 122 (1951). The other took the form of measures directed against the use of sectarian reading and teaching materials in the schools. The texts used in the earliest public schools had been largely taken over from the private academies, and retained a strongly religious character and content. See Nichols, Religion and American Democracy (1959), 64-80; Kinney, Church and State, The Struggle for Separation in New Hampshire, 1630-1900 (1955), 150-153. In 1827, however, Massachusetts enacted a statute providing that school boards might not thereafter 'direct any school books to be purchased or used, in any of the schools * * * which are calculated to favour any particular religious sect or tenet.' 2 Stokes, Church and State in the United States (1950), 53. For further discussion of the background of the Massachusetts law and difficulties in its early application, see Dunn, What Happened to Religious Education? (1958), c. IV. As other States followed the example of Massachusetts, the use of sectarian texts was in time as widely prohibited as the appropriation of public funds for religious instruction.

Concerning the evolution of the American public school systems free of sectarian influence, compare Mr. Justice Frankfurter's account:

'It is pertinent to remind that the establishment of this principle of Separation in the field of education was not due to any decline in the religious beliefs of the people. Horace Mann was a devout Christian, and the deep religious feeling of James Madison is stamped upon the Remonstrance. The secular public school did not imply indifference to the basic role of religion in the life of the people, nor rejection of religious education as a means of fostering it. The claims of religion were not minimized by refusing to make the public schools agencies for their assertion. The non-sectarian or secular public school was the means of reconciling freedom in general with religious freedom. The sharp confinement of the public schools of secular education was a recognition of the need of a democratic society to educate its children, insofar as the State undertook to do so, in an atmosphere free from pressures in a realm in which pressures are most resisted and where conflicts are most easily and most bitterly engendered.' Illinois ex rel. McCollum v. Board of Education, 333 U.S. 203, 216, 68 S.Ct. 461, 467, 92 L.Ed. 648.

240 Third, our religious composition makes us a vastly more diverse people than were our forefathers. They knew differences chiefly among Protestant sects. Today the Nation is far more heterogeneous religiously, including as it does substantial minorities not only of Catholics and Jews but as well of those who worship according to no version of the Bible and those who worship no God at all.[FN8] 241 See Torcaso v. Watkins, 367 U.S. 488, 495, 81 S.Ct. 1680, 1683, 6 L.Ed.2d 982. In the face of such profound changes, practices which may have been objectionable to no one in the time of Jefferson and Madison may today be highly offensive to many persons, the deeply devout and the nonbelievers alike.

> FN8. The comparative religious homogeneity of the United States at the time the Bill of Rights was adopted has been considered in Haller, The Puritan Background of the First Amendment, in Read ed., The Constitution Reconsidered (1938), 131, 133-134; Beth, The American Theory of Church and State (1958), 74; Kinney, Church and State, The Struggle for Separation in New Hampshire, 1630-1900 (1955), 155-161. However, Madison suggested in the Fifty-first Federalist that the religious diversity which existed at the time of the Constitutional Convention constituted a source of strength for religious freedom, much as the multiplicity of economic and political interests enhanced the security of other civil rights. The Federalist (Cooke ed. 1961), 351-352.

Whatever Jefferson or Madison would have thought of Bible reading or the recital of the Lord's Prayer in what few public schools existed in their day, our use of the history of their time must limit itself to broad purposes, not specific practices. By such a standard, I am persuaded, as is the Court, that the devotional exercises carried on in the Baltimore and Abington schools offend the First Amendment because they sufficiently threaten in our day those substantive evils the fear of which called forth the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment. It is 'a constitution we are expounding,' and our interpretation of the First Amendment must necessarily be responsive to the much more highly charged nature of religious questions in contemporary society.

Fourth, the American experiment in free public education available to all children has been guided in large measure by the dramatic evolution of the religious diversity among the population which our public schools serve. The interaction of these two important forces in our national life has placed in bold relief certain positive values in the consistent application to public institutions generally, and public schools particularly, of the constitutional decree against offical involvements of religion which might produce the evils the Framers meant the Establishment*1582 Clause to forestall. The public schools are supported entirely, in most communities, by public funds-funds exacted not only from parents, nor alone from those who hold particular religious views, nor indeed from those who subscribe to any creed at all. It is implicit in the history and character of American public education that the public schools serve a uniquely 242 public function: the training of American citizens in an atmosphere free of parochial, divisive, or separatist influences of any sort-an atmosphere in which children may assimilate a heritage common to all American groups and religions. See Illinois ex rel. McCollum v. Board of Education, 333 U.S. 203, 68 S.Ct. 461, 92 L.Ed. 648. This is a heritage neither theistic nor atheistic, but simply civic and patriotic. See Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390, 400-403, 43 S.Ct. 625, 627-628, 67 L.Ed. 1042.

Attendance at the public schools has never been compulsory; parents remain morally and constitutionally free to choose the academic environment in which they wish their children to be educated. The relationship of the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment to the public school system is preeminently that of reserving such a choice to the individual parent, rather than vesting it in the majority of voters of each State or school district. The choice which is thus preserved is between a public secular education with its uniquely democratic values, and some form of private or sectarian education, which offers values of its own. In my judgment the First Amendment forbids the State to inhibit that freedom of choice by diminishing the attractiveness of either alternative-either by restricting the liberty of the private schools to inculcate whatever values they wish, or by jeopardizing the freedom of the public schools from private or sectarian pressures. The choice between these very different forms of education is one-very much like the choice of whether or not to worship-which our Constitution leaves to the individual parent. It is no proper function of the state or local government to influence or restrict that election. The lesson of history-drawn more from the experiences of other countries than from our own-is that a system of free public education forfeits its unique contribution to the growth of democratic citizenship when that choice ceases to be freely available to each parent.

243 II.

The exposition by this Court of the religious guarantees of the First Amendment has consistently reflected and reaffirmed the concerns which impelled the Framers to write those guarantees into the Constitution. It would be neither possible nor appropriate to review here the entire course of our decisions on religious questions. There emerge from those decisions, however, three principles of particular relevance to the issue presented by the case at bar, and some attention to those decisions is therefore appropriate.

First. On line of decisions derives from contests for control of a church property or other internal ecclesiastical disputes. This line has settled the proposition that in order to give effect to the First Amendment's purpose of requiring on the part of all organs of government a strict neutrality toward theological questions, courts should not undertake to decide such questions. These principles were first expounded in the case of Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 679, 20 L.Ed. 666, which declared that judicial intervention in such a controversy would open up 'the whole subject of the doctrinal theology, the usages and customs, the written laws, and fundamental organization of every religious denomination * * *.' 13 Wall., at 733. Courts above all must be neutral, for '(t)he law knows no heresy, and is committed to the support of no *1583 dogma, the establishment of no sect.'[FN9] 13 Wall., at 728. This principle has recently244 been reaffirmed in Kedroff v. St. Nicholas Cathedral, 344 U.S. 94, 73 S.Ct. 143, 97 L.Ed. 120; and Kreshik v. St. Nicholas Cathedral, 363 U.S. 190, 80 S.Ct. 1037, 4 L.Ed.2d 1140.

FN9. See Comment, The Power of Courts Over the Internal Affairs of Religious Groups, 43 Calif.L.Rev. 322 (1955); Comment, Judicial Intervention in Disputes Within Independent Church Bodies, 54 Mich.L.Rev. 102 (1955); Note, Judicial Intervention in Disputes Over the Use of Church Property, 75 Harv.L.Rev. 1142 (1962). Compare Vidal v. Girard's Executors, 2 How. 127, 11 L.Ed. 205. The principle of judicial nonintervention in essentially religious disputes appears to have been reflected in the decisions of several state courts declining to enforce essentially private agreements concerning the religious education and worship of children of separated or divorced parents. See, e.g., Hackett v. Hackett, Ohio App., 150 N.E.2d 431; Stanton v. Stanton, 213 Ga. 545, 100 S.E.2d 289, 66 A.L.R.2d 1401; Friedman, The Parental Right to Control the Religious Education of a Child, 29 Harv.L.Rev. 485 (1915); 72 Harv.L.Rev. 372 (1958); Note, 10 West.Res.L.Rev. 171 (1959).

Governmental nonintervention in religious affairs and institutions seems assured by Article 26 of the Constitution of India, which provides:

'Subject to public order, morality and health, every religious denomination or any section thereof shall have the right-

'(a) to establish and maintain institutions for religious and charitable purposes;

'(b) to manage its own affairs in matters of religion;

'(c) to own and acquire movable and immovable property; and

'(d) to administer such property in accordance with law.' See 1 Chaudhri, Constitutional Rights and Limitations (1955), 875. This Article does not, however, appear to have completely foreclosed judicial inquiry into the merits of intradenominational disputes. See Gledhill, Fundamental Rights in India (1955), 101-102.

The mandate of judicial neutrality in theological controversies met its severest test in United States v. Ballard, 322 U.S. 78, 64 S.Ct. 882, 88 L.Ed. 1148. That decision put in sharp relief certain principles which bear directly upon the questions presented in these cases. Ballard was indicted for fraudulent use of the mails in the dissemination of religious literature. He requested that the trial court submit to the jury the question of the truthfulness of the religious views he championed. The requested charge was refused, and we upheld that refusal, reasoning that the First Amendment foreclosed any judicial inquiry into the truth or falsity of the defendant's religious beliefs. We said: 'Man's relation to his God was made no concern of the state. He was granted the right to worship was he pleased and to answer to no man for the verity of his religious views.' 'Men may believe what they cannot 245 prove. They may not be put to the proof of their religious doctrines or beliefs. * * * Many take their gospel from the New Testament. But it would hardly be supposed that they could be tried before a jury charged with the duty of determining whether those teachings contained false representations.' 322 U.S., at 86-87, 64 S.Ct., at 886-887.

The dilemma presented by the case was severe. While the alleged truthfulness of nonreligious publications could ordinarily have been submitted to the jury, Ballard was deprived of that defense only because the First Amendment forbids governmental inquiry into the verity of religious beliefs. In dissent Mr. Justice Jackson expressed the concern that under this construction of the First Amendment '(p)rosecutions of this character easily could degenerate into religious persecution.' 322 U.S., at 95, 64 S.Ct., at 890. The case shows how elusive is the line which enforces the Amendment's injunction of strict neutrality, while manifesting no official hostility toward religion-a line which must be considered in the cases now before us.[FN10] Some might view the result of the Ballard case as a manifestation of hostility*1584 -in that the conviction stood because the defense could not be raised. To others it 246 might represent merely strict adherence to the principle of neutrality already expounded in the cases involving doctrinal disputes. Inevitably, insistence upon neutrality, vital as it surely is for untrammeled religious liberty, may appear to border upon religious hostility. But in the long view the independence of both church and state in their respective spheres will be better served by close adherence to the neutrality principle. If the choice is often difficult, the difficulty is endemic to issues implicating the religious guarantees of the First Amendment. Freedom of religion will be seriously jeopardized if we admit exceptions for no better reason than the difficulty of delineating hostility from neutrality in the closest cases.

> FN10. For a discussion of the difficulties inherent in the Ballard case, see Kurland, Religion and the Law (1962), 75-79. This Court eventually reversed the convictions on the quite unrelated ground that women had been systematically excluded from the jury, Ballard v. United States, 329 U.S. 187, 67 S.Ct. 261, 91 L.Ed. 181. For discussions of the difficulties in interpreting and applying the First Amendment so as to foster to objective of neutrality without hostility, see e.g., Katz, Freedom of Religion and State Neutrality, 20 U. of Chi.L.Rev. 426, 438 (1953); Kauper, Church, State, and Freedom: A Review, 52 Mich.L.Rev. 829, 842 (1954). Compare, for an interesting apparent attempt to avoid the Ballard problem at the international level, Article 3 of the Multilateral Treaty between the United States and certain American Republics, which provides that extradition will not be granted, inter alia, when 'the offense is * * * directed against religion.' Blakely, American State Papers and Related Documents on Freedom in Religion (4th rev. ed. 1949), 316.

Second. It is only recently that our decisions have dealt with the question whether issues arising under the Establishment Clause may be isolated from problems implicating the Free Exercise Clause. Everson v. Board of Education, 330 U.S. 1, 67 S.Ct. 504, 91 L.Ed. 711, is in my view the first of our decisions which treats a problem of asserted unconstitutional involvement as raising questions purely under the Establishment Clause. A scrutiny of several earlier decisions said by some to have etched the contours of the clause shows that such cases neither raised nor decided any constitutional issues under the First Amendment. Bradfield v. Roberts, 175 U.S. 291, 20 S.Ct. 121, 44 L.Ed. 168, for example, involved challenges to a federal grant to a hospital administered by a Roman Catholic order. The Court rejected the claim for lack of evidence that any sectarian influence changed its character as a secular institution chartered as such by the Congress.[FN11]

> FN11. See Kurland, Religion and the Law (1962), 32-34.

Quick Bear v. Leupp, 210 U.S. 50, 28 S.Ct. 690, 52 L.Ed. 954, is also illustrative. The immediate question there was one of statutory construction, although the issue had originally involved the 247 constitutionality of the use of federal funds to support sectarian education on Indian reservations. Congress had already prohibited federal grants for that purpose, thereby removing the broader issue, leaving only the question whether the statute authorized the appropriation for religious teaching of Treaty funds held by the Government in trust for the Indians. Since these were the Indians' own funds, the Court held only that the Indians might direct their use for such educational purposes as they chose, and that the administration by the Treasury of the disbursement of the funds did not inject into the case any issue of the propriety of the use of federal moneys.[FN12] *1585 Indeed, the Court expressly approved the reasoning of the Court of Appeals that to deny the Indians the right to spend their own moneys for religious purposes of their choice might well infringe the free exercise of their religion: 'it seems inconceivable that Congress (should) have intended to prohibit them from receiving religious education at their own cost if they so desired it * * *.' 210 U.S., at 82, 28 S.Ct., at 700. This case forecast, however, an increasingly troublesome First Amendment paradox: that the logical interrelationship between the Establishment and Free Exercise Clauses may produce situations where an injunction against an apparent establishment must be withheld in order to avoid infringement of rights of free exercise. That paradox was not squarely presented in Quick Bear, but the care taken by the Court 248 to avoid a constitutional confrontation discloses an awareness of possible conflicts between the two clauses. I shall come back to this problem later, infra, pp. 1610-1612.

> FN12. Compare the treatment of an apparently very similar problem in Article 28 of the Constitution of India:
> '(1) No religious instruction shall be provided in any educational institution wholly maintained out of State funds.
> '(2) Nothing in clause (1) shall apply to an educational institution which is administered by the State but has been established under any endowment or trust which requires that religious instruction shall be imparted in such institution.' 1 Chaudhri, Constitutional Rights and Limitations (1955), 875-876, 939.

A third case in this group is Cochran v. Louisiana State Board, 281 U.S. 370, 50 S.Ct. 335, 74 L.Ed. 913, which involved a challenge to a state statute providing public funds to support a loan of free textbooks to pupils of both public and private schools. The constitutional issues in this Court extended no further than the claim that this program amounted to a taking of private property for nonpublic use. The Court rejected the claim on the ground that no private use of property was involved; '* * * we cannot doubt that the taxing power of the State is exerted for a public purpose.' 281 U.S., at 375, 50 S.Ct., at 336. The case therefore raised no issue under the First Amendment. [FN13] > FN13. See Kurland, Religion and the Law (1962), 28-31; Fellman, Separation of Church and State in the United States: A Summary View, 1950 Wis.L.Rev. 427, 442.

In Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 45 S.Ct. 571, 69 L.Ed. 1070, a Catholic parochial school and a private but nonsectarian military academy challenged a state law requiring all children between certain ages to attend the public schools. This Court held the law invalid as an arbitrary and unreasonable interference both with the rights of the schools and with the liberty of the parents of the children who attended them. The due process guarantee of the Fourteenth Amendment 'excludes any general power of the State to standardize its children by forcing them to accept instruction from public teachers only.' 268 U.S., at 535, 45 S.Ct., at 573. While one of the plaintiffs was indeed a parochial school, the case obviously decided no First Amendment question but recognized only the constitutional right to establish and patronize private schools-including parochial schools-which meet the state's reasonable minimum curricular requirements.

249 Third. It is true, as the Court says, that the 'two clauses (Establishment and Free Exercise) may overlap.' Because of the overlap, however, our decisions under the Free Exercise Clause bear considerable relevance to the problem now before us, and should be briefly reviewed. The early free exercise cases generally involved the objections of religious minorities to the application to them of general nonreligious legislation governing conduct. Reynolds v. United States, 98 U.S. 145, 25 L.Ed. 244, involved the claim that a belief in the sanctity of plural marriage precluded the conviction of members of a particular sect under nondiscriminatory legislation against such marriage. The Court rejected the claim,

'Laws are made for the government of actions, and while they cannot interfere with mere religious beliefs and opinions, they may with practices.1586 * * * Can a man excuse his practices to the contrary because of his religious belief? To permit this would be to make the professed doctrines of religious belief superior to the law of the land, and in effect to permit every citizen to become a law unto himself. Government could exist only in name under such circumstances.[FN14] 98 U.S., at 166-167.

FN14. This distinction, implicit in the First Amendment, had been made explicit in the original Virginia Bill of Rights provision that 'all men should enjoy the fullest toleration in the exercise of religion according to the dictates of conscience, unpunished and unrestrained by the magistrate, unless under color of religion any man disturb the peace, the happiness, or safety of society.' See Cobb, The Rise of Religious Liberty in America (1902), 491. Concerning various legislative limitations and restraints upon religiously motivated behavior which endangers or offends society, see Manwaring, Render Unto Caesar: The Flag-Salute Controversy (1962), 41-52. Various courts have applied this principle to proscribe certain religious exercises or activities which were thought to threaten the safety or morals of the participants or the rest of the community, e.g., State v. Massey, 229 N.C. 734, 51 S.E.2d 179; Harden v. State, 188 Tenn. 17, 216 S.W.2d 708; Lawson v. Commonwealth, 291 Ky. 437, 164 S.W.2d 972; cf. Sweeney v. Webb, 33 Tex.Civ.App. 324, 76 S.W. 766.

That the principle of these cases, and the distinction between belief and behavior, are susceptible of perverse application, may be suggested by Oliver Cromwell's mandate to the besieged Catholic community in Ireland:

'As to freedom of conscience, I meddle with no man's conscience; but if you mean by that, liberty to celebrate the Mass, I would have you understand that in no place where the power of the Parliament of England prevails shall that be permitted.' Quoted in Hook, The Paradoxes of Freedom (1962), 23.

250 Davis v. Beason, 133 U.S. 333, 10 S.Ct. 299, 33 L.Ed. 637, similarly involved the claim that the First Amendment insulated from civil punishment certain practices inspired or motivated by religious beliefs. The claim was easily rejected: 'It was never intended or supposed that the amendment could be invoked as a protection against legislation for the punishment of acts inimical to the peace, good order, and morals of society.' 133 U.S., at 342, 10 S.Ct., at 300. See also Mormon Church v. United States, 136 U.S. 1, 10 S.Ct. 792, 34 L.Ed. 481; Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11, 25 S.Ct. 358, 49 L.Ed. 643; Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 64 U.S. 438, 88 L.Ed. 645; Cleveland v. United States, 329 U.S. 14, 67 S.Ct. 13, 91 L.Ed. 12.

But we must not confuse the issue of governmental power to regulate or prohibit conduct motivated by religious beliefs with the quite different problem of governmental authority to compel behavior offensive to religious principles. In Hamilton v. Regents of the University of California, 293 U.S. 245, 55 S.Ct. 197, 79 L.Ed. 343, the question was that of the power of a State to compel students at the State University to participate in military training instruction against their religious convictions. The validity of the statute was sustained against claims based upon the First Amendment. But the decision rested on a very narrow principle: since there was neither a constitutional right nor a legal obligation to attend the State University, the obligation to participate in military training courses, 251 reflecting a legitimate state interest, might properly be imposed upon those who chose to attend. Although the rights protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments were presumed to include 'the right to entertain the beliefs, to adhere to the principles and to teach the doctrines on which these students base their objections to the order prescribing military training,' those Amendments were construed not to free such students from the military training obligations if they chose to attend the University. Justices Brandeis, Cardozo and Stone, concurring separately, agreed that the requirement infringed no constitutionally protected liberties. They added, however, that the case presented no question 1587 under the Establishment Clause. The military instruction program was not an establishment since it in no way involved 'instruction in the practice or tenets of a religion.' 293 U.S., at 266, 55 S.Ct., at 206. Since the only question was one of free exercise, they concluded, like the majority, that the strong state interest in training a citizen militia justified the restraints imposed, at least so long as attendance at the University was voluntary. [FN15]

FN15. With respect to the decision in Hamilton v. Regents, compare two recent comments: Kurland, Religion and the Law (1962), 40; and French, Comment, Unconstitutional Conditions: An Analysis, 50 Geo.L.J. 234, 236 (1961).

Hamilton has not been overruled, although United States v. Schwimmer, 279 U.S. 644, 49 S.Ct. 448, 73 L.Ed. 889, and United States v. Macintosh, 283 U.S. 605, 51 S.Ct. 570, 75 L.Ed. 1302, upon which the Court in Hamilton relied, have since been overruled by Girouard v. United States, 328 U.S. 61, 66 S.Ct. 826, 90 L.Ed. 1084. But if Hamilton retains any vitality with respect to higher education, we recognized its inapplicability to cognate questions in the public primary and secondary schools when we held in West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette, supra, that a State had no power to expel from public schools students who refused on religious grounds to comply with a daily flag 252 salute requirement. Of course, such a requirement was no more a law 'respecting an establishment of religion' than the California law compelling the college students to take military training. The Barnette plaintiffs, moreover, did not ask that the whole exercise be enjoined, but only that an excuse or exemption be provided for those students whose religious beliefs forbade them to participate in the ceremony. The key to the holding that such a requirement abridged rights of free exercise lay in the fact that attendance at school was not voluntary but compulsory. The Court said:

'This issue is not prejudiced by the Court's previous holding that where a State, without compelling attendance, extends college facilities to pupils who voluntarily enroll, it may prescribe military training as part of the course without offense to the Constitution. * * * Hamilton v. Regents, 293 U.S. 245, 55 S.Ct. 197, 79 L.Ed. 343. In the present case attendance is not optional.' 319 U.S., at 631-632, 63 S.Ct., at 1182.

The Barnette decision made another significant point. The Court held that the State must make participation in the exercise voluntary for all students and not alone for those who found participation obnoxious on religious grounds. In short, there was simply no need to 'inquire whether non-conformist beliefs will exempt from the duty to salute' because the Court found no state 'power to make the salute a legal duty.' 319 U.S., at 635, 63 S.Ct., at 1184.

The distinctions between Hamilton and Barnette are, I think, crucial to the resolution of the cases before us. The different results of those cases are attributable only in part to a difference in the strength of the particular state interests which the respective statutes were designed to serve. Far more significant is the fact that Hamilton dealt with the voluntary attendance at college of young adults, while Barnette involved the compelled attendance 253 of young children at elementary and secondary schools.[FN16] This distinction warrants a difference in constitutional results. And it is with the involuntary attendance of young school *1588 children that we are exclusively concerned in the cases now before the Court.

FN16. See generally as to the background and history of the Barnette case, Manwaring, Render Unto Caesar: The Flag-Salute Controversy (1962), especially at 252-253. Compare, for the interesting treatment of a problem similar to that of Barnette, in a nonconstitutional context, Chabot v. III.

No one questions that the Framers of the First Amendment intended to restrict exclusively the powers of the Federal Government.[FN17] Whatever limitations that Amendment now imposes upon the States derive from the Fourteenth Amendment. The process of absorption of the religious guarantees of the First Amendment as protections against the States under the Fourteenth Amendment began with the Free Exercise Clause. In 1923 the Court held that the protections of the Fourteenth included at least a person's freedom 'to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience * * *.'[FN18]

Buckley, 20 How. 84, 89-91, 15 L.Ed. 816. As early as 1825, however, at least one commentator argued that the guarantees of the Bill of Rights, excepting only those of the First and Seventh Amendments, were meant to limit the powers of the States. Rawle, A View of the Constitution of the United States of America (1825), 120-130.

FN18. In addition to the statement of this Court in Meyer, at least one state court assumed as early as 1921 that claims of abridgment of the free exercise of religion in the public schools must be tested under the guarantees of the First Amendment as well as those of the state constitution. Hardwick v. Board of School Trustees, 54 Cal.App. 696, 704-705, 205 P. 49, 52. See Louisell and Jackson, Religion, Theology, and Public Higher Education, 50 Cal.L.Rev. 751, 772 (1962). Even before the Fourteenth Amendment, New York State enacted a general common school law in 1844 which provided that no religious instruction should be given which could be construed to violate the rights of conscience 'as secured by the constitution of this state and the United States.' N.Y.Laws, 1844, c. 320, s 12.

Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390, 399, 43 S.Ct. 625, 626, 67 L.Ed. 1042. See also Hamilton v. Regents, supra, 293 U.S., at 262, 55 S.Ct., at 204. Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 60 S.Ct. 900, 84 L.Ed. 1213, completed in 1940 the process of absorption 254 of the Free Exercise Clause and recognized its dual aspect: the Court affirmed freedom of belief as as absolute liberty, but recognized that conduct, while it may also be comprehended by the Free Exercise Clause, 'remains subject to regulation for the protection of society.' 310 U.S., at 303-304, 60 S.Ct., at 903. This was a distinction already drawn by Reynolds v. United States, supra. From the beginning this Court has recognized that while government may regulate the behavioral manifestations of religious beliefs, it may not interfere at all with the beliefs themselves.

The absorption of the Establishment Clause has, however, come later and by a route less easily charted. It has been suggested, with some support in history, that absorption of the First Amendment's ban against congressional legislation 'respecting an establishment of religion' is conceptually impossible because the Framers meant the Establishment Clause also to foreclose any attempt by Congress to disestablish the existing official state churches. FN19 Whether or not such was the *1589 understanding of the Framers and whether such a purpose would have inhibited the absorption of the Establishment Clause at the threshold of the Nineteenth Century are questions not dispositive of our present inquiry. For it is 255 clear on the record of history that the last of the formal state establishments was dissolved more than three decades before the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified, and thus the problem of protecting official state churches from federal encroachments could hardly have been any concern of those who framed the post-Civil War Amendments. FN20 Any such objective of the First Amendment, having become historical anachronism by 1868, cannot be thought to have deterred the absorption of the Establishment Clause to any greater degree than it would, for example, have deterred the absorption of the Free Exercise Clause. That no organ of the Federal Government possessed in 1791 any power to restrain the interference of the States in religious matters is indisputable. See Permoli v. New Orleans, 3 How. 589, 11 L.Ed. 739. It is equally plain, on the other hand, that the Fourteenth Amendment created a panoply of new federal rights for the protection of citizens of the various States. And among those rights was freedom from such state governmental involvement in the affairs of religion as the Establishment Clause had originally foreclosed on the part of Congress.

able to include among the enumerated powers of the Congress a power 'to establish an University, in which no preferences or distinctions should be allowed on account of religion.' At least one delegate thought such an explicit delegation 'is not necessary,' for '(t)he exclusive power at the Seat of Government, will reach the object.' The proposal was defeated by only two votes. 2 Farrand, Records of the Federal Convention of 1787 (1911), 616.

FN20. The last formal establishment, that of Massachusetts, was dissolved in 1833. The process of disestablishment in that and other States is described in Cobb, The Rise of Religious Liberty in America (1902), c. X; Sweet, The Story of Religion in America (1950), c. XIII. The greater relevance of conditions existing at the time of adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment is suggested in Note, State Sunday Laws and the Religious Guarantees of the Federal Constitution, 73 Harv.L.Rev. 729, 739, n. 79 (1960).

256 It has also been suggested that the 'liberty' guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment logically cannot absorb the Establishment Clause because that clause is not one of the provisions of the Bill of Rights which in terms protects a 'freedom' of the individual. See Corwin, A Constitution of Powers in a Secular State (1951), 113-116. The fallacy in this contention, I think, is that it underestimates the role of the Establishment Clause as a coguarantor, with the Free Exercise Clause, of religious liberty. The Framers did not entrust the liberty of religious beliefs to either clause alone. The Free Exercise Clause 'was not to be the full extent of the Amendment's guarantee of freedom from governmental intrusion in matters of faith.' McGowan v. Maryland, supra, 366 U.S., at 464, 81 S.Ct., at 1156 (opinion of Frankfurter, J.).

Finally, it has been contended that absorption of the Establishment Clause is precluded by the absence of any intention on the part of the Framers of the Fourteenth Amendment to circumscribe the residual powers of the States to aid religious activities and institutions in ways which fell short of formal establishments.[FN21] That argument relies in part upon the express terms of the 257 abortive *1590 Blaine Amendment-proposed several years after the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment-which would have added to the First Amendment a provision that '(n)o State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion * * *.' Such a restriction would have been superfluous, it is said, if the Fourteenth Amendment had already made the Establishment Clause binding upon the States.

FN21. See Corwin, A Constitution of Powers in a Secular State (1951), 111-114; Fairman and Morrison, Does the Fourteenth Amendment Incorporate the Bill of Rights? 2 Stan.L.Rev. 5 (1949); Meyer, Comment, The Blaine Amendment and the Bill of Rights, 64 Harv.L.Rev. 939 (1951); Howe, Religion and Race in Public Education, 8 Buffalo L.Rev. 242, 245-247 (1959). Cf. Cooley, Principles of Constitutional Law (2d ed. 1891), 213-214. Compare Professor Freund's comment:

'Looking back, it is hard to see how the Court could have done otherwise, how it could have persisted in accepting freedom of contract as a guaranteed liberty without giving equal status to freedom of press and speech, assembly, and religious observance. What does not seem so inevitable is the inclusion within the Fourteenth Amendment of the concept of non-establishment of religion in the sense of forbidding nondiscriminatory aid to religion, where there is no interference with freedom of religious exercise.' Freund, The Supreme Court of the United States (1961), 58-59.

The argument proves too much, for the Fourteenth Amendment's protection of the free exercise of religion can hardly be questioned; yet the Blaine Amendment would also have added an explicit protection against state laws abriding that liberty.[FN22] Even if we assume that the draftsmen of the Fourteenth Amendment saw no immediate connection between its protections against state action infringing personal liberty and the guarantees of the First Amendment, it is certainly too late in the day to suggest that their assumed inattention to the question dilutes the force of these constitutional guarantees in their application to the States.[FN23] It is enough to conclude *1591 *258 that the religious liberty embodied in the Fourteenth Amendment would not be viable if the Constitution were interpreted to forbid only establishments ordained by Congress.[FN24]

FN22. The Blaine Amendment, 4 Cong.Rec. 5580, included also a more explicit provision that 'no money raised by taxation in any State for the support of public schools or derived from any public fund therefor, nor any public lands devoted thereto, shall ever be under the control of any religious sect or denomination * * .' The Amendment passed the House but failed to obtain the requisite two-thirds vote in the Senate. See 4 Cong.Rec. 5595. The prohibition which the Blaine Amendment would have engrafted onto the American Constitution has been incorporated in the constitutions of other nations; compare Article 28(1) of the Constitution of India ('No religious instruction shall be provided in any educational institution wholly maintained out of State funds'); Article XX of the Constitution of Japan (' * * the State and its organs shall refrain from religious education or any other religious activity'). See 1 Chaudhri, Constitutional Rights and Limitations (1955), 875, 876.

FN23. Three years after the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment, Mr. Justice Bradley wrote a letter expressing his views on a proposed constitutional amendment designed to acknowledge the dependence of the Nation upon God, and to recognize the Bible as the foundation of its laws and the supreme ruler of its conduct:

'I have never been able to see the necessity or expediency of the movement for obtaining such an amendment. The Constitution was evidently framed and adopted by the people of the United States with the Fixed determination to allow absolute religious freedom and equality, and to avoid all appearance even of a State religion, or a State endorsement of any particular creed or religious sect. * * * And after the Constitution in its original form was adopted, the people made haste to secure an amendment that Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment or religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. This shows the earnest desire of our Revolutionary fathers that religion should be left to the free and voluntary action of the people themselves. I do not regard it as manifesting any hostility to religion, but as showing a fixed determination to leave the people entirely free on the subject.

'And it seems to me that our fathers were wise; that the great voluntary system of this country is quite as favorable to the promotion of real religion as the systems of governmental protection and patronage have been in other countries. And whilst I do not understand that the association which you represent desire to invoke any governmental interference, still the amendment sought is a step in that direction which our fathers (quite as good Christians as ourselves) thought it wise not to take. In this country they thought they had settled one thing at least, that it is not the province of government to teach theology.

'* * * Religion, as the basis and support of civil government, must reside, not in the written Constitution, but in the people themselves. And we cannot legislate religion into the people. It must be infused by gentler and wiser methods.' Miscellaneous Writings of Joseph P. Bradley (1901), 357-359. For a later phase of the controversy over such a constitutional amendment as that which Justice Bradley opposed, see Finlator, Christ in Congress, 4 J.Church and State 205 (1962).

FN24. There is no doubt that, whatever 'establishment' may have meant to the Framers of the First Amendment in 1791, the draftsmen of the Fourteenth Amendment three quarters of a century later understood the Establishment Clause to foreclose many incidental forms of governmental aid to religion which fell far short of the creation or support of an official church. The Report of a Senate Committee as early as 1853, for example, contained this view of the Establishment Clause:

'If Congress has passed, or should pass, any law which, fairly construed, has in any degree introduced, or should attempt to introduce, in favor of any church, or ecclesiastical association, or system of religious faith, all or any one of these obnoxious particulars-endowment at the public expense, peculiar privileges to its members, or disadvantages or penalties upon those who should reject its doctrines or belong to other communions-such law would be a 'law respecting an establishment of religion,' and, therefore, in violation of the constitution.' S.Rep. No. 376, 32d Cong., 2d Sess. 1-2.

Compare Thomas M. Cooley's exposition in the year in which the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified:

'Those things which are not lawful under any of the American constitutions may be stated thus:-

'1. Any law respecting an establishment of religion. * * *

'2. Compulsory support, by taxation or otherwise, of religious instruction. Not only is no one denomination to be favored at the expense of the rest, but all support of religious instruction must be entirely voluntary.' Cooley, Constitutional Limitations (1st ed. 1868), 469.

259 The issue of what particular activities the Establishment Clause forbids the States to undertake is our more immediate concern. In Everson v. Board of Education of Ewing Tp., 330 U.S. 1, 15-16, 67 S.Ct. 504, 91 L.Ed. 711, a careful study of the relevant history led the Court to the view, consistently recognized in decisions since Everson, that the Establishment Clause embodied the Framers' conclusion that government and religion have discreet interests which are mutually best served when each avoids too close a proximity to the other. It is not only the nonbeliever who fears the injection of sectarian doctrines and controversies into the civil polity, but in as high degree it is the devout believer who fears the secularization of a creed which becomes too deeply involved with and dependent upon the government.[FN25] It 260 has rightly been said of the history of the Establishment Clause that 'our tradition of civil liberty rests not only on the secularism of a Thomas Jefferson but also on the fervent sectarianism * * * of a Roger Williams.' Freund, The Supreme Court of the United States (1961), 84.

FN25. Compare, e.g., Miller, Roger Williams: His Contribution to the American Tradition (1953), 83, with Madison, Memorial and Remonstrance Against Religious Assessments, reprinted as an Appendix to the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Rutledge, Everson v. Board of Education, supra, 330 U.S. at 63-72, 67 S.Ct. at 534-538. See also Cahn, On Government and Prayer, 37 N.Y.U.L.Rev. 981, 982-985 (1962); Jefferson's Bill for Establishing Religious Freedom, in Padover, The Complete Jefferson (1943), 946-947; Moulton and Myers, Report on Appointing Chaplains to the Legislature of New York, in Blau, Cornerstones of Religious Freedom in America (1949), 141-156; Bury, A History of Freedom of Thought (2d ed. 1952), 75-76.

Our decisions on questions of religious education or exercises in the public schools have consistently reflected this dual aspect of the Establishment Clause. Engel v. Vitale unmistakably has its roots in three earlier cases which, on cognate issues, shaped the contours of the Establishment Clause. First, in Everson the Court held that reimbursement by the town of parents for the cost of transporting their children by public carrier to *1592 parochial (as well as public and private nonsectarian) schools did not offend the Establishment Clause. Such reimbursement, by easing the financial burden upon Catholic parents, may indirectly have fostered the operation of the Catholic schools, and may thereby indirectly have facilitated the teaching of Catholic principles, thus serving ultimately a religious goal. But this form of governmental assistance was difficult to distinguish from myriad other incidental if not insignificant government benefits enjoyed by religious institutions-fire and police protection, tax exemptions, and the pavement of streets and sidewalks, for example. 'The State contributes no money to the schools. It does not support them. Its legislation, as applied, does no more than provide a general program to help parents get their children, regardless of their religion, safely and expeditiously to and from 261 accredited schools.' 330 U.S., at 18, 67 S.Ct. at 513. Yet even this form of assistance was thought by four Justices of the Everson Court to be barred by the Establishment Clause because too perilously close to that public support of religion forbidden by the First Amendment.

The other two cases, Illinois ex rel. McCollum v. Board of Education, 333 U.S. 203, 68 S.Ct. 461, 92 L.Ed. 648, and Zorach v. Clauson, 343 U.S. 306, 72 S.Ct. 679, 96 L.Ed. 954, can best be considered together. Both involved programs of released time for religious instruction of public school students. I reject the suggestion that Zorach overruled McCollum in silence. [FN26] The distinction which the Court drew in Zorach between the two cases is, in my view, faithful to the function of the Establishment Clause.

> FN26. See, e.g., Spicer, The Supreme Court and Fundamental Freedoms (1959), 83-84; Kauper, Church, State, and Freedom: A Review, 52 Mich.L.Rev. 829, 839 (1954); Reed, Church-State and the Zorach Case, 27 Notre Dame Lawyer 529, 539-541 (1952).

I should first note, however, that McCollum and Zorach do not seem to me distinguishable in terms of the free exercise claims advanced in both cases. [FN27] The nonparticipant in the McCollum program was given secular instruction in a separate room during the times his classmates had religious lessons; the nonparticipant in any Zorach program also received secular instruction, while his classmates repaired to a place outside the school for religious instruction.

> FN27. See 343 U.S., at 321-322, 72 S.Ct. at 687-688 (Fraukfurter, J., dissenting); Kurland, Religion and the Law (1962), 89. I recognize that there is a question whether in Zorach the free exercise claims asserted were in fact proved. 343 U.S., at 311, 72 S.Ct., at 682.

The crucial difference, I think, was that the McCollum program offended the Establishment Clause while the Zorach program did not. This was not, in my view, because of the difference in public expenditures involved. True, the McCollum program involved the regular use of school facilities, classrooms, heat and light and time from the regular school day-even though the actual 262 incremental cost may have been negligible. All religious instruction under the Zorach program, by contrast, was carried on entirely off the school premises, and the teacher's part was simply to facilitate the children's release to the churches. The deeper difference was that the McCollum program placed the religious instructor in the public school classroom in precisely the position of authority held by the regular teachers of secular subjects, while the Zorach program did not.[FN28] The McCollum program,263 in lending to the support of sectarian instruction all the authority*1593 of the governmentally operated public school system, brought government and religion into that proximity which the Establishment Clause forbids. To be sure, a religious teacher presumably commands substantial respect and merits attention in his own right. But the Constitution does not permit that prestige and capacity for influence to be augmented by investiture of all the symbols of authority at the command of the lay teacher for the enhancement of secular instruction.

> FN28. Mr. Justice Frankfurter described the effects of the McCollum program thus:
> 'Religious education so conducted on school time and property is patently woven into the working scheme of the school. The Champaign arrangement thus presents powerful elements of inherent pressure by the school system in the interest of religious sects. * * * As a result, the public school system of Champaign actively furthers inculcation in the religious tenets of some faiths, and in the process sharpens the consciousness of religious differences at least among some of the children committed to its care.' 333 U.S., at 227-228, 68 S.Ct. at 473. For similar reasons some state courts have enjoined the public schools from employing or accepting the services of members of religious orders even in the teaching of secular subjects, e.g., Zellers v. Huff, 55 N.M. 501, 236 P.2d 949; Berghorn v. Reorganized School Dist. No. 8, 364 Mo. 121, 260 S.W.2d 573; compare ruling of Texas Commissioner of Education, Jan. 25, 1961, in 63 American Jewish Yearbook (1962), 188. Over a half century ago a New York court sustained a school board's exclusion from the public schools of teachers wearing religious garb on similar grounds:

© 2011 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

'Then all through the school hours these teachers * * * were before the children as object lessons of the order and church of which they were members. It is within our common observation that young children * * * are very susceptible to the influence of their teachers and of the kind of object lessons continually before them in schools conducted under these circumstances and with these surroundings.' O'Connor v. Hendrick, 109 App.Div. 361, 371-372, 96 N.Y.S. 161, 169. See also Commonwealth v. Herr, 229 Pa. 132, 78 A. 68; Comment, Religious Garb in the Public Schools-A Study in Conflicting Liberties, 22 U. of Chi.L.Rev. 888 (1955).

Also apposite are decisions of several courts which have enjoined the use of parochial schools as part of the public school system, Harfst v. Hoegen, 349 Mo. 808, 163 S.W.2d 609, 141 A.L.R. 1136; or have invalidated programs for the distribution in public school classrooms of Gideon Bibles, Brown v. Orange County Board of Public Instruction, 128 So.2d 181 (Fla.App.); Tudor v. Board of Education, 14 N.J. 31, 100 A.2d 857, 45 A.L.R.2d 729. See Note, The First Amendment and Distribution of Religious Literature in the Public Schools, 41 Va.L.Rev. 789, 803-806 (1955). In Tudor, the court stressed the role of the public schools in the Bible program:

'* * * the public school machinery is used to bring about the distribution of these Bibles to the children * * *. In the eyes of the pupils and their parents the board of education has placed its stamp of approval upon this distribution and, in fact, upon the Gideon Bible itself. * * * This is more than mere 'accommodation' of religion permitted in the Zorach case. The school's part in this distribution is an active one and cannot be sustained on the basis of a mere assistance to religion.' 14 N.J., at 51-52, 100 A.2d at 868.

The significance of the teacher's authority was recognized by one early state court decision:

'The school being in session, the right to command was vested in the teacher, and the duty of obedience imposed upon the pupils. Under such circumstances a request and a command have the same meaning. A request from one in authority is understood to be a mere euphemism. It is in fact a command in an inoffensive form.' State ex rel. Freeman v. Scheve, 65 Neb. 853, 876, 880, 93 N.W. 169, 170.

More recent decisions have further etched the contours of Establishment. In the Sunday Law Cases, we found in state laws compelling a uniform day of rest from worldly labor no violation of the Establishment Clause (McGowan v. Maryland, 366 U.S. 420, 81 S.Ct. 1101, 6 L.Ed.2d 393). The basic 264 ground of our decision was that, granted the Sunday Laws were first enacted for religious ends, they were continued in force for reasons wholly secular, namely, to provide a universal day of rest and ensure the health and tranquillity of the community. In other words, government may originally have decreed a Sunday day of rest for the impermissible purpose of supporting religion but abandoned that purpose and retained the laws for *1594 the permissible purpose of furthering overwhelmingly secular ends.

Such was the evolution of the contours of the Establishment Clause before Engel v. Vitale. There, a year ago, we held that the daily recital of the state-composed Regents' Prayer constituted an establishment of religion because, although the prayer itself revealed no sectarian content or purpose, its nature and meaning were quite clearly religious. New York, in authorizing its recitation, had not maintained that distance between the public and the religious sectors commanded by the Establishment Clause when it placed the 'power, prestige and financial support of government' behind the prayer. In Engel, as in McCollum, it did not matter that the amount of time and expense allocated to the daily recitation was small so long as the exercise itself was manifestly religious. Nor did it matter that few children had complained of the practice, for the measure of the seriousness of a breach of the Establishment Clause has never been thought to be the number of people who complain of it.

We also held two Terms ago in Torcaso v. Watkins, supra, that a State may not constitutionally require an applicant for the office of Notary Public to swear or affirm that he believes in God. The problem of that case was strikingly similar to the issue presented 18 years before in the flag salute case, West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette, supra. In neither case was there any claim of establishment of religion, but only of infringement of 265 the individual's religious liberty-in the one case, that of the nonbeliever who could not attest to a belief in God; in the other, that of the child whose creed forbade him to salute the flag. But Torcaso added a new element not present in Barnette. The Maryland test oath involved an attempt to employ essentially religious (albeit nonsectarian) means to achieve a secular goal to which the means bore no reasonable relationship. No one doubted the State's interest in the integrity of its Notaries Public, but that interest did not warrant the screening of applicants by means of a religious test. The Sunday Law Cases were different in that respect. Even if Sunday Laws retain certain religious vestiges, they are enforced today for essentially secular objectives which cannot be effectively achieved in modern society except by designating Sunday as the universal day of rest. The Court's opinions cited very substantial problems in selecting or enforcing an alternative day of rest. But the teaching of both Torcaso and the Sunday Law Cases is that government may not employ religious means to serve secular interests, however legitimate they may be; at least without the clearest demonstration that nonreligious means will not suffice.[FN29]

FN29. See for other illustrations of the principle that where First Amendment freedoms are or may be affected, government must employ those means which will least inhibit the exercise of constitutional liberties, Lovell v. And compare Miller v. Cooper, 56 N.M. 355, 244 P.2d 520 (1952), in which a state court permitted the holding of public school commencement exercises in a church building only because no public buildings in the community were adequate to accommodate the ceremony.

I turn now to the cases before us.[FN30] The religious nature of the exercises here *1595 challenged seems plain. Unless Engel v. Vitale is to be overruled, or we are to engage in wholly disingenuous distinction, we cannot sustain267 these practices. Daily recital of the Lord's Prayer and the reading of passages of Scripture are quite as clearly breaches of the command of the Establishment Clause as was the daily use of the rather bland Regents' Prayer in the New York public schools. Indeed, I would suppose that, if anything, the Lord's Prayer and the Holy Bible are more clearly sectarian, and the present violations of the First Amendment consequently more serious. But the religious exercises challenged in these cases have a long history. And almost from the beginning, Bible reading and daily prayer in the schools have been the subject of debate, criticism by educators and other public officials and proscription by courts and legislative councils. At the outset, then, we must carefully canvass both aspects of this history.

FN30. No question has been raised in these cases concerning the standing of these parents to challenge the religious practices conducted in the schools which their children presently attend. Whatever authority Doremus v. Board of Education of Borough of Hawthorne, 342 U.S. 429, 72 S.Ct. 394, 96 L.Ed. 475, might have on the question of the standing of one not the parent of children affected by the challenged exercises is not before us in these cases. Neither in McCollum nor in Zorach was there any reason to question the standing of the parent-plaintiffs under settled principles of justiciability and jurisdiction, whether or not their complaints alleged pecuniary loss or monetary injury. The free-exercise claims of the parents alleged injury sufficient to give them standing. If, however, the gravamen of the lawsuit were exclusively one of establishment, it might seem illogical to confer standing upon a parent who-though he is concededly in the best position to assert a free-exercise claim-suffers no financial injury, by reason of being a parent, different from that of the ordinary taxpayer, whose standing may be open to question. See Sutherland, Establishment According to Engel, 76 Harv.L.Rev. 25, 41-43 (1962). I would suggest several answers to this conceptual difficulty. First, the parent is surely the person most directly and immediately concerned about and affected by the challenged establishment, and to deny him standing either in his own right or on behalf of his child might effectively foreclose judicial inquiry into serious breaches of the prohibitions of the First Amendment-even though no special monetary injury could be shown. See Schempp v. School District of Abington Township, D.C., 177 F.Supp. 398, 407; Kurland, The Regents' Prayer Case: 'Full of Sound and Fury, Signifying * * *,' 1962 Supreme Court Review 1, 22. Second, the complaint in every case thus far challenging an establishment has set forth at least a colorable claim of infringement of free exercise. When the complaint includes both claims, and neither is frivolous, it would surely be overtechnical to say that a parent who does not detail the monetary cost of the exercises to him may ask the court to pass only upon the free-exercise claim, however logically the two may be related. Cf. Pierce v. Society of Sisters, supra; Truax v. Raich, 239 U.S. 33, 38-39, 36 S.Ct. 7, 60 L.Ed. 131; NAACP v. Alabama ex rel. Patterson, 357 U.S. 449, 458-460, 78 S.Ct. 1163, 2 L.Ed.2d 1488; Bell v. Hood, 327 U.S. 678, 66 S.Ct. 773, 90 L.Ed. 939; Bantam Books, Inc., v. Sullivan, 372 U.S. 58, 64, n. 6, 83 S.Ct. 631, 9 L.Ed.2d 584. Finally, the concept of standing is a necessarily flexible one, designed principally to ensure that the plaintiffs have 'such a personal stake in the outcome of the controversy as to assure that concrete adverseness which sharpens the presentation of issues upon which the court so largely depends for illumination of difficult constitutional questions * * *.' Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 204, 82 S.Ct. 691, 703, 7 L.Ed.2d 663. It seems to me that even a cursory examination of the complaints in these two cases and the opinions below discloses that these parents have very real grievances against the respective school authorities which cannot be resolved short of constitutional adjudication. *1596 The use of prayers and Bible readings at the opening of the school day long antedates the founding of our Republic. The Rules of the New Haven Hopkins Grammar School required in 1684 '(t)hat the Scholars being 268 called together, the Mr. shall every morning begin his work with a short prayer for a blessing on his Laboures and their learning * * *.' [FN31] More rigorous was the provision in a 1682 contract with a Dutch schoolmaster in Flatbush, New York:

FN31. Quoted in Dunn, What Happened to Religious Education? (1958), 21.

'When the school begins, one of the children shall read the morning prayer, as it stands in the catechism, and close with the prayer before dinner; in the afternoon it shall begin with the prayer after dinner, and end with the evening prayer. The evening school shall begin with the Lord's prayer, and close by singing a psalm.' [FN32]

FN32. Quoted, id., at 22.

After the Revolution, the new States uniformly continued these long-established practices in the private and the few public grammar schools. The school committee of Boston in 1789, for example, required the city's several schoolmasters 'daily to commence the duties of their office by prayer and reading a portion of the Sacred Scriptures * * *.' [FN33] That requirement was mirrored throughout the original States, and exemplified the universal practice well into the nineteenth century. As the free public schools gradually supplanted the private academies and sectarian schools between 1800 and 1850, morning devotional exercises were retained with few alterations. Indeed, public pressures upon school administrators in many parts of the country would hardly have condoned abandonment of practices to which a century or more of private religious education had accustomed the American people. [FN34] The controversy centered, in 269 fact, principally about the elimination of plainly sectarian practices and textbooks, and led to the eventual substitution of nonsectarian, though still religious, exercises and materials.[FN35]

FN34. See Culver, Horace Mann and Religion in the Massachusetts Public Schools (1929), for an account of one prominent educator's efforts to satisfy both the protests of those who opposed continuation of sectarian lessons and exercises in public schools, and the demands of those who insisted upon the retention of some essentially religious practices. Mann's continued use of the Bible for what he regarded as nonsectarian exercises represented his response to these cross-pressures. See Mann, Religious Education, in Blau, Cornerstones of Religious Freedom in America (1949), 163-201 (from the Twelfth Annual Report for 1848 of the Secretary of the Board of Education of Massachusetts). Statutory provision for daily religious exercises is, however, of quite recent origin. At the turn of this century, there was but one State-Massachusetts-which had a law making morning prayer or Bible reading obligatory. Statutes elsewhere either permitted such practices or simply left the question to local option. It was not until after 1910 that 11 more States, within a few years joined Massachusetts in making one or both exercises compulsory.[FN36] The Pennsylvania law *1597 with which we are 270 concerned in the Schempp case, for example, took effect in 1913; and even the Rule of the Baltimore School Board involved in the Murray case dates only from 1905. In no State has there ever been a constitutional or statutory prohibition against the recital of prayers or the reading of Scripture, although a number of States have outlawed these practices by judicial decision or administrative order. What is noteworthy about the panoply of state and local regulations from which these cases emerge is the relative recency of the statutory codification of practices which have ancient roots, and the rather small number of States which have ever prescribed compulsory religious exercises in the public schools.

FN36. E.g., Ala.Code, Tit. 52, s 542; Del.Code Ann., Tit. 14, ss 4101, 4102; Fla.Stat.Ann. s 231.09(2); Mass.Ann.Laws, c. 71, s 31; Tenn.Code Ann. s 49-1307(4). Some statutes, like the recently amended Pennsylvania statute involved in Schempp, provide for the excusal or exemption of children whose parents do not wish them to participate. See generally Johnson and Yost, Separation of Church and State in the United States (1948), 33-36; Thayer, The Role of the School in American Society (1960), 374-375; Beth, The American Theory of Church and State (1958), 106-107. Compare with the American statutory approach Article 28(3) of the Constitution of India:

'(3) No person attending any educational institution recognised by the State or receiving aid out of State funds shall be required to take part in any religious instruction that may be imparted in such institution or to attend any religious worship that may be conducted in such institution or in any premises attached thereto unless such person or, if such person is a minor, his guardian has given his consent thereto.' See 1 Chaudhri, Constitutional Rights and Limitations (1955), 876, 939.

The purposes underlying the adoption and perpetuation of these practices are somewhat complex. It is beyond question that the religious benefits and values realized from daily prayer and Bible reading have usually been considered paramount, and sufficient to justify the continuation of such practices. To Horace Mann, embroiled in an intense controversy over the role of sectarian instruction and texbooks in the Boston public schools, there was little question that the regular use of the Bible-which he thought essentially nonsectarian-would bear fruit in the spiritual enlightenment of his pupils. FN37 A contemporary of Mann's the Commissioner of Education of a neighboring State, expressed a view which many enlightened educators of that day shared:

FN37. See note 34, supra.

'As a textbook of morals the Bible is pre-eminent, and should have a prominent place in our schools, *271 either as a reading book or as a source of appeal and instruction. Sectarianism, indeed, should not be countenanced in the schools; but the Bible is not sectarian * * *. The Scriptures should at least be read at the opening of the school, if no more. Prayer may also be offered with the happiest effects.' FN38

Wisconsin's Superintendent of Public Instruction, writing a few years later in 1858, reflected the attitude of his eastern colleagues, in that he regarded 'with special favor the use of the Bible in public schools, as pre-eminently first in importance among text-books for teaching the noblest principles of virtue, morality, patriotism, and good order-love and reverence for God-charity and good will to man.' FN39

FN39. Quoted in Boyer, Religious Education of Public School Pupils in Wisconsin, 1953 Wis.L.Rev. 181, 186.

Such statements reveal the understanding of educators that the daily religious exercises in the schools served broader goals than compelling formal worship of God or fostering church attendance. The religious aims of the educators who adopted and retained such exercises were comprehensive, and in many cases quite devoid of sectarian bias-but the crucial fact is that they were nonetheless religious. While it has been suggested, see pp. 1601-1603, infra, that daily prayer 1598 and reading of Scripture now serve secular goals as well, there can be no doubt that the origins of these practices were unambiguously religious, even where the educator's aim was not to win adherents to a particular creed or faith.

Almost from the beginning religious exercises in the public schools have been the subject of intense criticism, vigorous debate, and judicial or administrative prohibition. Significantly, educators and school boards *272 early entertained doubts about both the legality and the soundness of opening the school day with compulsory prayer or Bible reading. Particularly in the large Eastern cities, where immigration had exposed the public schools to religious diversities and conflicts unknown to the homogeneous academies of the eighteenth century, local authorities found it necessary, even before the Civil War to seek an accommodation. In 1843, the Philadelphia School Board adopted the following resolutions:

'RESOLVED, that no children be required to attend or unite in the reading of the Bible in the Public Schools, whose parents are conscientiously opposed thereto:

'RESOLVED, that those children whose parents conscientiously prefer and desire any particular version of the Bible, without note or comment, be furnished with same.' FN40

FN40. Quoted in Dunn, What Happened to Religious Education? (1958), 271.

A decade later, the Superintendent of Schools of New York State issued an even bolder decree that prayers could no longer be required as part of public school activities, and that where the King James Bible was read, Catholic students could not be compelled to attend. FN41 This type of accommodation was not restricted to the East Coast; the Cincinnati Board of Education resolved in 1869 that 'religious instruction and the reading of religious books, including the Holy Bible, are prohibited in the common schools of Cincinnati, it being the true object and intent of this rule to allow the children of the parents of all sects and opinions, in matters of faith and worship, *273 to enjoy alike the benefit of the common-school fund.' FN42 The Board repealed at the same time an earlier regulation which had required the singing of hymns and psalms to accompany the Bible reading at the start of the school day. And in 1889, one commentator ventured the view that '(t)here is not enough to be gained from Bible reading to justify the quarrel that has been raised over it.' [FN43]

Thus a great deal of controversy over religion in the public schools had preceded the debate over the Blaine Amendment, precipitated by President Grant's insistence that matters of religion should be left 'to the family altar, the church, and the private school, supported entirely by private contributions.' [FN44] There was ample precedent, too, for Theodore Roosevelt's declaration that in the interest of 'absolutely nonsectarian public schools' it was 'not our business to have the Protestant Bible or the Catholic Vulgate or the Talmud read in those 1599 schools.' [FN45] The same principle appeared in the message of an Ohio Governor who vetoed a compulsory Bible-reading bill in 1925:

FN45. Theodore Roosevelt to Michael A. Schaap, Feb. 22, 1915, 8 Letters of Theodore Roosevelt (Morison ed. 1954), 893.

'It is my belief that religious teaching in our homes, Sunday schools, churches, by the good *274 mothers, fathers, and ministers of Ohio is far preferable to compulsory teaching of religion by the state. The spirit of our federal and state constitutions from the beginning * * * (has) been to leave religious instruction to the discretion of parents.' [FN46]

FN46. Quoted in Boles, The Bible, Religion, and the Public Schools (1961), 238.

The same theme has recurred in the opinions of the Attorneys General of several States holding religious exercises or instruction to be in violation of the state or federal constitutional command of separation of church and state. [FN47] Thus the basic principle upon which our decision last year in Engel v. Vitale necessarily rested, and which we reaffirm today, can hardly be thought to be radical or novel.

FN47. E.g., 1955 Op.Ariz.Atty.Gen. 67; 26 Ore.Op.Atty.Gen. 46 (1952); 25 Cal.Op.Atty.Gen. 316 (1955); 1948-1950 Nev.Atty.Gen.Rep. 69 (1948). For a 1961 opinion of the Attorney General of Michigan to the same effect, see 63 American Jewish Yearbook (1962) 189. In addition to the Governor of Ohio, see note 46, supra, a Governor of Arizona vetoed a proposed law which would have permitted 'reading the Bible, without comment, except to teach Historical or Literary facts.' See 2 Stokes, Church and State in the United States (1950), 568.

Particularly relevant for our purposes are the decisions of the state courts on questions of religion in the public schools. Those decisions, while not, of course, authoritative in this Court, serve nevertheless to define the problem before us and to guide our inquiry. With the growth of religious diversity and the rise of vigorous dissent it was inevitable that the courts would be called upon to enjoin religious practices in the public schools which offended certain sects and groups. The earliest of such decisions declined to review the propriety of actions taken by school authorities, so long as those actions were within *275 the purview of the administrators' powers. [FN48] Thus, where the local school board required religious exercises, the courts would not enjoin them; [FN49] and where, as in at least one case, the school officials forbade devotional practices, the court refused on similar grounds to overrule that decision.[FN50] Thus, whichever way the early cases came up, the governing principle of nearly complete deference to administrative discretion effectively foreclosed any consideration of constitutional questions.

The last quarter of the nineteenth century found the courts beginning to question the constitutionality of public school religious exercises. The legal context was still, of course, that of the state constitutions, since the First Amendment had not yet been held applicable to state action. And the state constitutional prohibitions against church-state cooperation or governmental aid to religion were generally less rigorous than the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment. It is therefore remarkable that the courts of a half dozen States found compulsory religious exercises in the public schools in violation of their respective state constitutions.[FN51] These 276 courts attributed*1600 much significance to the clearly religious origins and content of the challenged practices, and to the impossibility of avoiding sectarian controversy in their conduct. The Illinois Supreme Court expressed in 1910 the principles which characterized these decisions:

The cases are discussed in Boles, The Bible, Religion, and the Public Schools (1961), c. IV; Harrison, The Bible, the Constitution and Public Education, 29 Tenn.L.Rev. 363, 386-389 (1962).

'The public school is supported by the texes which each citizen, regardless of his religion or his lack of it, is compelled to pay. The school, like the government, is simply a civil institution. It is secular, and not religious, in its purposes. The truths of the Bible are the truths of religion, which do not come within the province of the public school. * * * No one denies that they should be taught to the youth of the State. The constitution and the law do not interfere with such teaching, but they do banish theological polemics from the schools and the school districts. This is done, not from any hostility to religion, but because it is no part of the duty of the State to teach religion,-to take the money of all and apply it to teaching the children of all the religion of a part, only. Instruction in religion must be voluntary.' People ex rel. Ring v. Board of Education of Dist. No. 24, 245 Ill. 334, 349, 92 N.E. 251, 256 (1910).

The Supreme Court of South Dakota, in banning devotional exercises from the public schools of that State, also cautioned that '(t)he state as an educator must keep out of this field, and especially is this true in the common schools, where the child is immature, without fixed religious convictions * * *.' State ex rel. Finger v. Weedman, 55 S.D. 343, 357, 226 N.W. 348, 354 (1929).

277 Even those state courts which have sustained devotional exercises under state law[FN52] have usually recognized the primarily religious character of prayers and Bible readings. If such practices were not for that reason unconstitutional, it was necessarily because the state constitution forbade only public expenditures for sectarian instruction, or for activities which made the schoolhouse a 'place of worship,' but said nothing about the subtler question of laws 'respecting an establishment of religion.'[FN53] Thus the *1601 panorama of history permits no 278 other conclusion than that daily prayers and Bible readings in the public schools have always been designed to be, and have been regarded as, essentially religious exercises. Unlike the Sunday closing laws, these exercises appear neither to have been divorced from their religious origins nor deprived of their centrally religious character by the passage of time.[FN54] cf. McGowan v. Maryland, supra, 366 U.S. at 442-445, 81 S.Ct. at 1113-1115. On this distinction alone we might well rest a constitutional decision. But three further contentions have been pressed in the argument of these cases. These contentions deserve careful consideration, for if the position of the school authorities were correct in respect to any of them, we would be misapplying the principles of Engel v. Vitale.

State courts appear to have been increasingly influenced in sustaining devotional practices by the availability of an excuse or exemption for dissenting students. The essentially religious character of the materials used in these exercises is, in fact, strongly suggested by the presence of excusal or exemption provisions, and by the practice of rotating or alternating the use of different prayers and versions of the Holy Bible.

A.

First, it is argued that however clearly religious may have been the origins and early nature of daily prayer and Bible reading, these practices today serve so clearly secular educational purposes that their religious attributes may be overlooked. I do not doubt, for example, that morning devotional exercises may foster better discipline in the classroom, and elevate the spiritual level on which the school day opens. The Pennsylvania Superintendent of Public Instruction, testifying by deposition in the Schempp case, offered his view that daily Bible reading 'places upon the children or those hearing the reading of this, and the atmosphere which goes on in the reading * * * one of the last vestiges of moral value 279 that we have left in our school system.' The exercise thus affords, the Superintendent concluded, 'a strong contradiction to the materialistic trends of our time.' Baltimore's Superintendent of Schools expressed a similar view of the practices challenged in the Murray case, to the effect that '(t)he acknowledgement of the existence of God as symbolized in the opening exercises establishes a discipline tone which tends to cause each individual pupil to constrain his overt acts and to consequently conform to accepted standards of behavior during his attendance at school.' These views are by no means novel, see, e.g., Billard v. Board of Education, 69 Kan. 53, 57-58, 76 P. 422, 423, 66 L.R.A. 166 (1904).[FN55]

FN55. In the Billard case, the teacher whose use of the Lord's Prayer and the Twenty-third Psalm was before the court testified that the exercise served disciplinary rather than spiritual purposes:

'It is necessary to have some general exercise after the children come in from the playground to prepare them for their work. You need some general exercise to quiet them down.'

When asked again if the purpose were not at least partially religious, the teacher replied, (i)t was religious to the children that are religious, and to the others it was not.' 69 Kan., at 57-58, 76 P., at 423.

It is not the business of this Court to gainsay the judgments of experts on matters of pedagogy. Such decisions must *1602 be left to the discretion of those administrators charged with the supervision of the Nation's public schools. The limited province of the courts is to determine whether the means which the educators have chosen to achieve legitimate pedagogical ends infringe the constitutional freedoms of the First Amendment. The secular purposes which devotional exercises are said to serve fall into two categories-those which depend upon an immediately religious experience shared by the participating children; and those which appear sufficiently divorced from the religious content of the devotional material that they can be served equally by nonreligious 280 materials. With respect to the first objective, much has been written about the moral and spiritual values of infusing some religious influence or instruction into the public school classroom.[FN56] To the extent that only religious materials will serve this purpose, it seems to me that the purpose as well as the means is so plainly religious that the exercise is necessarily forbidden by the Establishment Clause. The fact that purely secular benefits may eventually result does not seem to me to justify the exercises, for similar indirect nonreligious benefits could no doubt have been claimed for the released time program invalidated in McCollum.

FN56. See, e.g., Henry, The Place of Religion in Public Schools (1950); Martin, Our Public Schools-Christian or Secular (1952); Educational Policies Comm'n of the National Educational Assn., Moral and Spiritual Values in the Public Schools (1951), c. IV; Harner, Religion's Place in General Education (1949). Educators are by no means unanimous, however, on this question. See Boles, The Bible, Religion, and the Public Schools (1961), 223-224. Compare George Washington's advice in his Farewell Address:

'And let us with caution indulge the supposition, that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that National morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.' 35 Writings of George Washington (Fitzpatrick ed. 1940), 229.

The second justification assumes that religious exercises at the start of the school day may directly serve solely secular ends-for example, by fostering harmony and tolerance among the pupils, enhancing the authority of the teacher, and inspiring better discipline. To the extent that such benefits result not from the content of the readings and recitation, but simply from the holding of such a solemn exercise at the opening assembly or the first class of the day, it would seem that less sensitive materials might equally well serve the same purpose. I have previously suggested that Torcaso and the Sunday Law Cases forbid the use of religious means to achieve secular281 ends where nonreligious means will suffice. That principle is readily applied to these cases. It has not been shown that readings from the speeches and messages of great Americans, for example, or from the documents of our heritage of liberty, daily recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance, or even the observance of a moment of reverent silence at the opening of class, may not adequately serve the solely secular purposes of the devotional activities without jeopardizing either the religious liberties of any members of the community or the proper degree of separation between the spheres of religion and government.[FN57] Such substitutes would, I think, be unsatisfactory1603 or inadequate only to the extent that the present activities do in fact serve religious goals. While I do not question the judgment of experienced educators that the challenged practices may well achieve valuable secular ends, it seems to me that the State acts unconstitutionally if it either sets about to attain even indirectly religious ends by religious means, or if it uses religious means to serve secular ends where secular means would suffice.

FN57. Thomas Jefferson's insistence that where the judgments of young children 'are not sufficiently matured for religious inquiries, their memories may here be stored with the most useful facts from Grecian, Roman, European and American history,' 2 Writings of Thomas Jefferson (Memorial ed. 1903), 204, is relevant here. Recent proposals have explored the possibility of commencing the school day 'with a quiet moment that would still the tumult of the playground and start a day of study,' Editorial, Washington Post, June 28, 1962, s A, p. 22, col. 2. See also New York Times, Aug. 30, 1962, s 1, p. 18, col. 2. For a consideration of these and other alternative proposals see Choper, Religion in the Public Schools: A Proposed Constitutional Standard, 47 Minn.L.Rev. 329, 370-371 (1963). See also 2 Stokes, Church and State in the United States (1950), 571.

B.

Second, it is argued that the particular practices involved in the two cases before us are unobjectionable *282 because they prefer no particular sect or sects at the expense of others. Both the Baltimore and Abington procedures permit, for example, the reading of any of several versions of the Bible, and this flexibility is said to ensure neutrality sufficiently to avoid the constitutional prohibition. One answer, which might be dispositive, is that any version of the Bible is inherently sectarian, else there would be no need to offer a system of rotation or alternation of versions in the first place, that is, to allow different sectarian versions to be used on different days. The sectarian character of the Holy Bible has been at the core of the whole controversy over religious practices in the public schools throughout its long and often bitter history.[FN58] To *283 vary the version as the Abington and Baltimore schools have done may well be less offensive than to read from the King James version every day, as once was the practice. But the result even of this relatively benign procedure is that majority sects are preferred in approximate proportion to their representation in the community and in the student body, while the smaller sects suffer commensurate discrimination. So long as the subject matter of the exercise is sectarian in character, these consequences cannot be avoided.

FN58. The history, as it bears particularly upon the role of sectarian differences concerning Biblical texts and interpretation, has been summarized in Tudor v. Board of Education, 14 N.J. 31, 36-44, 100 A.2d 857, 859-864, 45 A.L.R.2d 729. See also State ex rel. Weiss v. District Board, 76 Wis. 177, 190-193, 44 N.W. 967, 972-975, 7 L.R.A. 330. One state court adverted to these differences a half century ago:

'The Bible, in its entirety, is a sectarian book as to the Jew and every believer in any religion other than the Christian religion, and as to those who are heretical or who hold beliefs that are not regarded as orthodox * * * its use in the schools necessarily results in sectarian instruction. There are many sects of Christians, and their differences grow out of their differing constructions of various parts of the Scriptures-the different conclusions drawn as to the effect of the same words. The portions of Scripture which form the basis of these sectarian differences cannot be thoughtfully and intelligently read without impressing the reader, favorably or otherwise, with reference to the doctrines supposed to be derived from then.' People ex rel. Ring v. Board of Education, 245 Ill. 334, 347-348, 92 N.E. 251, 255, 29 L.R.A., N.S., 442. But see, for a sharply critical comment, Schofield, Religious Liberty and Bible Reading in Illinois Public Schools, 6 Ill.L.Rev. 17 (1911).

The argument contains, however, a more basic flaw. There are persons in every community-often deeply devout-to whom any version of the Judaeo-Christian Bible is offensive.[FN59] There are others *1604 whose reverence for the Holy Scriptures demands private study or reflection and to whom public reading or recitation is sacrilegious, as one of the expert witnesses at the trial of the Schempp case explained. To such persons it is not the fact of using the Bible in the public schools, nor the content of any particular version, that is offensive, but only the manner in 284 which it is used. [FN60] For such persons, the anathema of public communion is even more pronounced when prayer is involved. Many deeply devout persons have always regarded prayer as a necessarily private experience.[FN61] One Protestant group recently commented, for example: 'When one thinks of prayer as sincere outreach of a 285 human soul to the Creator, 'required prayer' becomes an absurdity.'[FN62] There is a similar problem with respect to comment upon the passages of Scripture which are to be read. Most present statutes forbid comment, and this practice accords with the views of many religious groups as to the manner in which the Bible should be read. However, as a recent survey discloses, scriptural passages read without comment frequently convey no message to the younger children in the school. Thus there has developed a practice in some schools of bridging the gap between faith and understanding by means of 'definitions,' even where 'comment'*1605 is forbidden by statute. [FN63] The present practice therefore poses a difficult dilemma: While Bible reading is almost universally required to be without comment, since only by such a prohibition can sectarian interpretation be excluded from the classroom, 286 the rule breaks down at the point at which rudimentary definitions of Biblical terms are necessary for comprehension if the exercise is to be meaningful at all.

FN59. See Torcaso v. Watkins, supra, 367 U.S. at 495, n. 11, 81 S.Ct. at 1684; Cushman, The Holy Bible and the Public Schools, 40 Cornell L.Q. 475, 480-483 (1955); Note, Separation of Church and State: Religious Exercises in the Schools, 31 U. of Cinc.L.Rev. 408, 411-412 (1962). Few religious persons today would share the universality of the Biblical canons of John Quincy Adams:

'You ask me what Bible I take as the standard of my faith-the Hebrew, the Samaritan, the old English translation, or what? I answer, the Bible containing the sermon upon the mount-any Bible that I can read and understand. * * * I take any one of them for my standard of faith. If Socinus or Preistley had made a fair translation of the Bible, I would have taken that, but without their comments.' John Quincy Adams to John Adams, Jan. 3, 1817, in Koch and Peden, Selected Writings of John and John Quincy Adams (1946), 292.

FN60. Rabbi Solomon Grayzel testified before the District Court, 'In Judaism the Bible is not read, it is studied. There is no special virtue attached to a mere reading of the Bible; there is a great deal of virtue attached to a study of the Bible.' See Boles, The Bible, Religion, and the Public Schools (1961), 208-218; Choper, Religion in the Public Schools: A Proposed Constitutional Standard, 47 Minn.L.Rev. 329, 372-375 (1963). One religious periodical has suggested the danger that 'an observance of this sort is likely to deteriorate quickly into an empty formality with little, if any spiritual significance. Prescribed forms of this sort, as many colleges have concluded after years of compulsory chapel attendance, can actually work against the inculcation of vital religion.' Prayers in Public Schools Opposed, 69 Christian Century, Jan. 9, 1952, p. 35.

FN61. See Cahn, On Government and Prayer, 37 N.Y.U.L.Rev. 981, 993-994 (1962). A leading Protestant journal recently noted:

'Agitation for removal of religious practices in public schools is not prompted or supported entirely by Jews, humanists, and atheists. At both local and national levels, many Christian leaders, concerned both for civil rights of minorities and for adequate religious education, are opposed to religious exercises in public schools. * * * Many persons, both Jews and Christians, believe that prayer and Bible reading are too sacred to be permitted in public schools in spite of their possible moral value.' See, e.g., for other recent statements on this question, Editorial, Amending the Amendment, 108 America, May 25, 1963, p. 736; Sissel, A Christian View: Behind the Fight Against School Prayer, 27 Look, June 18, 1963, p. 25.

It should be unnecessary to demonstrate that the Lord's Prayer, more clearly than the Regents' Prayer involved in Engel v. Vitale, is an essentially Christian supplication. See, e.g., Scott, The Lord's Prayer: Its Character, Purpose, and Interpretation (1951), 55; Buttrick, So We Believe, So We Pray (1951), 142; Levy Lord's Prayer, in 7 Universal Jewish Encyclopedia (1948), 192-193.

FN63. See Harrison, The Bible, the Constitution and Public Education, 29 Tenn.L.Rev. 363, 397 (1962). The application of statutes and regulations which forbid comment on scriptural passages is further complicated by the view of certain religious groups that reading without comment is either meaningless or actually offensive. Compare Rabbi Grayzel's testimony before the District Court that 'the Bible is misunderstood when it is taken without explanation.' A recent survey of the attitudes of certain teachers disclosed concern that 'refusal to answer pupil questions regarding any curricular activity is not educationally sound,' and that reading without comment might create in the minds of the pupils the impression that something was 'hidden or wrong.' Boles, The Bible, Religion, and the Public Schools (1961), 235-236. Compare the comment of a foreign observer: 'In no other field of learning would we expect a child to draw the full meaning from what he reads without accompanying explanatory comment. But comment by the teacher will inevitably reveal his own personal preferences; and the exhibition of preferences is what we are seeking to eliminate.' MacKinnon, Freedom?-or Tolerations? The Problem of Church and State in the United States, (1959) Pub.Law 374, 383.

It has been suggested that a tentative solution to these problems may lie in the fashioning of a 'common core' of theology tolerable to all creeds but preferential to none.[FN64] But as one commentator has recently observed, '(h) istory is not encouraging to' those who hope to fashion a 'common denominator of religion detached from its manifestation in any organized church.' Sutherland, Establishment According to Engel, 76 Harv.L.Rev. 25, 51 (1962). Thus, the notion of a 'common core' litany or supplication offends many deeply devout worshippers who do not find clearly sectarian practices objectionable.[FN65] Father Gustave Weigel has recently expressed *287 a widely shared view: 'The moral code held by each separate1606 religious community can reductively be unified, but the consistent particular believer wants no such reduction.'[FN66] And, as the American Council on Education warned several years ago, 'The notion of a common core suggests a watering down of the several faiths to the point where common essentials appear. This might easily lead to a new sect-a public school seet-which would take its place alongside the existing faiths and compete with them.' [FN67] Engel is surely authority that nonsectarian religious practices, equally with sectarian exercises, violate the Establishment Clause. Moreover, even if the Establishment Clause were oblivious to nonsectarian religious practices, I think it quite likely that the 'common core' approach would be sufficiently objectionable to many groups to be foreclosed by the prohibitions of the Free Exercise Clause.

See Abbott, A Common Bible Reader for Public Schools, 56 Religious Education 20 (1961); Note, 22 Albany L.Rev. 156-157 (1958); 2 Stokes, Church and State in the United States (1950), 501-506 (describing the 'common denominator' or 'three faiths' plan and certain programs of instruction designed to implement the 'common core' approach). The attempts to evolve a universal, non-denominational prayer are by no means novel. See, e.g., Madison's letter to Edward Everett, March 19, 1823, commenting upon a 'project of a prayer * * * intended to comprehend & conciliate College Students of every (Christian) denomination, by a Form composed wholly of texts & phrases of scripture.' 9 Writings of James Madison (Hunt ed. 1910), 126. FN65. See the policy statement recently drafted by the National Council of the Churches of Christ: '* * * neither true religion nor good education is dependent upon the devotional use of the Bible in the public school program. * * * Apart from the constitutional questions involved, attempts to establish a 'common core' of religious beliefs to be taught in public schools for the purpose of indoctrination are unrealistic and unwise. Major faith groups have not agreed on a formulation of religious beliefs common to all. Even if they had done so, such a body of religious doctrine would tend to become a substitute for the more demanding commitments of historic faiths.' Washington Post, May 25, 1963, s A, p. 1, col. 4. C.

A third element which is said to absolve the practices involved in these cases from the ban of the religious guarantees of the Constitution is the provision to excuse or exempt students who wish not to participate. Insofar as these practices are claimed to violate the Establishment 288 Clause, I find the answer which the District Court gave after our remand of Schempp to be altogether dispositive:

'The fact that some pupils, or theoretically all pupils, might be excused from attendance at the exercises does not mitigate the obligatory nature of the ceremony * * *. The exercises are held in the school buildings and perforce are conducted by and under the authority of the local school authorities and during school sessions. Since the statute requires the reading of the 'Holy Bible', a Christian document, the practice, as we said in our first opinion, prefers the Christian religion. The record demonstrates that it was the intention of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to introduce a religious ceremony into the public schools of the Commonwealth.' 201 F.Supp., at 819.

Thus the short, and to me sufficient, answer is that the availability of excusal or exemption simply has no relevance to the establishment question, if it is once found that these practices are essentially religious exercises designed at least in part to achieve religious aims through the use of public school facilities during the school day.

The more difficult question, however, is whether the availability of excusal for the dissenting child serves to refute challenges to these practices under the Free Exercise Clause. While it is enough to decide these cases to dispose of the establishment questions, questions of free exercise are so inextricably interwoven into the history and present status of these practices as to justify disposition of this second aspect of the excusal issue. The answer is that the excusal procedure itself necessarily operates in such a way as to infringe the rights of free exercise of those children who wish to be excused. We have held in Barnette and Torcaso, respectively, that a State may require neither public school students nor candidates 289 for an office of public trust to profess beliefs offensive to religious principles. By the same token the State could not constitutionally require a student to profess publicly his disbelief as the prerequisite to the exercise of his constitutional right of abstention.

© 2011 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

And apart from Torcaso and Barnette, I think Speiser v. Randall, 357 U.S. 513, 78 S.Ct. 1332, 2 L.Ed.2d 1460, suggests a 1607 further answer. We held there that a State may not condition the grant of a tax exemption upon the willingness of those entitled to the exemption to affirm their loyalty to the Government, even though the exemption was itself a matter of grace rather than of constitutional right. We concluded that to impose upon the eligible taxpayers the affirmative burden of proving their loyalty impermissibly jeopardized the freedom to engage in constitutionally protected activities close to the area to which the loyalty oath related. Speiser v. Randall seems to me to dispose of two aspects of the excusal or exemption procedure now before us. First, by requiring what is tantamount in the eyes of teachers and schoolmates to a profession of disbelief, or at least of nonconformity, the procedure may well deter those children who do not wish to participate for any reason based upon the dictates of conscience from exercising an indisputably constitutional right to be excused.[FN68] Thus the excusal *290 provision in its operation subjects them to a cruel dilemma. In consequence, even devout children may well avoid claiming their right and simply continue to participate in exercises distasteful to them because of an understandable reluctance to be stigmatized as atheists or nonconformists simply on the basis of their request.

> FN68. See the testimony of Edward L. Schempp, the father of the children in the Abington schools and plaintiff-appellee in No. 142, concerning his reasons for not asking that his children be excused from the morning exercises after excusal was made available through amendment of the statute:
> 'We originally objected to our children being exposed to the reading of the King James version of the Bible * * * and under those conditions we would have theoretically liked to have had the children excused. But we felt that the penalty of having our children labelled as 'odd balls' before their teachers and classmates every day in the year was even less satisfactory than the other problem. * * *
>
> 'The children, the classmates of Roger and Donna are very liable to label and lump all particular religious difference or religious objections as atheism, particularly, today the word 'atheism' is so often tied to atheistic communism, and atheism has very bad connotations in the minds of children and many adults today.'
> A recent opinion of the Attorney General of California gave as one reason for finding devotional exercises unconstitutional the likelihood that '(c)hildren forced by conscience to leave the room during such exercises would be placed in a position inferior to that of students adhering to the State-endorsed religion.' 25 Cal.Op.Atty.Gen. 316, 319 (1955). Other views on this question, and possible effects of the excusal procedure, are summarized in Rosenfield, Separation of Church and State in the Public Schools, 22 U. of Pitt.L.Rev. 561, 581-585 (1961); Note, Separation of Church and State: Religious Exercises in the Schools, 31 U. of Cinc.L.Rev. 408, 416 (1962); Note, 62 W.Va.L.Rev. 353, 358 (1960).

Such reluctance to seek exemption seems all the more likely in view of the fact that children are disinclined at this age to step out of line or to flout 'peer-group norms.' Such is the widely held view of experts who have studied the behaviors and attitudes of children.[FN69] 1608 This is also *291 the basis of Mr. Justice Frankfurter's answer to a similar contention made in the McCollum case:

> FN69. Extensive testimony by behavioral scientists concerning the effect of similar practices upon children's attitudes and behaviors is discussed in Tudor v. Board of Education, 14 N.J. 31, 50-52, 100 A.2d 857, 867-868, 45 A.L.R.2d 729. See also Choper, Religion in the Public Schools: A Proposed Constitutional Standard, 47 Minn.L.Rev. 329, 344 (1963). There appear to be no reported experiments which bear directly upon the question under consideration. There have, however, been numerous experiments which indicate the susceptibility of school children to peer-group pressures, especially where important group norms and values are involved. See, e.g., Berenda, The Influence of the Group on the Judgments of Children (1950), 26-33; Argyle, Social Pressure in Public and Private Situations, 54 J. Abnormal & Social Psych. 172 (1957); cf. Rhine, The Effect of Peer Group Influence Upon Concept-Attitude Development and Change, 51 J. Social Psych. 173 (1960); French, Morrison and Levinger, Coercive Power and Forces Affecting Conformity, 61 J. Abnormal and Social Psych. 93 (1960). For a recent and important experimental study of the susceptibility of students to various factors in the school environment, see Zander, Curtis and Rosenfeld, The Influence of Teachers and Peers on Aspirations of Youth (U.S. Office of Education Cooperative Research Project No. 451, 1961), 24-25, 78-79. It is also apparent that the susceptibility of school children to prestige suggestion and social influence within the school environment varies inversely with the age, grade level, and consequent degree of sophistication of the child, see Patel and Gordon, Some Personal and Situational Determinants of Yielding to Influence, 61 J. Abnormal and Social Psych. 411, 417 (1960).

Experimental findings also shed some light upon the probable effectiveness of a provision for excusal when, as is usually the case, the percentage of the class wishing not to participate in the exercises is very small. It has been demonstrated, for example, that the inclination even of adults to depart or dissent overtly from strong group norms varies proportionately with the size of the dissenting group-that is, inversely with the apparent or perceived strength of the norm itself-and and is markedly slighter in the case of the sole or isolated dissenter. See, e.g., Asch, Studies of Independence and Conformity: a Unanimous Majority (Psych. Monographs No. 416, 1956), 69-70; Asch, Effects of Group Pressure upon the Modification and Distortion of Judgments, in Cartwright and Zander, Group Dynamics (2d ed. 1960), 189-199; Luchins and Luchins, On Conformity With True and False Communications, 42 J. Social Psych. 283 (1955). Recent important findings on these questions are summarized in Hare, Handbook of Small Group Research (1962), c. II.

'That a child is offered an alternative may reduce the constraint; it does not eliminate the operation of influence by the school in matters sacred to conscience and outside the school's domain. The law of imitation operates, and non-conformity is not an 292 outstanding characteristic of children. The result is an obvious pressure upon children to attend.' 333 U.S., at 227, 68 S.Ct., at 473.

Also apposite is the answer given more than 70 years ago by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin to the argument that an excusal provision saved a public school devotional exercise from constitutional invalidation:

'* * * the excluded pupil loses caste with his fellows, and is liable to be regarded with aversion, and subjected to reproach and insult. But it is a sufficient refutation of the argument that the practice in question tends to destroy the equality of the pupils which the constitution seeks to establish and protect, and puts a portion of them to serious disadvantage in many ways with respect to the others.' State ex rel. Weiss v. District Board of School District No. 8, 76 Wis. 177, 200, 44 N.W. 967, 975, 7 L.R.A. 330.

And 50 years ago a like answer was offered by the Louisiana Supreme Court:

'Under such circumstances, the children would be excused from the opening exercises * * * because of their religious beliefs. And excusing such children on religious grounds, although the number excused might be very small, would be a distinct preference in favor of the religious beliefs to the majority, and would work a discrimination against those who were excused. The exclusion of a pupil under such circumstances puts him in a class by himself; it subjects him to a religious stigma; and all because of his religious belief. Equality in public education would be destroyed by such act, under a Constitution which seeks to establish equality and freedom in religious matters.' Herold v. Parish Board of School Directors, 136 La. 1034, 1049-1050, 68 So. 116, 121, L.R.A.1915D, 941. See also *1609 Tudor v. Board of Education, 14 N.J. 31, 48-52, 100 A.2d 857, 867-868, 45 A.L.R.2d 729; Brown v. Orange County Board of Public Instruction, 128 So.2d 181, 185 (Fla.App.).

293 Speiser v. Randall also suggests the answer to a further argument based on the excusal procedure. It has been suggested by the School Board, in Schempp, that we ought not pass upon the appellees' constitutional challenge at least until the children have availed themselves of the excusal procedure and found it inadequate to redress their grievances. Were the right to be excused not itself of constitutional stature, I might have some doubt about this issue. But we held in Speiser that the constitutional vice of the loyalty oath procedure discharged any obligation to seek the exemption before challenging the constitutionality of the conditions upon which it might have been denied. 357 U.S., at 529, 78 S.Ct., at 1343. Similarly, we have held that one need not apply for a permit to distribute constitutionally protected literature, Lovell v. Griffin, 303 U.S. 444, 58 S.Ct. 666, 82 L.Ed. 949, or to deliver a speech, Thomas v. Collins, 323 U.S. 516, 65 S.Ct. 315, 89 L.Ed. 430, before he may attack the constitutionality of a licensing system of which the defect is patent. Insofar as these cases implicate only questions of establishment, it seems to me that the availability of an excuse is constitutionally irrelevant. Moreover, the excusal procedure seems to me to operate in such a way as to discourage the free exercise of religion on the part of those who might wish to utilize it, thereby rendering it unconstitutional in an additional and quite distinct respect.

To summarize my views concerning the merits of these two cases: The history, the purpose and the operation of the daily prayer recital and Bible reading leave no doubt that these practices standing by themselves constitute an impermissible breach of the Establishment Clause. Such devotional exercises may well serve legitimate nonreligious purposes. To the extent, however, that such purposes294 are really without religious significance, it has never been demonstrated that secular means would not suffice. Indeed, I would suggest that patriotic or other nonreligious materials might provide adequate substitutes-inadequate only to the extent that the purposes now served are indeed directly or indirectly religious. Under such circumstances, the States may not employ religious means to reach a secular goal unless secular means are wholly unavailing. I therefore agree with the Court that the judgment in Schempp, No. 142, must be affirmed, and that in Murray, No. 119, must be reversed.

V.

These considerations bring me to a final contention of the school officials in these cases: that the invalidation of the exercises at bar permits this Court no alternative but to declare unconstitutional every vestige, however slight, of cooperation or accommodation between religion and government. I cannot accept that contention. While it is not, of course, appropriate for this Court to decide questions not presently before it, I venture to suggest that religious exercises in the public schools present a unique problem. For not every involvement of religion in public life violates the Establishment Clause. Our decision in these cases does not clearly forecast anything about the constitutionality of other types of interdependence between religious and other public institutions.

Specifically, I believe that the line we must draw between the permissible and the impermissible is one which accords with history and faithfully reflects the understanding of the Founding Fathers. It is a line which the Court has consistently sought to mark in its decisions expounding the religious guarantees of the First Amendment. What the Framers meant to foreclose, and what our decisions under the Establishment Clause have forbidden,295 are those involvements *1610 of religious with secular institutions which (a) serve the essentially religious activities of religious institutions; (b) employ the organs of government for essentially religious purposes; or (c) use essentially religious means to serve governmental ends, where secular means would suffice. When the secular and religious institutions become involved in such a manner, there inhere in the relationship precisely those dangers-as much to church as to state-which the Framers feared would subvert religious liberty and the strength of a system of secular government. On the other hand, there may be myriad forms of involvements of government with religion which do not import such dangers and therefore should not, in my judgment, be deemed to violate the Establishment Clause. Nothing in the Constitution compels the organs of government to be blind to what everyone else perceives-that religious differences among Americans have important and pervasive implications for our society. Likewise nothing in the Establishment Clause forbids the application of legislation having purely secular ends in such a way as to alleviate burdens upon the free exercise of an individual's religious beliefs. Surely the Framers would never have understood that such a construction sanctions that involvement which violates the Establishment Clause. Such a conclusion can be reached, I would suggest, only by using the words of the First Amendment to defeat its very purpose.

The line between permissible and impermissible forms of involvement between government and religion has already been considered by the lower federal and state courts. I think a brief survey of certain of these forms of accommodation will reveal that the First Amendment commands not official hostility toward religion, but only a strict neutrality in matters of religion. Moreover, it may serve to suggest that the scope of our holding today 296 is to be measured by the special circumstances under which these cases have arisen, and by the particular dangers to church and state which religious exercises in the public schools present. It may be helpful for purposes of analysis to group these other practices and forms of accommodation into several rough categories.

A. The Conflict Between Establishment and Free Exercise.-There are certain practices, conceivably violative of the Establishment Clause, the striking down of which might seriously interfere with certain religious liberties also protected by the First Amendment.[FN70] Provisions for churches and chaplains at military establishments for those in the armed services may afford one such example.[FN71] 297 The like provision by state and *1611 federal governments for chaplains in penal institutions may afford another example.[FN72] It is argued that such provisions may be assumed to contravene the Establishment Clause, yet be sustained on constitutional grounds as necessary to secure to the members of the Armed Forces and prisoners those rights of worship guaranteed under the Free Exercise Clause. Since government has deprived such persons of the opportunity298 to practice their faith at places of their choice, the argument runs, government may, in order to avoid infringing the free exercise guarantees, provide substitutes where it requires such persons to be. Such a principle might support, for example, the constitutionality of draft exemptions for ministers and divinity students, [FN73] cf. Selective Draft Law Cases (Arver v. United States), 245 U.S. 366, 389-390, 38 S.Ct. 159, 165, 62 L.Ed. 349; of the excusal of children from school on their respective religious holidays; and of the allowance by government of temporary use of public buildings by religious organizations when their own churches have become unavailable because of a disaster or emergency. [FN74]

FN70. See, on the general problem of conflict and accommodation between the two clauses, Katz, Freedom of Religion and State Neutrality, 20 U. of Chi.L.Rev. 426, 429 (1953); Griswold, Absolute Is In the Dark, 8 Utah L.Rev. 167, 176-179 (1963); Kauper, Church, State, and Freedom: A Review, 52 Mich.L.Rev. 829, 833 (1954). One author has suggested that the Establishment and Free Exercise Clauses must be 'read as stating a single precept: that government cannot utilize religion as a standard for action or inaction because these clauses, read together as they should be, prohibit classification in terms of religion either to confer a benefit or to impose a burden.' Kurland, Religion and the Law (1962), 112. Compare the formula of accommodation embodied in the Australian Constitution, s 116:

'The Commonwealth shall not make any law for establishing any religion, or for imposing any religious observance, or for prohibiting the free exercise of any religion, and no religious test shall be required as a qualification for any office or public trust under the Commonwealth.' Essays on the Australian Constitution (Else-Mitchell ed. 1961), 15.

FN71. There has been much difference of opinion throughout American history concerning the advisability of furnishing chaplains at government expense. Compare, e.g., Washington's order regarding chaplains for the Continental Army, July 9, 1776, in 5 Writings of George Washington (Fitzpatrick ed. 1932), 244, with Madison's views on a very similar question, letter to Edward Livingston, July 10, 1822, 9 Writings of James Madison (Hunt ed. 1910), 100-103. Compare also this statement by the Armed Forces Chaplains Board concerning the chaplain's obligation:

'To us has been entrusted the spiritual and moral guidance of the young men and women in the Armed Services of this country. A chaplain has many duties-yet, first and foremost is that of presenting God to men and women wearing the military uniform. What happens to them while they are in military service has a profound effect on what happens in the community as they resume civilian life. We, as chaplains, must take full cognizance of that fact and dedicate our work to making them finer, spiritually strengthened citizens.' Builders of Faith (U.S. Department of Defense 1955), ii.

It is interesting to compare in this regard an express provision, Article 140, of the Weimar Constitution: 'Necessary free time shall be accorded to the members of the armed forces for the fulfilment of their religious duties.' McBain and Rogers, The New Constitutions of Europe (1922), 203.

FN72. For a discussion of some recent and difficult problems in connection with chaplains and religious exercises in prisons, see, e.g., Pierce v. La Vallee, 2 Cir., 293 F.2d 233; In re Ferguson, 55 Cal.2d 663, 12 Cal.Rptr. 753, 361 P.2d 417; McBride v. McCorkle, 44 N.J.Super. 468, 130 A.2d 881; Brown v. McGinnis, 10 N.Y.2d 531, 225 N.Y.S.2d 497, 180 N.E.2d 791; discussed in Comment, 62 Col.L.Rev. 1488 (1962); 75 Harv.L.Rev. 837 (1962). Compare Article XVIII of the Hague Convention Regulations of 1899:

'Prisoners of war shall enjoy every latitude in the exercise of their religion, including attendance at their own church services, provided only they comply with the regulations for order and police issued by the military authorities.' Quoted in Blakely, American State Papers and Related Documents on Freedom in Religion (4th rev. ed. 1949), 313.

FN73. Compare generally Sibley and Jacob, Conscription of Conscience: The American State and the Conscientious Objector, 1940-1947 (1952), with Conklin, Conscientious Objector Provisions: A View in the Light of Torcaso v. Watkins, 51 Geo.L.J. 252 (1963).

FN74. See, e.g., Southside Estates Baptist Church v. Board of Trustees, 115 So.2d 697 (Fla.); Lewis v. Mandeville, 201 Misc. 120, 107 N.Y.S.2d 865; cf. School District No. 97 v. Schmidt, 128 Colo. 495, 263 P.2d 581 (temporary loan of school district's custodian to church). A different problem may be presented with respect to the regular use of public school property for religious activities, State ex rel. Gilbert v. Dilley, 95 Neb. 527, 145 N.W. 999, 50 N.R.A.,N.S., 1182; the erection on public property of a statute of or memorial to an essentially religious figure, State ex rel. Singelmann v. Morrison, 57 So.2d 238 (La.App.); seasonal displays of a religious character, Baer v. Kolmorgen, 14 Misc.2d 1015, 181 N.Y.S.2d 230; or the performance on public property of a drama or opera based on religious material or carrying a religious message, cf. County of Los Angeles v. Hollinger, 200 Cal.App.2d 877, 19 Cal.Rptr. 648.

1612 Such activities and practices seem distinguishable from the sponsorship of daily Bible reading and prayer recital. For one thing, there is no element of coercion present in the appointment of military or prison chaplains; the soldier or convict who declines the opportunities for worship would not ordinarily subject himself to the suspicion or obloquy of his peers. Of special significance to this distinction is the fact that we are here usually dealing*299 with adults, not with impressionable children as in the public schools. Moreover, the school exercises are not designed to provide the pupils with general opportunities for worship denied them by the legal obligation to attend school. The student's compelled presence in school for five days a week in no way renders the regular religious facilities of the community less accessible to him than they are to others. The situation of the school child is therefore plainly unlike that of the isolated soldier or the prisoner.

The State must be steadfastly neutral in all matters of faith, and neither favor nor inhibit religion. In my view, government cannot sponsor religious exercises in the public schools without jeopardizing that neutrality. On the other hand, hostility, not neutrality, would characterize the refusal to provide chaplains and places of worship for prisoners and soldiers cut off by the State from all civilian opportunities for public communion, the withholding of draft exemptions for ministers and conscientious objectors, or the denial of the temporary use of an empty public building to a congregation whose place of worship has been destroyed by fire or flood. I do not say that government must provide chaplains or draft exemptions, or that the courts should intercede if it fails to do so.

B. Establishment and Exercises in Legislative Bodies.-The saying of invocational prayers in legislative chambers, state or federal, and the appointment of legislative chaplains, might well represent no involvements of the kind prohibited by the Establishment Clause.[FN75] Legislators, federal and state, are mature adults who may presumably absent themselves from such public and ceremonial300 exercises without incurring any penalty, direct or indirect. It may also be significant that, at least in the case of the Congress, Art. I, s 5, of the Constitution makes each House the monitor of the 'Rules of its Proceedings' so that it is at least arguable whether such matters present 'political questions' the resolution of which is exclusively confided to Congress. See Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 232, 82 S.Ct. 691, 718, 7 L.Ed.2d 663. Finally, there is the difficult question of who may be heard to challenge such practices. See Elliott v. White, 57 App.D.C. 389, 23 F.2d 997.

FN75. Compare Moulton and Myers, Report on Appointing Chaplains to the Legislature of New York, in Blau, Cornerstones of Religious Freedom in America (1949), 141-156; Comment, 63 Col.L.Rev. 73, 97 (1963).

C. Non-Devotional Use of the Bible In the Public Schools.-The holding of the Court today plainly does not foreclose teaching about the Holy Scriptures or about the differences between religious sects in classes in literature or history. Indeed, whether or not the Bible is involved, it would be impossible to teach meaningfully many subjects in the social sciences or the humanities without some mention of religion.[FN76] To what *1613 extent, and at what points in the curriculum, religious materials should be cited are matters which the courts ought to entrust very largely to the experienced officials who superintend our Nation's public schools. They are experts in such matters, and we are not. We should heed Mr. Justice Jackson's caveat that any attempt by this Court to announce curricular standards would be 'to decree a uniform, rigid and, if we are consistent, an unchanging standard for countless school boards representing301 and serving highly localized groups which not only differ from each other but which themselves from time to time change attitudes.' Illinois ex rel. McCollum v. Board of Education, supra, at 237 of 333 U.S., at 478 of 68 S.Ct.

FN76. A comprehensive survey of the problems raised concerning the role of religion in the secular curriculum is contained in Brown, ed., The Study of Religion in the Public Schools: An Appraisal (1958). See also Katz, Religion and American Constitutions, Lecture at Northwestern University Law School, March 21, 1963, pp. 37-41; Educational Policies Comm'n of the National Education Assn., Moral and Spiritual Values in the Public Schools (1951), 49-80. Compare, for a consideration of similar problems in state-supported colleges and universities, Louisell and Jackson, Religion, Theology, and Public Higher Education, 50 Cal.L.Rev. 751 (1962).

We do not, however, in my view usurp the jurisdiction of school administrators by holding as we do today that morning devotional exercises in any form are constitutionally invalid. But there is no occasion now to go further and anticipate problems we cannot judge with the material now before us. Any attempt to impose rigid limits upon the mention of God or references to the Bible in the classroom would be fraught with dangers. If it should sometime hereafter be shown that in fact religion can play no part in the teaching of a given subject without resurrecting the ghost of the practices we strike down today, it will then be time enough to consider questions we must now defer.

D. Uniform Tax Exemptions Incidentally Available to Religious Institutions.-Nothing we hold today questions the propriety of certain tax deductions or exemptions which incidentally benefit churches and religious institutions, along with many secular charities and nonprofit organizations. If religious institutions benefit, it is in spite of rather than because of their religious character. For religious institutions simply share benefits which government makes generally available to educational, charitable, and eleemosynary groups. [FN77] There is no indication that taxing authorities have used such benefits in any way to subsidize worship or foster belief in God. And as 302 among religious beneficiaries, the tax exemption or deduction can be truly nondiscriminatory, available on equal terms to small as well as large religious bodies, to popular and unpopular sects, and to those organizations which reject as well as those which accept a belief in God.[FN78]

FN77. See generally Torpey, Judicial Doctrines of Religious Rights in America (1948), c. VI; Van Alstyne, Tax Exemption of Church Property, 20 Ohio State L.J. 461 (1959); Sutherland, Due Process and Disestablishment, 62 Harv.L.Rev. 1306, 1336-1338 (1949); Louisell and Jackson, Religion, Theology, and Public Higher Education, 50 Cal.L.Rev. 751, 773-780 (1962); 7 De Paul L.Rev. 206 (1958); 58 Col.L.Rev. 417 (1958); 9 Stan.L.Rev. 366 (1957).

E. Religious Considerations in Public Welfare Programs.-Since government may not support or directly aid religious activities without violating the Establishment Clause, there might be some doubt whether nondiscriminatory programs of governmental aid may constitutionally include individuals who become eligible wholly or partially for religious reasons. For example, it might be suggested that where a State provides unemployment compensation generally to those who are unable to find suitable work, it may not extend such benefits to persons who are unemployed by reason of religious beliefs or practices without thereby establishing the religion to which those persons belong. Therefore, the argument runs, the State may avoid an establishment only by singling out and excluding such persons on the ground that religious beliefs or practices have made them potential beneficiaries. Such a construction would, it seems to me, *1614 require government to impose religious discriminations and disabilities, thereby jeopardizing the free exercise of religion, in order to avoid what is thought to constitute an establishment.

The inescapable flaw in the argument, I suggest, is its quite unrealistic view of the aims of the Establishment Clause. The Framers were not concerned with the effects of certain incidental aids to individual worshippers which come about as by-products of general and nondiscriminatory welfare programs. If such benefits serve to make 303 easier or less expensive the practice of a particular creed, or of all religions, it can hardly be said that the purpose of the program is in any way religious, or that the consequence of its nondiscriminatory application is to create the forbidden degree of interdependence between secular and sectarian institutions. I cannot therefore accept the suggestion, which seems to me implicit in the argument outlined here, that every judicial or administrative construction which is designed to prevent a public welfare program from abridging the free exercise of religious beliefs, is for that reason ipso facto an establishment of religion.

F. Activities Which, Though Religious in Origin, Have Ceased to Have Religious Meaning.-As we noted in our Sunday Law decisions, nearly every criminal law on the books can be traced to some religious principle or inspiration. But that does not make the present enforcement of the criminal law in any sense an establishment of religion, simply because it accords with widely held religious principles. As we said in McGowan v. Maryland, 366 U.S. 420, 442, 81 S.Ct. 1101, 1113, 6 L.Ed.2d 393, 'the 'Establishment' Clause does not ban federal or state regulation of conduct whose reason or effect merely happens to coincide or harmonize with the tenets of some or all religions.' This rationale suggests that the use of the motto 'In God We Trust' on currency, on documents and public buildings and the like may not offend the clause. It is not that the use of those four words can be dismissed as 'de minimis'-for I suspect there would be intense opposition to the abandonment of that motto. The truth is that we have simply interwoven the motto so deeply into the fabric of our civil polity that its present use may well not present that type of involvement which the First Amendment prohibits.

This general principle might also serve to insulate the various patriotic exercises and activities used in the public schools and elsewhere which, whatever may have been 304 their origins, no longer have a religious purpose or meaning. The reference to divinity in the revised pledge of allegiance, for example, may merely recognize the historical fact that our Nation was believed to have been founded 'under God.' Thus reciting the pledge may be no more of a religious exercise than the reading aloud of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, which contains an allusion to the same historical fact.

The principles which we reaffirm and apply today can hardly be thought novel or radical. They are, in truth, as old as the Republic itself, and have always been as integral a part of the First Amendment as the very words of that charter of religious liberty. No less applicable today than they were when first pronounced a century ago, one year after the very first court decision involving religious exercises in the public schools, are the words of a distinguished Chief Justice of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, Jeremiah S. Black:

'The manifest object of the men who framed the institutions of this country, was to have a State without religion, and a Church without politics-that is to say, they meant that one should never be used as an engine for any purpose of the other, and that no man's rights in one should be tested by his opinions about the other. As the Church takes no note of men's political differences, so the State looks with equal eye on all the modes of religious1615 faith. * * * Our fathers seem to have been perfectly sincere in their belief that the members of the Church would be more patriotic, and the citizens of the State more religious, by keeping their respective functions entirely separate.' Essay on Religious Liberty, in Black, ed., Essays and Speeches of Jeremiah S. Black (1866), 53.

As is apparent from the opinions filed today, delineation of the constitutionally permissible relationship between religion and government is a most difficult and sensitive task, calling for the careful exercise of both judicial and public judgment and restraint. The considerations which lead the Court today to interdict the clearly religious practices presented in these cases are to me wholly compelling; I have no doubt as to the propriety of the decision and therefore join the opinion and judgment of the Court. The singular sensitivity and concern which surround both the legal and practical judgments involved impel me, however, to add a few words in further explication, while at the same time avoiding repetition of the carefully and ably framed examination of history and authority by my Brethren.

The First Amendment's guarantees, as applied to the States through the Fourteenth Amendment, foreclose not only laws 'respecting an establishment of religion' but also those 'prohibiting the free exercise thereof.' These two proscriptions are to be read together, and in light of the single end which they are designed to serve. The basic purpose of the religion clause of the First Amendment is to promote and assure the fullest possible scope of religious liberty and tolerance for all and to nurture the conditions which secure the best hope of attainment of that end.

The fullest realization of true religious liberty requires that government neither engage in nor compel religious practices, that it effect no favoritism among sects or between religion and nonreligion, and that it work deterrence of no religious belief. But devotion even to these simply stated objectives presents no easy course, for the unavoidable accommodations necessary to achieve the *306 maximum enjoyment of each and all of them are often difficult of discernment. There is for me no simple and clear measure which by precise application can readily and invariably demark the permissible from the impermissible.

It is said, and I agree, that the attitude of government toward religion must be one of neutrality. But untutored devotion to the concept of neutrality can lead to invocation or approval of results which partake not simply of that noninterference and noninvolvement with the religious which the Constitution commands, but of a brooding and pervasive devotion to the secular and a passive, or even active, hostility to the religious. Such results are not only not compelled by the Constitution, but, it seems to me, are prohibited by it.

Neither government nor this Court can or should ignore the significance of the fact that a vast portion of our people believe in and worship God and that many of our legal, political and personal values derive historically from religious teachings. Government must inevitably take cognizance of the existence of religion and, indeed, under certain circumstances the First Amendment may require that it do so. And it seems clear to me from the opinions in the present and past cases that the Court would recognize the propriety of providing military chaplains and of the teaching about religion, as distinguished from the teaching of religion, in the public schools. The examples could readily be multiplied, for both the required and the permissible accommodations between state and church frame the relation as one free of hostility or favor and productive of religious and political harmony, but without undue involvement of one in the concerns or practices of the other. To *1616 be sure, the judgment in each case is a delicate one, but it must be made if we are to do loyal service as judges to the ultimate First Amendment objective of religious liberty.

307 The practices here involved do not fall within any sensible or acceptable concept of compelled or permitted accommodation and involve the state so significantly and directly in the realm of the sectarian as to give rise to those very divisive influences and inhibitions of freedom which both religion clauses of the First Amendment preclude. The state has ordained and has utilized its facilities to engage in unmistakably religious exercises-the devotional reading and recitation of the Holy Bible-in a manner having substantial and significant import and impact. That it has selected, rather than written, a particular devotional liturgy seems to me without constitutional import. The pervasive religiosity and direct governmental involvement inhering in the prescription of prayer and Bible reading in the public schools, during and as part of the curricular day, involving young impressionable children whose school attendance is statutorily compelled, and utilizing the prestige, power, and influence of school administration, staff, and authority, cannot realistically be termed simply accommodation, and must fall within the interdiction of the First Amendment. I find nothing in the opinion of the Court which says more than this. And, of course, today's decision does not mean that all incidents of government which import of the religious are therefore and without more banned by the strictures of the Establishment Clause. As the Court declared only last Term in Engel v. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421, 435, n. 21, 82 S.Ct. 1261, 1269, 8 L.Ed.2d 601:

'There is of course nothing in the decision reached here that is inconsistent with the fact that school children and others are officially encouraged to express love for our country by reciting historical documents such as the Declaration of Independence which contain references to the Deity or by singing officially espoused anthems which imclude the composer's professions of faith in a Supreme Being, or 308 with the fact that there are many manifestations in our public life of belief in God. Such patriotic or ceremonial occasions bear no true resemblance to the unquestioned religious exercise that the State * * * has sponsored in this instance.'

The First Amendment does not prohibit practices which by any realistic measure create none of the dangers which it is designed to prevent and which do not so directly or substantially involve the state in religious exercises or in the favoring of religion as to have meaningful and practical impact. It is of course true that great consequences can grow from small beginnings, but the measure of constitutional adjudication is the ability and willingness to distinguish between real threat and mere shadow.

Mr. Justice STEWART, dissenting.

I think the records in the two cases before us are so fundamentally deficient as to make impossible an informed or responsible determination of the constitutional issues presented. Specifically, I cannot agree that on these records we can say that the Establishment Clause has necessarily been violated. [FN1] But I think there exist serious questions under both that provision and the Free Exercise Clause-insofar as each is imbedded in the Fourteenth Amendment-which require the remand of these cases for the taking of additional evidence.

> FN1. It is instructive, in this connection, to examine the complaints in the two cases before us. Neither complaint attacks the challenged practices as 'establishments.' What both allege as the basis for their causes of actions are, rather, violations of religious liberty.

*1617 I.

The First Amendment declares that 'Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof * * *.' It is, I 309 think, a fallacious oversimplification to regard these two provisions as establishing a single constitutional standard of 'separation of church and state,' which can be mechanically applied in every case to delineate the required boundaries between government and religion. We err in the first place if we do not recognize, as a matter of history and as a matter of the imperatives of our free society, that religion and government must necessarily interact in countless ways. Secondly, the fact is that while in many contexts the Establishment Clause and the Free Exercise Clause fully complement each other, there are areas in which a doctrinaire reading of the Establishment Clause leads to irreconcilable conflict with the Free Exercise Clause.

© 2011 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

A single obvious example should suffice to make the point. Spending federal funds to employ chaplains for the armed forces might be said to violate the Establishment Clause. Yet a lonely soldier stationed at some far-away outpost could surely complain that a government which did not provide him the opportunity for pastoral guidance was affirmatively prohibiting the free exercise of his religion. And such examples could readily be multiplied. The short of the matter is simply that the two relevant clauses of the First Amendment cannot accurately be reflected in a sterile metaphor which by its very nature may distort rather than illumine the problems involved in a particular case. Cf. Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398, 83 S.Ct. 1790.

II.

As a matter of history, the First Amendment was adopted solely as a limitation upon the newly created National Government. The events leading to its adoption strongly suggest that the Establishment Clause was primarily an attempt to insure that Congress not only would be powerless to establish a national church, but 310 would also be unable to interfere with existing state establishments. See McGowan v. Maryland, 366 U.S. 420, 440-441, 81 S.Ct. 1101, 1112-1113, 6 L.Ed.2d 393. Each State was left free to go its own way and pursue its own policy with respect to religion. Thus Virginia from the beginning pursued a policy of disestablishmentarianism. Massachusetts, by contrast, had an established church until well into the nineteenth century.

So matters stood until the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment, or more accurately, until this Court's decision in Cantwell v. Connecticut, in 1940.310 U.S. 296, 60 S.Ct. 900, 84 L.Ed. 1213. In that case the Court said: 'The First Amendment declares that Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. The Fourteenth Amendment has rendered the legislatures of the states as incompetent as Congress to enact such laws.'[FN2]

> FN2. 310 U.S., at 303, 60 S.Ct., at 903, 84 L.Ed. 1213. The Court's statement as to the Establishment Clause in Cantwell was dictum. The case was decided on free exercise grounds.

I accept without question that the liberty guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment against impairment by the States embraces in full the right of free exercise of religion protected by the First Amendment, and I yield to no one in my conception of the breadth of that freedom. See Braunfeld v. Brown, 366 U.S. 599, 616, 81 S.Ct. 1144, 1152, 6 L.Ed.2d 563 (dissenting opinion). I accept too the proposition that the Fourteenth Amendment has somehow absorbed the Establishment Clause, although it is not without irony that a constitutional provision evidently designed to leave the States free to go their own way should now have become a restriction upon their *1618 autonomy. But I cannot agree with what seems to me the insensitive definition of the Establishment Clause contained in the Court's opinion, nor with the different but, I think, equally mechanistic definitions contained in the separate opinions which have been filed.

311 III.

Since the Cantwell pronouncement in 1940, this Court has only twice held invalid state laws on the ground that they were laws 'respecting an establishment of religion' in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. Illinois ex rel. McCollum v. Board of Education, 333 U.S. 203, 68 S.Ct. 461, 92 L.Ed. 649; Engel v. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421, 82 S.Ct. 1261, 8 L.Ed.2d 601. On the other hand, the Court has upheld against such a challenge laws establishing Sunday as a compulsory day of rest, McGowan v. Maryland, 366 U.S. 420, 81 S.Ct. 1101, 6 L.Ed.2d 393, and a law authorizing reimbursement from public funds for the transportation of parochial school pupils. Everson v. Board of Education, 330 U.S. 1, 67 S.Ct. 504, 91 L.Ed. 711.

Unlike other First Amendment guarantees, there is an inherent limitation upon the applicability of the Establishment Clause's ban on state support to religion. That limitation was succinctly put in Everson v. Board of Education, 330 U.S. 1, 18, 67 S.Ct. 504, 513, 91 L.Ed. 711: 'State power is no more to be used so as to handicap religions, than it is to favor them.' [FN3] And in a later case, this Court recognized that the limitation was one which was itself compelled by the free exercise guarantee. 'To hold that a state cannot consistently with the First and Fourteenth Amendments utilize its public school system to aid any or all religious faiths or sects in the dissemination of their doctrines and ideals does not * * * manifest a governmental hostility to religion or religious teachings. A manifestation of such hostility would be at war with our national tradition as embodied in the First Amendment's guaranty of the free 312 exercise of religion.' Illinois ex rel. McCollum v. Board of Education, 333 U.S. 203, 211-212, 68 S.Ct. 461, 465, 92 L.Ed. 649.

> FN3. See also, in this connection, Zorach v. Clauson, 343 U.S. 306, 314, 72 S.Ct. 679, 684, 96 L.Ed. 954: 'Government may not finance religious groups nor undertake religious instruction nor blend secular and sectarian education nor use secular institutions to force one or some religion on any person. But we find no constitutional requirement which makes it necessary for government to be hostile to religion and to throw its weight against efforts to widen the effective scope of religious influence.'

That the central value embodied in the First Amendment-and, more particularly, in the guarantee of 'liberty' contained in the Fourteenth-is the safeguarding of an individual's right to free exercise of his religion has been consistently recognized. Thus, in the case of Hamilton v. Regents, 293 U.S. 245, 265, 55 S.Ct. 197, 205, 79 L.Ed. 343, Mr. Justice Cardozo, concurring, assumed that it was '* * * the religious liberty protected by the First Amendment against invasion by the nation (which) is protected by the Fourteenth Amendment against invasion by the states.' (Emphasis added.) And in Cantwell v. Connecticut, supra, the purpose of those guarantees was described in the following terms: 'On the one hand, it forestalls compulsion by law of the acceptance of any creed or the practice of any form of worship. Freedom of conscience and freedom to adhere to such religious organization or form of worship as the individual may choose cannot be restricted by law. On the other hand, it safeguards the free exercise of the closen form of religion.' 310 U.S., at 303, 60 S.Ct., at 903, 84 L.Ed. 1213.

It is this concept of constitutional protection embodied in our decisions which makes the cases before us such difficult ones for me. For there is involved in these cases a substantial free exercise *1619 claim on the part of those who affirmatively desire to have their children's school day open with the reading of passages from the Bible.

It has become accepted that the decision in Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 45 S.Ct. 571, 69 L.Ed. 1070, upholding the right of parents to send their children to nonpublic schools, was ultimately based upon the recognition of the validity of the free exercise claim involved in that situation. It might be argued here that parents who wanted their children to be exposed to religious influences in school could, under Pierce, send their children to private or parochial 313 schools. But the consideration which renders this contention too facile to be determinative has already been recognized by the Court: 'Freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of religion are available to all, not merely to those who can pay their own way.' Murdock v. Commonwealth of Pennslyvania, 319 U.S. 105, 111, 63 S.Ct. 870, 874, 87 L.Ed. 1292.

It might also be argued that parents who want their children exposed to religious influences can adequately fulfill that wish off school property and outside school time. With all its surface persuasiveness, however, this argument seriously misconceives the basic constitutional justification for permitting the exercises at issue in these cases. For a compulsory state educational system so structures a child's life that if religious exercises are held to be an impermissible activity in schools, religion is placed at an artificial and state-created disadvantage. Viewed in this light, permission of such exercises for those who want them is necessary if the schools are truly to be neutral in the matter of religion. And a refusal to permit religious exercises thus is seen, not as the realization of state neutrality, but rather as the establishment of a religion of secularism, or at the least, as government support of the beliefs of those who think that religious exercises should be conducted only in private.

What seems to me to be of paramount importance, then, is recognition of the fact that the claim advanced here in favor of Bible reading is sufficiently substantial to make simple reference to the constitutional phrase 'establishment of religion' as inadequate an analysis of the cases before us as the ritualistic invocation of the nonconstitutional phrase 'separation of church and state.' What these cases compel, rather, is an analysis of just what the 'neutrality' is which is required by the interplay of the Establishment and Free Exercise Clauses of the First Amendment, as imbedded in the Fourteenth.

314 IV.

Our decisions make clear that there is no constitutional bar to the use of government property for religious purposes. On the contrary, this Court has consistently held that the discriminatory barring of religious groups from public property is itself a violation of First and Fourteenth Amendment guarantees. Fowler v. Rhode Island, 345 U.S. 67, 73 S.Ct. 526, 97 L.Ed. 828; Niemotko v. Maryland, 340 U.S. 268, 71 S.Ct. 325, 95 L.Ed. 267. A different standard has been applied to public school property, because of the coercive effect which the use by religious sects of a compulsory school system would necessarily have upon the children involved. Illinois ex rel. McCollum v. Board of Education, 333 U.S. 203, 68 S.Ct. 461, 92 L.Ed. 649. But insofar as the McCollum decision rests on the Establishment rather than the Free Exercise Clause, it is clear that its effect is limited to religious instruction-to government support of proselytizing activities of religious sects by throwing the weight of secular authority behind the dissemination of religious tenets. [FN4]

> FN4. 'This is beyond all question a utilization of the tax-established and tax-supported public school system to aid religious groups to spread their faith.' Illinois ex rel. McCollum v. Board of Education, 333 U.S. 203, 210, 68 S.Ct. 461, 464, 92 L.Ed. 649. (Emphasis added.)

*1620 The dangers both to government and to religion inherent in official support of instruction in the tenets of various religious sects are absent in the present cases, which involve only a reading from the Bible unaccompanied by comments which might otherwise constitute instruction. Indeed, since, from all that appears in either record, any teacher who does not wish to do so is free not to participate,[FN5] it cannot even be contended that some 315 infinitesimal part of the salaries paid by the State are made contingent upon the performance of a religious function.

> FN5. The Pennsylvania statute was specifically amended to remove the compulsion upon teachers. Act of December 17, 1959, P.L.1928, 24 Purdon's Pa.Stat.Ann. s 15-1516. Since the Maryland case is here on a demurrer, the issue of whether or not a teacher could be dismissed for refusal to participate seems, among many others, never to have been raised.

In the absence of evidence that the legislature or school board intended to prohibit local schools from substituting a different set of readings where parents requested such a change, we should not assume that the provisions before us-as actually administered-may not be construed simply as authorizing religious exercises, nor that the designations may not be treated simply as indications of the promulgating body's view as to the community's preference. We are under a duty to interpret these provisions so as to render them constitutional if reasonably possible. Compare Two Guys From Harrison-Allentown, Inc. v. McGinley, 366 U.S. 582, 592-595, 81 S.Ct. 1135, 1140-1142, 6 L.Ed.2d 551; Everson v. Board of Education, 330 U.S. 1, 4, and n. 2, 67 S.Ct. 504, 505, 506, 91 L.Ed. 711. In the Schempp case there is evidence which indicates that variations were in fact permitted by the very school there involved, and that further variations were not introduced only because of the absence of requests from parents. And in the Murray case the Baltimore rule itself contains a provision permitting another version of the Bible to be substituted for the King James version.

If the provisions are not so construed, I think that their validity under the Establishment Clause would be extremely doubtful, because of the designation of a particular religious book and a denominational prayer. But since, even if the provisions are construed as I believe they must be, I think that the cases before us must be remanded for further evidence on other issues-thus affording the plaintiffs an opportunity to prove that local variations are not in fact permitted-I shall for the balance316 of this dissenting opinion treat the provisions before us as making the variety and content of the exercises, as well as a choice as to their implementation, matters which ultimately reflect the consensus of each local school community. In the absence of coercion upon those who do not wish to participate-because they hold less strong beliefs, other beliefs, or no beliefs at all-such provisions cannot, in my view, be held to represent the type of support of religion barred by the Establishment Clause. For the only support which such rules provide for religion is the withholding of state hostility-a simple acknowledgment on the part of secular authorities that the Constitution does not require extirpation of all expression of religious belief.

V.

I have said that these provisions authorizing religious exercises are properly to be regarded as measures making possible the free exercise of religion. But it is important to stress that, strictly speaking, what is at issue here is a privilege rather than a right. In other words, the question presented is not whether exercises such as those at issue here are constitutionally compelled, but rather whether they are constitutionally *1621 invalid. And that issue, in my view, turns on the question of coercion.

It is clear that the dangers of coercion involved in the holding of religious exercises in a schoolroom differ qualitatively from those presented by the use of similar exercises or affirmations in ceremonies attended by adults. Even as to children, however, the duty laid upon government in connection with religious exercises in the public schools is that of refraining from so structuring the school environment as to put any kind of pressure on a child to participate in those exercises; it is not that of providing an atmosphere in which children are kept scrupulously insulated from any awareness that some of their fellows 317 may want to open the school day with prayer, or of the fact that there exist in our pluralistic society differences of religious belief.

These are not, it must be stressed, cases like Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483, 74 S.Ct. 686, 98 L.Ed. 873, in which this Court held that, in the sphere of public education, the Fourteenth Amendment's guarantee of equal protection of the laws required that race not be treated as a relevant factor. A segregated school system is not invalid because its operation is coercive; it is invalid simply because our Constitution presupposes that men are created equal, and that therefore racial differences cannot provide a valid basis for governmental action. Accommodation of religious differences on the part of the State, however, is not only permitted but required by that same Constitution.

The governmental neutrality which the First and Fourteenth Amendments require in the cases before us, in other words, is the extension of evehhanded treatment to all who believe, doubt, or disbelieve-a refusal on the part of the State to weight the scales of private choice. In these cases, therefore, what is involved is not state action based on impermissible categories, but rather an attempt by the State to accommodate those differences which the existence in our society of a variety of religious beliefs makes inevitable. The Constitution requires that such efforts be struck down only if they are proven to entail the use of the secular authority of government to coerce a preference among such beliefs.

It may well be, as has been argued to us, that even the supposed benefits to be derived from noncoercive religious exercises in public schools are incommensurate with the administrative problems which they would create. The choice involved, however, is one for each local community and its school board, and not for this Court. For, as I have said, religious exercises are not constitutionally invalid if they simply reflect differences which exist in the 318 society from which the school draws its pupils. They become constitutionally invalid only if their administration places the sanction of secular authority behind one or more particular religious or irreligious beliefs.

To be specific, it seems to me clear that certain types of exercises would present situations in which no possibility of coercion on the part of secular officials could be claimed to exist. Thus, if such exercises were held either before or after the official school day, or if the school schedule were such that participation were merely one among a number of desirable alternatives, [FN6] it could hardly be contended that the exercises did anything more than to provide an opportunity for the voluntary expression of religious belief. On the other hand, a law which provided for religious exercises during the school day and which contained no excusal provision would obviously be unconstitutionally coercive upon those who *1622 did not wish to participate. And even under a law containing an excusal provision, if the exercises where held during the school day, and no equally desirable alternative were provided by the school authorities, the likelihood that children might be under at least some psychological compulsion to participate would be great. In a case such as the latter, however, I think we would err if we assumed such coercion in the absence of any evidence.[FN7]

FN6. See, e.g., the description of a plan permitting religious instruction off school property contained in Illinois ex rel.

McCollum v. Board of Education, 333 U.S. 203, 224, 68 S.Ct. 461, 478, 92 L.Ed. 649 (separate opinion of Mr. Justice Frankfurther).

FN7. Cf. 'The task of separating the secular from the religious in education is one of magnitude, intricacy and delicacy. To lay down a sweeping constitutional doctrine as demanded by complainant and apparently approved by the Court, applicable alike to all school boards of the nation, * * * is to decree a uniform, rigid and, if we are consistent, an unchanging standard for countless school boards representing and serving highly localized groups which not only differ from each other but which themselves from time to time change attitudes. It seems to me that to do so is to allow zeal for our own ideas of what is good in public instruction to induce us to accept the role of a super board of education for every school district in the nation.' Illinois ex rel. McCollum v. Board of Education, 333 U.S. 203, 237, 68 S.Ct. 461, 478, 92 L.Ed. 649 (concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Jackson).

319 VI.

Viewed in this light, it seems to me clear that the records in both of the cases before us are wholly inadequate to support an informed or responsible decision. Both cases involve provisions which explicitly permit any student who wishes, to be excused from participation in the exercises. There is no evidence in either case as to whether there would exist any coercion of any kind upon a student who did not want to participate. No evidence at all was adduced in the Murray case, because it was decided upon a demurrer. All that we have in that case, therefore, is the conclusory language of a pleading. While such conclusory allegations are acceptable for procedural purposes, I think that the nature of the constitutional problem involved here clearly demands that no decision be made except upon evidence. In the Schempp case the record shows no more than a subjective prophecy by a parent of what he thought would happen if a request were made to be excused from participation in the exercises under the amended statute. No such request was ever made, and there is no evidence whatever as to what might or would actually happen, nor of what administrative arrangements the school actually might or could make to free from pressure of any kind those who do not want to participate in the exercises. There were no District Court findings on this issue, since the case under the amended statute was decided exclusively on Establishment Clause grounds. 201 F.Supp. 815.

What our Constitution indispensably protects is the freedom of each of us, be he Jew or Agnostic, Christian or 320 Atheist, Buddhist or Freethinker, to believe or disbelieve, to worship or not worship, to pray or keep silent, according to his own conscience, uncoerced and unrestrained by government. It is conceivable that these school boards, or even all school boards, might eventually find it impossible to administer a system of religious exercises during school hours in such a way as to meet this constitutional standard-in such a way as completely to free from any kind of official coercion those who do not affirmatively want to participate.[FN8] But I think we must not assume that school boards so lack the qualities of inventiveness and good will as to make impossible the achievement of that goal.

FN8. For example, if the record in the Schempp case contained proof (rather than mere prophecy) that the timing of morning announcements by the school was such as to handicap children who did not want to listen to the Bible reading, or that the excusal provision was so administered as to carry any overtones of social inferiority, then impermissible coercion would clearly exist.

I would remand both cases for further hearing.

Supreme Court of the United States
EMPLOYMENT DIVISION, DEPARTMENT OF HUMAN RESOURCES OF OREGON, et al., Petitioners
v.
Alfred L. SMITH et al.

No. 88-1213.
Argued Nov. 6, 1989.
Decided April 17, 1990.
Rehearing Denied June 4, 1990.
See 496 U.S. 913, 110 S.Ct. 2605.

Claimants sought review of determination that their religious use of peyote, which resulted in their dismissal from employment, was "misconduct" disqualifying them from receipt of Oregon unemployment compensation benefits. In one case, the Oregon Court of Appeals, 75 Or.App. 764, 709 P.2d 246, reversed and remanded. The Oregon Supreme Court, 301 Or. 209, 721 P.2d 445, affirmed as modified. In the second case, the Oregon Court of Appeals, 75 Or.App. 735, 707 P.2d 1274, reversed. The Oregon Supreme Court, 301 Or. 221, 721 P.2d 451, affirmed as modified and remanded. Petition for writ of certiorari was granted. The Supreme Court, Justice Stevens, 485 U.S. 660, 108 S.Ct. 1444, 99 L.Ed.2d 753, vacated judgment and remanded for determination whether sacramental peyote use was proscribed by state's controlled substance law. On remand, the Oregon Supreme Court, 307 Or. 68, 763 P.2d 146, held that sacramental peyote use violated state drug laws, but concluded that prohibition was nonetheless invalid under free exercise clause. The Supreme Court, Scalia, J., held that: (1) free exercise clause did not prohibit application of Oregon drug laws to ceremonial ingestion of peyote, and (2) thus state could, consistent with free exercise clause, deny claimants unemployment compensation for work-related misconduct based on use of drug.

Reversed.

Justice O'Connor filed opinion concurring in judgment, in which opinion Justices Brennan, Marshall and Blackmun joined as to Parts I and II only.

Justice Blackmun filed dissenting opinion, in which Justices Brennan and Marshall join.

Opinion on remand, 310 Or. 376, 799 P.2d 148.

State of Oregon could, consistent with free exercise clause, deny claimants unemployment compensation benefits on ground of misconduct for dismissal from drug counseling positions resulting from their sacramental use of drug peyote at ceremony of Native American church, since ingestion of peyote was illegal under Oregon criminal laws and that prohibition was constitutional. FN* The syllabus constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court but has been prepared by the Reporter of Decisions for the convenience of the reader. See United States v. Detroit Lumber Co., 200 U.S. 321, 337, 26 S.Ct. 282, 237, 50 L.Ed. 499.

872 Respondents Smith and Black were fired by a private drug rehabilitation organization because they ingested peyote, a hallucinogenic drug, for sacramental purposes at a ceremony of their Native American Church. Their applications for unemployment compensation were denied by the State of Oregon under a state law disqualifying employees discharged for work-related "misconduct." Holding that the denials violated respondents' First Amendment free exercise rights, the State Court of Appeals reversed. The State Supreme Court affirmed, but this Court vacated the judgment and remanded for a determination whether sacramental peyote use is proscribed by the State's controlled substance law, which makes it a felony to knowingly or intentionally possess the drug. Pending that determination, the Court refused to decide whether such use is protected by the Constitution. On remand, the State Supreme Court held that sacramental peyote use violated, and was not excepted from, the state-law prohibition, but concluded that that prohibition was invalid under the Free Exercise Clause.

Held: The Free Exercise Clause permits the State to prohibit sacramental peyote use and thus to deny unemployment benefits to persons discharged for such use. Pp. 1598-1606.

(a) Although a State would be "prohibiting the free exercise [of religion]" in violation of the Clause if it sought to ban the performance of (or abstention from) physical acts solely because of their religious motivation, the Clause does not relieve an individual of the obligation to comply with a law that incidentally forbids (or requires) the performance of an act that his religious belief requires (or forbids) if the law is not specifically directed to religious practice and is otherwise constitutional as applied to those who engage in the specified act for nonreligious reasons. See, e.g., Reynolds v. United States, 98 U.S. 145, 166-167, 25 L.Ed. 244. The only decisions in which this Court has held that the First Amendment bars application of a neutral, generally applicable law to religiously motivated action are distinguished *1597 on the ground that they involved not the Free Exercise Clause alone, but that Clause in conjunction with other constitutionalprotections. 873 See, e.g., Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 304-307, 60 S.Ct. 900, 903-905, 84 L.Ed. 1213; Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205, 92 S.Ct. 1526, 32 L.Ed.2d 15. Pp. 1598-1602.

(b) Respondents' claim for a religious exemption from the Oregon law cannot be evaluated under the balancing test set forth in the line of cases following Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398, 402-403, 83 S.Ct. 1790, 1792-1794, 10 L.Ed.2d 965, whereby governmental actions that substantially burden a religious practice must be justified by a "compelling governmental interest." That test was developed in a context-unemployment compensation eligibility rules-that lent itself to individualized governmental assessment of the reasons for the relevant conduct. The test is inapplicable to an across-the-board criminal prohibition on a particular form of conduct. A holding to the contrary would create an extraordinary right to ignore generally applicable laws that are not supported by "compelling governmental interest" on the basis of religious belief. Nor could such a right be limited to situations in which the conduct prohibited is "central" to the individual's religion, since that would enmesh judges in an impermissible inquiry into the centrality of particular beliefs or practices to a faith. Cf. Hernandez v. Commissioner, 490 U.S. 680, 699, 109 S.Ct. 2136, 2148-2149, 104 L.Ed.2d 766. Thus, although it is constitutionally permissible to exempt sacramental peyote use from the operation of drug laws, it is not constitutionally required. Pp. 1602-1606.

874 Justice SCALIA delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case requires us to decide whether the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment permits the State of Oregon to include religiously inspired peyote use within the reach of its general criminal prohibition on use of that drug, and thus permits the State to deny unemployment benefits to persons dismissed from their jobs because of such religiously inspired use.

I

Oregon law prohibits the knowing or intentional possession of a "controlled substance" unless the substance has been prescribed by a medical practitioner. Ore.Rev.Stat. § 475.992(4) (1987). The law defines "controlled substance" as a drug classified in Schedules I through V of the Federal Controlled Substances Act, 21 U.S.C. §§ 811-812, as modified by the State Board of Pharmacy. Ore.Rev.Stat. § 475.005(6) (1987). Persons who violate this provision by possessing a controlled substance listed on Schedule I are "guilty of a Class B felony." § 475.992(4)(a). As compiled by the State Board of Pharmacy under its statutory authority, see, § 475.035, Schedule I contains the drug peyote, a hallucinogen derived from the plant Lophophora williamsii Lemaire. Ore.Admin.Rule 855-80-021(3)(s) (1988).

Respondents Alfred Smith and Galen Black (hereinafter respondents) were fired from their jobs with a private drug rehabilitation organization because they ingested peyote for sacramental purposes at a ceremony of the Native American Church, of which *1598 both are members. When respondents applied to petitioner Employment Division (hereinafter petitioner) for unemployment compensation, they were determined to be ineligible for benefits because they had been discharged for work-related "misconduct." The Oregon Court of Appeals reversed that determination, holding that the denial of benefits violated respondents' free exercise rights under the First Amendment.

875 On appeal to the Oregon Supreme Court, petitioner argued that the denial of benefits was permissible because respondents' consumption of peyote was a crime under Oregon law. The Oregon Supreme Court reasoned, however, that the criminality of respondents' peyote use was irrelevant to resolution of their constitutional claim-since the purpose of the "misconduct" provision under which respondents had been disqualified was not to enforce the State's criminal laws but to preserve the financial integrity of the compensation fund, and since that purpose was inadequate to justify the burden that disqualification imposed on respondents' religious practice. Citing our decisions in Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398, 83 S.Ct. 1790, 10 L.Ed.2d 965 (1963), and Thomas v. Review Bd., Indiana Employment Security Div., 450 U.S. 707, 101 S.Ct. 1425, 67 L.Ed.2d 624 (1981), the court concluded that respondents were entitled to payment of unemployment benefits. Smith v. Employment Div., Dept. of Human Resources, 301 Or. 209, 217-219, 721 P.2d 445, 449-450 (1986). We granted certiorari. 480 U.S. 916, 107 S.Ct. 1368, 94 L.Ed.2d 684 (1987).

Before this Court in 1987, petitioner continued to maintain that the illegality of respondents' peyote consumption was relevant to their constitutional claim. We agreed, concluding that "if a State has prohibited through its criminal laws certain kinds of religiously motivated conduct without violating the First Amendment, it certainly follows that it may impose the lesser burden of denying unemployment compensation benefits to persons who engage in that conduct." Employment Div., Dept. of Human Resources of Oregon v. Smith, 485 U.S. 660, 670, 108 S.Ct. 1444, 1450, 99 L.Ed.2d 753 (1988) (Smith I). We noted, however, that the Oregon Supreme Court had not decided whether respondents' sacramental use of peyote was in fact proscribed by Oregon's controlled substance law, and that this issue was a matter of dispute between the parties. Being "uncertain about the legality of the religious use of peyote in

© 2011 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

Oregon," we determined that it would not be "appropriate for us to decide whether the practice is protected by the Federal Constitution." Id., at 673, 108 S.Ct., at 1452. Accordingly, we 876 vacated the judgment of the Oregon Supreme Court and remanded for further proceedings. Id., at 674, 108 S.Ct., at 1452.

On remand, the Oregon Supreme Court held that respondents' religiously inspired use of peyote fell within the prohibition of the Oregon statute, which "makes no exception for the sacramental use" of the drug. 307 Or. 68, 72-73, 763 P.2d 146, 148 (1988). It then considered whether that prohibition was valid under the Free Exercise Clause, and concluded that it was not. The court therefore reaffirmed its previous ruling that the State could not deny unemployment benefits to respondents for having engaged in that practice.

We again granted certiorari. 489 U.S. 1077, 109 S.Ct. 1526, 103 L.Ed.2d 832 (1989).

II

Respondents' claim for relief rests on our decisions in Sherbert v. Verner, supra, Thomas v. Review Bd. of Indiana Employment Security Div., supra, and Hobbie v. Unemployment Appeals Comm'n of Florida, 480 U.S. 136, 107 S.Ct. 1046, 94 L.Ed.2d 190 (1987), in which we held that a State could not condition the availability of unemployment insurance on an individual's willingness to forgo conduct required by his religion. As we observed in Smith I, however, the conduct at issue in those cases was not prohibited by law. We held that distinction to be critical, for "if Oregon does prohibit the religious*1599 use of peyote, and if that prohibition is consistent with the Federal Constitution, there is no federal right to engage in that conduct in Oregon," and "the State is free to withhold unemployment compensation from respondents for engaging in work-related misconduct, despite its religious motivation." 485 U.S., at 672, 108 S.Ct., at 1451. Now that the Oregon Supreme Court has confirmed that Oregon does prohibit the religious use of peyote, we proceed to consider whether that prohibition is permissible under the Free Exercise Clause.

[1][2] The Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment, which has been made applicable to the States by incorporation into 877 the Fourteenth Amendment, see Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 303, 60 S.Ct. 900, 903, 84 L.Ed. 1213 (1940), provides that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.... " U.S. Const., Amdt. 1 (emphasis added.) The free exercise of religion means, first and foremost, the right to believe and profess whatever religious doctrine one desires. Thus, the First Amendment obviously excludes all "governmental regulation of religious beliefs as such." Sherbert v. Verner, supra, 374 U.S., at 402, 83 S.Ct., at 1793. The government may not compel affirmation of religious belief, see Torcaso v. Watkins, 367 U.S. 488, 81 S.Ct. 1680, 6 L.Ed.2d 982 (1961), punish the expression of religious doctrines it believes to be false, United States v. Ballard, 322 U.S. 78, 86-88, 64 S.Ct. 882, 886-87, 88 L.Ed. 1148 (1944), impose special disabilities on the basis of religious views or religious status, see McDaniel v. Paty, 435 U.S. 618, 98 S.Ct. 1322, 55 L.Ed.2d 593 (1978); Fowler v. Rhode Island, 345 U.S. 67, 69, 73 S.Ct. 526, 527, 97 L.Ed. 828 (1953); cf. Larson v. Valente, 456 U.S. 228, 245, 102 S.Ct. 1673, 1683-84, 72 L.Ed.2d 33 (1982), or lend its power to one or the other side in controversies over religious authority or dogma, see Presbyterian Church in U.S. v. Mary Elizabeth Blue Hull Memorial Presbyterian Church, 393 U.S. 440, 445 452, 89 S.Ct. 601, 604-608, 21 L.Ed.2d 658 (1969); Kedroff v. St. Nicholas Cathedral, 344 U.S. 94, 95-119, 73 S.Ct. 143, 143-56, 97 L.Ed. 120 (1952); Serbian Eastern Orthodox Diocese v. Milivojevich, 426 U.S. 696, 708-725, 96 S.Ct. 2372, 2380-2388, 49 L.Ed.2d 151 (1976).

[3] But the "exercise of religion" often involves not only belief and profession but the performance of (or abstention from) physical acts: assembling with others for a worship service, participating in sacramental use of bread and wine, proselytizing, abstaining from certain foods or certain modes of transportation. It would be true, we think (though no case of ours has involved the point), that a State would be "prohibiting the free exercise [of religion]" if it sought to ban such acts or abstentions only when they are engaged in for religious reasons, or only because of the religious belief that they display. It would doubtless be unconstitutional, for example, to ban the casting of "statues that are to be used 878 for worship purposes," or to prohibit bowing down before a golden calf.

© 2011 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

Respondents in the present case, however, seek to carry the meaning of "prohibiting the free exercise [of religion]" one large step further. They contend that their religious motivation for using peyote places them beyond the reach of a criminal law that is not specifically directed at their religious practice, and that is concededly constitutional as applied to those who use the drug for other reasons. They assert, in other words, that "prohibiting the free exercise [of religion]" includes requiring any individual to observe a generally applicable law that requires (or forbids) the performance of an act that his religious belief forbids (or requires). As a textual matter, we do not think the words must be given that meaning. It is no more necessary to regard the collection of a general tax, for example, as "prohibiting the free exercise [of religion]" by those citizens who believe support of organized government to be sinful, than it is to regard the same tax as "abridging the freedom ... of the press" of *1600 those publishing companies that must pay the tax as a condition of staying in business. It is a permissible reading of the text, in the one case as in the other, to say that if prohibiting the exercise of religion (or burdening the activity of printing) is not the object of the tax but merely the incidental effect of a generally applicable and otherwise valid provision, the First Amendment has not been offended. Compare Citizen Publishing Co. v. United States, 394 U.S. 131, 139, 89 S.Ct. 927, 931-32, 22 L.Ed.2d 148 (1969) (upholding application of antitrust laws to press), with Grosjean v. American Press Co., 297 U.S. 233, 250-251, 56 S.Ct. 444, 449, 80 L.Ed. 660 (1936) (striking down license tax applied only to newspapers with weekly circulation above a specified level); see generally Minneapolis Star & Tribune Co. v. Minnesota Comm'r of Revenue, 460 U.S. 575, 581, 103 S.Ct. 1365, 1369-70, 75 L.Ed.2d 295 (1983).

Our decisions reveal that the latter reading is the correct one. We have never held that an individual's religious beliefs879 excuse him from compliance with an otherwise valid law prohibiting conduct that the State is free to regulate. On the contrary, the record of more than a century of our free exercise jurisprudence contradicts that proposition. As described succinctly by Justice Frankfurter in Minersville School Dist. Bd. of Ed. v. Gobitis, 310 U.S. 586, 594-595, 60 S.Ct. 1010, 1012-1013, 84 L.Ed. 1375 (1940): "Conscientious scruples have not, in the course of the long struggle for religious toleration, relieved the individual from obedience to a general law not aimed at the promotion or restriction of religious beliefs. The mere possession of religious convictions which contradict the relevant concerns of a political society does not relieve the citizen from the discharge of political responsibilities (footnote omitted)." We first had occasion to assert that principle in Reynolds v. United States, 98 U.S. 145, 25 L.Ed. 244 (1878), where we rejected the claim that criminal laws against polygamy could not be constitutionally applied to those whose religion commanded the practice. "Laws," we said, "are made for the government of actions, and while they cannot interfere with mere religious belief and opinions, they may with practices.... Can a man excuse his practices to the contrary because of his religious belief? To permit this would be to make the professed doctrines of religious belief superior to the law of the land, and in effect to permit every citizen to become a law unto himself." Id., at 166-167.

Subsequent decisions have consistently held that the right of free exercise does not relieve an individual of the obligation to comply with a "valid and neutral law of general applicability on the ground that the law proscribes (or prescribes) conduct that his religion prescribes (or proscribes)." United States v. Lee, 455 U.S. 252, 263, n. 3, 102 S.Ct. 1051, 1058, n. 3, 71 L.Ed.2d 127 (1982) (STEVENS, J., concurring in judgment); see Minersville School Dist. Bd. of Ed. v. Gobitis, supra, 310 U.S., at 595, 60 S.Ct., at 1013 (collecting cases). In Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 64 S.Ct. 438, 88 L.Ed. 645 (1944), we held that a mother could be prosecuted under the child labor laws 880 for using her children to dispense literature in the streets, her religious motivation notwithstanding. We found no constitutional infirmity in "excluding [these children] from doing there what no other children may do." Id., at 171, 64 S.Ct., at 444. In Braunfeld v. Brown, 366 U.S. 599, 81 S.Ct. 1144, 6 L.Ed.2d 563 (1961) (plurality opinion), we upheld Sunday-closing laws against the claim that they burdened the religious practices of persons whose religions compelled them to refrain from work on other days. In Gillette v. United States, 401 U.S. 437, 461, 91 S.Ct. 828, 842, 28 L.Ed.2d 168 (1971), we sustained the military Selective Service System against the claim that it violated free exercise by conscripting persons who opposed a particular war on religious grounds.

1601 Our most recent decision involving a neutral, generally applicable regulatory law that compelled activity forbidden by an individual's religion was United States v. Lee, 455 U.S., at 258-261, 102 S.Ct., at 1055-1057. There, an Amish employer, on behalf of himself and his employees, sought exemption from collection and payment of Social Security taxes on the ground that the Amish faith prohibited participation in governmental support programs. We rejected the claim that an exemption was constitutionally required. There would be no way, we observed, to distinguish the Amish believer's objection to Social Security taxes from the religious objections that others might have to the collection or use of other taxes. "If, for example, a religious adherent believes war is a sin, and if a certain percentage of the federal budget can be identified as devoted to war-related activities, such individuals would have a similarly valid claim to be exempt from paying that percentage of the income tax. The tax system could not function if denominations were allowed to challenge the tax system because tax payments were spent in a manner that violates their religious belief." Id., at 260, 102 S.Ct., at 1056-57. Cf. Hernandez v. Commissioner, 490 U.S. 680, 109 S.Ct. 2136, 104 L.Ed.2d 766 (1989) (rejecting free exercise challenge to payment of income taxes alleged to make religious activities more difficult).

*881 The only decisions in which we have held that the First Amendment bars application of a neutral, generally applicable law to religiously motivated action have involved not the Free Exercise Clause alone, but the Free Exercise Clause in conjunction with other constitutional protections, such as freedom of speech and of the press, see Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S., at 304-307, 60 S.Ct., at 903-905 (invalidating a licensing system for religious and charitable solicitations under which the administrator had discretion to deny a license to any cause he deemed nonreligious); Murdock v. Pennsylvania, 319 U.S. 105, 63 S.Ct. 870, 87 L.Ed. 1292 (1943) (invalidating a flat tax on solicitation as applied to the dissemination of religious ideas); Follett v. McCormick, 321 U.S. 573, 64 S.Ct. 717, 88 L.Ed. 938 (1944) (same), or the right of parents, acknowledged in Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 45 S.Ct. 571, 69 L.Ed. 1070 (1925), to direct the education of their children, see Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205, 92 S.Ct. 1526, 32 L.Ed.2d 15 (1972) (invalidating compulsory school-attendance laws as applied to Amish parents who refused on religious grounds to send their children to school). [FN1] *882 Some of our cases prohibiting compelled expression, decided exclusively upon free speech grounds, have also involved freedom of religion, cf. Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705, 97 S.Ct. 1428, 51 L.Ed.2d 752 (1977) (invalidating compelled display of a license plate slogan that offended individual religious beliefs); West Virginia Bd. of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 63 S.Ct. 1178, 87 L.Ed. 1628 (1943) (invalidating1602 compulsory flag salute statute challenged by religious objectors). And it is easy to envision a case in which a challenge on freedom of association grounds would likewise be reinforced by Free Exercise Clause concerns. Cf. Roberts v. United States Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609, 622, 104 S.Ct. 3244, 3251-52, 82 L.Ed.2d 462 (1984) ("An individual's freedom to speak, to worship, and to petition the government for the redress of grievances could not be vigorously protected from interference by the State [if] a correlative freedom to engage in group effort toward those ends were not also guaranteed").

FN1. Both lines of cases have specifically adverted to the non-free-exercise principle involved. Cantwell, for example, observed that "[t]he fundamental law declares the interest of the United States that the free exercise of religion be not prohibited and that freedom to communicate information and opinion be not abridged." 310 U.S., at 307, 60 S.Ct., at 905. Murdock said:

> "We do not mean to say that religious groups and the press are free from all financial burdens of government.... We have here something quite different, for example, from a tax on the income of one who engages in religious activities or a tax on property used or employed in connection with those activities. It is one thing to impose a tax on the income or property of a preacher. It is quite another thing to exact a tax from him for the privilege of delivering a sermon.... Those who can deprive religious groups of their colporteurs can take from them a part of the vital power of the press which has survived from the Reformation." 319 U.S., at 112, 63 S.Ct., at 874.

© 2011 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

> Yoder said that "the Court's holding in Pierce stands as a charter of the rights of parents to direct the religious upbringing of their children. And, when the interests of parenthood are combined with a free exercise claim of the nature revealed by this record, more than merely a 'reasonable relation to some purpose within the competency of the State' is required to sustain the validity of the State's requirement under the First Amendment." 406 U.S., at 233, 92 S.Ct., at 1542.

The present case does not present such a hybrid situation, but a free exercise claim unconnected with any communicative activity or parental right. Respondents urge us to hold, quite simply, that when otherwise prohibitable conduct is accompanied by religious convictions, not only the convictions but the conduct itself must be free from governmental regulation. We have never held that, and decline to do so now. There being no contention that Oregon's drug law represents an attempt to regulate religious beliefs, the communication of religious beliefs, or the raising of one's children in those beliefs, the rule to which we have adhered ever since Reynolds plainly controls. "Our cases do not at their farthest reach support the proposition that a stance of conscientious opposition relieves an objector from any colliding duty fixed by a democratic government." Gillette v. United States, supra, 401 U.S., at 461, 91 S.Ct., at 842.

[4] Respondents argue that even though exemption from generally applicable criminal laws need not automatically be extended to religiously motivated actors, at least the claim for a 883 religious exemption must be evaluated under the balancing test set forth in Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398, 83 S.Ct. 1790, 10 L.Ed.2d 965 (1963). Under the Sherbert test, governmental actions that substantially burden a religious practice must be justified by a compelling governmental interest. See id., at 402-403, 83 S.Ct., at 1792-1794; see also Hernandez v. Commissioner, 490 U.S., at 699, 109 S.Ct., at 2148. Applying that test we have, on three occasions, invalidated state unemployment compensation rules that conditioned the availability of benefits upon an applicant's willingness to work under conditions forbidden by his religion. See Sherbert v. Verner, supra; Thomas v. Review Bd. of Indiana Employment Security Div., 450 U.S. 707, 101 S.Ct. 1425, 67 L.Ed.2d 624 (1981); Hobbie v. Unemployment Appeals Comm'n of Florida, 480 U.S. 136, 107 S.Ct. 1046, 94 L.Ed.2d 190 (1987). We have never invalidated any governmental action on the basis of the Sherbert test except the denial of unemployment compensation. Although we have sometimes purported to apply the Sherbert test in contexts other than that, we have always found the test satisfied, see United States v. Lee, 455 U.S. 252, 102 S.Ct. 1051, 71 L.Ed.2d 127 (1982); Gillette v. United States, 401 U.S. 437, 91 S.Ct. 828, 28 L.Ed.2d 168 (1971). In recent years we have abstained from applying the Sherbert test (outside the unemployment compensation field) at all. In Bowen v. Roy, 476 U.S. 693, 106 S.Ct. 2147, 90 L.Ed.2d 735 (1986), we declined to apply Sherbert analysis to a federal statutory scheme that required benefit applicants and recipients to provide their Social Security numbers. The plaintiffs in that case asserted that it would violate their religious beliefs to obtain and provide a Social Security number for their daughter. We held the statute's application to the plaintiffs valid regardless of whether it was necessary to effectuate a compelling interest. See 476 U.S., at 699-701, 106 S.Ct., at 2151-53. In Lyng v. Northwest Indian Cemetery Protective Assn., 485 U.S. 439, 108 S.Ct. 1319, 99 L.Ed.2d 534 (1988), we declined to apply Sherbert analysis to the Government's logging and road construction activities on lands used for religious purposes by several Native American Tribes, even though it was undisputed that the activities *1603 "could have devastating effects on traditional Indian religious practices," 485 U.S., at 451, 108 S.Ct., at 1326. 884 In Goldman v. Weinberger, 475 U.S. 503, 106 S.Ct. 1310, 89 L.Ed.2d 478 (1986), we rejected application of the Sherbert test to military dress regulations that forbade the wearing of yarmulkes. In O'Lone v. Estate of Shabazz, 482 U.S. 342, 107 S.Ct. 2400, 96 L.Ed.2d 282 (1987), we sustained, without mentioning the Sherbert test, a prison's refusal to excuse inmates from work requirements to attend worship services.

Even if we were inclined to breathe into Sherbert some life beyond the unemployment compensation field, we would not apply it to require exemptions from a generally applicable criminal law. The Sherbert test, it must be recalled, was developed in a context that lent itself to individualized governmental assessment of the reasons for the relevant conduct.

As a plurality of the Court noted in Roy, a distinctive feature of unemployment compensation programs is that their eligibility criteria invite consideration of the particular circumstances behind an applicant's unemployment: "The statutory conditions [in Sherbert and Thomas] provided that a person was not eligible for unemployment compensation benefits if, 'without good cause,' he had quit work or refused available work. The 'good cause' standard created a mechanism for individualized exemptions." Bowen v. Roy, supra, 476 U.S., at 708, 106 S.Ct., at 2156 (opinion of Burger, C.J., joined by Powell and REHNQUIST, JJ.). See also Sherbert, supra, 374 U.S., at 401, n. 4, 83 S.Ct., at 1792, n. 4 (reading state unemployment compensation law as allowing benefits for unemployment caused by at least some "personal reasons"). As the plurality pointed out in Roy, our decisions in the unemployment cases stand for the proposition that where the State has in place a system of individual exemptions, it may not refuse to extend that system to cases of "religious hardship" without compelling reason. Bowen v. Roy, supra, 476 U.S., at 708, 106 S.Ct., at 2156-57.

Whether or not the decisions are that limited, they at least have nothing to do with an across-the-board criminal prohibition on a particular form of conduct. Although, as noted earlier, we have sometimes used the Sherbert test to analyze free exercise challenges to such laws, see 885United States v. Lee, supra,* 455 U.S., at 257-260, 102 S.Ct., at 1055-1057; Gillette v. United States, supra, 401 U.S., at 462, 91 S.Ct., at 842-43, we have never applied the test to invalidate one. We conclude today that the sounder approach, and the approach in accord with the vast majority of our precedents, is to hold the test inapplicable to such challenges. The government's ability to enforce generally applicable prohibitions of socially harmful conduct, like its ability to carry out other aspects of public policy, "cannot depend on measuring the effects of a governmental action on a religious objector's spiritual development." Lyng, supra, 485 U.S., at 451, 108 S.Ct., at 1326. To make an individual's obligation to obey such a law contingent upon the law's coincidence with his religious beliefs, except where the State's interest is "compelling"-permitting him, by virtue of his beliefs, "to become a law unto himself," Reynolds v. United States, 98 U.S., at 167-contradicts both constitutional tradition and common sense.[FN2]

FN2. Justice O'CONNOR seeks to distinguish Lyng v. Northwest Indian Cemetery Protective Assn., 485 U.S. 439, 108 S.Ct. 1319, 99 L.Ed.2d 534 (1988), and Bowen v. Roy, 476 U.S. 693, 106 S.Ct. 2147, 90 L.Ed.2d 735 (1986), on the ground that those cases involved the government's conduct of "its own internal affairs," which is different because, as Justice Douglas said in Sherbert, " 'the Free Exercise Clause is written in terms of what the government cannot do to the individual, not in terms of what the individual can exact from the government.' " Post, at 1611-1612 (O'CONNOR, J., concurring in judgment), quoting Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398, 412, 83 S.Ct. 1790, 1798, 10 L.Ed.2d 965 (1963) (Douglas, J., concurring). But since Justice Douglas voted with the majority in Sherbert, that quote obviously envisioned that what "the government cannot do to the individual" includes not just the prohibition of an individual's freedom of action through criminal laws but also the running of its programs (in Sherbert, state unemployment compensation) in such fashion as to harm the individual's religious interests. Moreover, it is hard to see any reason in principle or practicality why the government should have to tailor its health and safety laws to conform to the diversity of religious belief, but should not have to tailor its management of public lands, Lyng, supra, or its administration of welfare programs, Roy, supra.

*1604 The "compelling government interest" requirement seems benign, because it is familiar from other fields. But using it as the standard that must be met before the government may accord different treatment on the basis of race, see, e.g., *886 Palmore v. Sidoti, 466 U.S. 429, 432, 104 S.Ct. 1879, 1881-82, 80 L.Ed.2d 421 (1984), or before the government may regulate the content of speech, see, e.g., Sable Communications of California v. FCC, 492 U.S. 115, 126, 109 S.Ct. 2829, 2836, 106 L.Ed.2d 93 (1989), is not remotely comparable to using it for the purpose asserted here. What it produces in those other fields-equality of treatment and an unrestricted flow of contending speech-are constitutional norms; what it would produce here-a private right to ignore generally applicable laws-is a constitutional anomaly.[FN3]

FN3. Justice O'CONNOR suggests that "[t]here is nothing talismanic about neutral laws of general applicability," and that all laws burdening religious practices should be subject to compelling-interest scrutiny because "the First Amendment unequivocally makes freedom of religion, like freedom from race discrimination and freedom of speech, a 'constitutional nor[m],' not an 'anomaly.' " Post, at 1612 (opinion concurring in judgment). But this comparison with other fields supports, rather than undermines, the conclusion we draw today. Just as we subject to the most exacting scrutiny laws that make classifications based on race, see Palmore v. Sidoti, 466 U.S. 429, 104 S.Ct. 1879, 80 L.Ed.2d 421 (1984), or on the content of speech, see Sable Communications of California v. FCC, 492 U.S. 115, 109 S.Ct. 2829, 106 L.Ed.2d 93 (1989), so too we strictly scrutinize governmental classifications based on religion, see McDaniel v. Paty, 435 U.S. 618, 98 S.Ct. 1322, 55 L.Ed.2d 593 (1978); see also Torcaso v. Watkins, 367 U.S. 488, 81 S.Ct. 1680, 6 L.Ed.2d 982 (1961). But we have held that race-neutral laws that have the effect of disproportionately disadvantaging a particular racial group do not thereby become subject to compelling-interest analysis under the Equal Protection Clause, see Washington v. Davis, 426 U.S. 229, 96 S.Ct. 2040, 48 L.Ed.2d 597 (1976) (police employment examination); and we have held that generally applicable laws unconcerned with regulating speech that have the effect of interfering with speech do not thereby become subject to compelling-interest analysis under the First Amendment, see Citizen Publishing Co. v. United States, 394 U.S. 131, 139, 89 S.Ct. 927, 22 L.Ed.2d 148 (1969) (antitrust laws). Our conclusion that generally applicable, religion-neutral laws that have the effect of burdening a particular religious practice need not be justified by a compelling governmental interest is the only approach compatible with these precedents.

Nor is it possible to limit the impact of respondents' proposal by requiring a "compelling state interest" only when the conduct prohibited is "central" to the individual's religion. Cf. Lyng v. Northwest Indian Cemetery Protective Assn., 485 U.S., at 474-476, 108 S.Ct., at 1338-1339 (BRENNAN, J., dissenting). It is no 887 more appropriate for judges to determine the "centrality" of religious beliefs before applying a "compelling interest" test in the free exercise field, than it would be for them to determine the "importance" of ideas before applying the "compelling interest" test in the free speech field. What principle of law or logic can be brought to bear to contradict a believer's assertion that a particular act is "central" to his personal faith? Judging the centrality of different religious practices is akin to the unacceptable "business of evaluating the relative merits of differing religious claims." United States v. Lee, 455 U.S., at 263 n. 2, 102 S.Ct., at 1058 n. 2 (STEVENS, J., concurring). As we reaffirmed only last Term, "[i]t is not within the judicial ken to question the centrality of particular beliefs or practices to a faith, or the validity of particular litigants' interpretations of those creeds." Hernandez v. Commissioner, 490 U.S., at 699, 109 S.Ct., at 2148. Repeatedly and in many different contexts, we have warned that courts must not presume to determine the place of a particular belief in a religion or the plausibility of a religious claim. See, e.g., Thomas v. Review Bd. of Indiana Employment Security Div., 450 U.S., at 716, 101 S.Ct., at 1431; 1605Presbyterian Church in U.S. v. Mary Elizabeth Blue Hull Memorial Presbyterian Church, 393 U.S., at 450, 89 S.Ct., at 606-07; Jones v. Wolf, 443 U.S. 595, 602-606, 99 S.Ct. 3020, 3024-3027, 61 L.Ed.2d 775 (1979); United States v. Ballard, 322 U.S. 78, 85-87, 64 S.Ct. 882, 885-87, 88 L.Ed. 1148 (1944).[FN4]

FN4. While arguing that we should apply the compelling interest test in this case, Justice O'CONNOR nonetheless agrees that "our determination of the constitutionality of Oregon's general criminal prohibition cannot, and should not, turn on the centrality of the particular religious practice at issue," post, at 1615 (opinion concurring in judgment). This means, presumably, that compelling interest scrutiny must be applied to generally applicable laws that regulate or prohibit any religiously motivated activity, no matter how unimportant to the claimant's religion. Earlier in her opinion, however, Justice O'CONNOR appears to contradict this, saying that the proper approach is "to > determine whether the burden on the specific plaintiffs before us is constitutionally significant and whether the particular criminal interest asserted by the State before us is compelling." Post, at 1611. "Constitutionally significant burden" would seem to be "centrality" under another name. In any case, dispensing with a "centrality" inquiry is utterly unworkable. It would require, for example, the same degree of "compelling state interest" to impede the practice of throwing rice at church weddings as to impede the practice of getting married in church. There is no way out of the difficulty that, if general laws are to be subjected to a "religious practice" exception, both the importance of the law at issue and the centrality of the practice at issue must reasonably be considered.

> Nor is this difficulty avoided by Justice BLACKMUN's assertion that "although ... courts should refrain from delving into questions whether, as a matter of religious doctrine, a particular practice is 'central' to the religion, ... I do not think this means that the courts must turn a blind eye to the severe impact of a State's restrictions on the adherents of a minority religion." Post, at 1621 (dissenting opinion). As Justice BLACKMUN's opinion proceeds to make clear, inquiry into "severe impact" is no different from inquiry into centrality. He has merely substituted for the question "How important is X to the religious adherent?" the question "How great will be the harm to the religious adherent if X is taken away?" There is no material difference.

888 If the "compelling interest" test is to be applied at all, then, it must be applied across the board, to all actions thought to be religiously commanded. Moreover, if "compelling interest" really means what it says (and watering it down here would subvert its rigor in the other fields where it is applied), many laws will not meet the test. Any society adopting such a system would be courting anarchy, but that danger increases in direct proportion to the society's diversity of religious beliefs, and its determination to coerce or suppress none of them. Precisely because "we are a cosmopolitan nation made up of people of almost every conceivable religious preference," Braunfeld v. Brown, 366 U.S., at 606, 81 S.Ct., at 1147, and precisely because we value and protect that religious divergence, we cannot afford the luxury of deeming presumptively invalid, as applied to the religious objector, every regulation of conduct that does not protect an interest of the highest order. The rule respondents favor would open the prospect of constitutionally required religious exemptions from civic obligations of almost every conceivable kind-ranging from 889 compulsory military service, see, e.g., Gillette v. United States, 401 U.S. 437, 91 S.Ct. 828, 28 L.Ed.2d 168 (1971), to the payment of taxes, see, e.g., United States v. Lee, supra; to health and safety regulation such as manslaughter and child neglect laws, see, e.g., Funkhouser v. State, 763 P.2d 695 (Okla.Crim.App.1988), compulsory vaccination laws, see, e.g., Cude v. State, 237 Ark. 927, 377 S.W.2d 816 (1964), drug laws, see, e.g., Olsen v. Drug Enforcement Administration, 279 U.S.App.D.C. 1, 878 F.2d 1458 (1989), and traffic laws, see Cox v. New Hampshire, 312 U.S. 569, 61 S.Ct. 762, 85 L.Ed. 1049 (1941); to social welfare legislation such as minimum wage laws, see Tony and Susan Alamo Foundation v. Secretary of Labor, 471 U.S. 290, 105 S.Ct. 1953, 85 L.Ed.2d 278 (1985), child labor laws, see Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 64 S.Ct. 438, 88 L.Ed. 645 (1944), animal cruelty laws, see, e.g., Church of the Lukumi Babalu Aye Inc. v. City of Hialeah, 723 F.Supp. 1467 (SD Fla.1989), cf. State v. Massey, 229 N.C. 734, 51 S.E.2d 179, appeal dism'd, 336 U.S. 942, 69 S.Ct. 813, 93 L.Ed. 1099 (1949), environmental protection laws, *1606 see United States v. Little, 638 F.Supp. 337 (Mont.1986), and laws providing for equality of opportunity for the races, see, *e.g., Bob Jones University v. > FN5. Justice O'CONNOR contends that the "parade of horribles" in the text only "demonstrates ... that courts have been quite capable of ... strik [ing] sensible balances between religious liberty and competing state interests." Post, at 1612-1613 (opinion concurring in judgment). But the cases we cite have struck "sensible balances" only because they have all applied the general laws, despite the claims for religious exemption.

© 2011 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

> In any event, Justice O'CONNOR mistakes the purpose of our parade: it is not to suggest that courts would necessarily permit harmful exemptions from these laws (though they might), but to suggest that courts would constantly be in the business of determining whether the "severe impact" of various laws on religious practice (to use Justice BLACKMUN's terminology post, at 1621) or the "constitutiona[l] significan[ce]" of the "burden on the specific plaintiffs" (to use Justice O'CONNOR's terminology post, at 1611) suffices to permit us to confer an exemption. It is a parade of horribles because it is horrible to contemplate that federal judges will regularly balance against the importance of general laws the significance of religious practice.

[5] 890 Values that are protected against government interference through enshrinement in the Bill of Rights are not thereby banished from the political process. Just as a society that believes in the negative protection accorded to the press by the First Amendment is likely to enact laws that affirmatively foster the dissemination of the printed word, so also a society that believes in the negative protection accorded to religious belief can be expected to be solicitous of that value in its legislation as well. It is therefore not surprising that a number of States have made an exception to their drug laws for sacramental peyote use. See, e.g., Ariz.Rev.Stat.Ann. §§ 13-3402(B)(1)-(3) (1989); Colo.Rev.Stat. § 12-22-317(3) (1985); N.M.Stat.Ann. § 30-31-6(D) (Supp.1989). But to say that a nondiscriminatory religious-practice exemption is permitted, or even that it is desirable, is not to say that it is constitutionally required, and that the appropriate occasions for its creation can be discerned by the courts. It may fairly be said that leaving accommodation to the political process will place at a relative disadvantage those religious practices that are not widely engaged in; but that unavoidable consequence of democratic government must be preferred to a system in which each conscience is a law unto itself or in which judges weigh the social importance of all laws against the centrality of all religious beliefs.

[6] Because respondents' ingestion of peyote was prohibited under Oregon law, and because that prohibition is constitutional, Oregon may, consistent with the Free Exercise Clause, deny respondents unemployment compensation when their dismissal results from use of the drug. The decision of the Oregon Supreme Court is accordingly reversed.

It is so ordered.

891 Justice O'CONNOR, with whom Justice BRENNAN, Justice MARSHALL, and Justice BLACKMUN join as to Parts I and II, concurring in the judgment. [FN*]

> FN* Although Justice BRENNAN, Justice MARSHALL, and Justice BLACKMUN join Parts I and II of this opinion, they do not concur in the judgment.

Although I agree with the result the Court reaches in this case, I cannot join its opinion. In my view, today's holding dramatically departs from well-settled First Amendment jurisprudence, appears unnecessary to resolve the question presented, and is incompatible with our Nation's fundamental commitment to individual religious liberty.

I

At the outset, I note that I agree with the Court's implicit determination that the constitutional*1607 question upon which we granted review-whether the Free Exercise Clause protects a person's religiously motivated use of peyote from the reach of a State's general criminal law prohibition-is properly presented in this case. As the Court recounts, respondents Alfred Smith and Galen Black (hereinafter respondents) were denied unemployment compensation benefits because their sacramental use of peyote constituted work-related "misconduct," not because they violated Oregon's general criminal prohibition against possession of peyote. We held, however, in Employment Div., Dept. of Human Resources of Oregon v. Smith, 485 U.S. 660, 108 S.Ct. 1444, 99 L.Ed.2d 753 (1988) (Smith I), that whether a State may, consistent with federal law, deny unemployment compensation benefits to persons for their religious use of peyote depends on whether the State, as a matter of state law, has criminalized the underlying conduct. See id., at 670-672, 108 S.Ct., at 1450-51. The Oregon Supreme Court, on remand from this Court, concluded that "the Oregon statute against possession of controlled substances, which include peyote, makes no exception for the sacramental use of peyote." 307 Or. 68, 72-73, 763 P.2d 146, 148 (1988) (footnote omitted).

892 Respondents contend that, because the Oregon Supreme Court declined to decide whether the Oregon Constitution prohibits criminal prosecution for the religious use of peyote, see id., at 73, n. 3, 763 P.2d, at 148, n. 3, any ruling on the federal constitutional question would be premature. Respondents are of course correct that the Oregon Supreme Court may eventually decide that the Oregon Constitution requires the State to provide an exemption from its general criminal prohibition for the religious use of peyote. Such a decision would then reopen the question whether a State may nevertheless deny unemployment compensation benefits to claimants who are discharged for engaging in such conduct. As the case comes to us today, however, the Oregon Supreme Court has plainly ruled that Oregon's prohibition against possession of controlled substances does not contain an exemption for the religious use of peyote. In light of our decision in Smith I, which makes this finding a "necessary predicate to a correct evaluation of respondents' federal claim," 485 U.S., at 672, 108 S.Ct., at 1451, the question presented and addressed is properly before the Court.

II

The Court today extracts from our long history of free exercise precedents the single categorical rule that "if prohibiting the exercise of religion ... is ... merely the incidental effect of a generally applicable and otherwise valid provision, the First Amendment has not been offended." Ante, at 1600 (citations omitted). Indeed, the Court holds that where the law is a generally applicable criminal prohibition, our usual free exercise jurisprudence does not even apply. Ante, at 1603. To reach this sweeping result, however, the Court must not only give a strained reading of the First Amendment but must also disregard our consistent application of free exercise doctrine to cases involving generally applicable regulations that burden religious conduct.

The Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment commands that "Congress shall make no law ... prohibiting the free exercise [of religion]." In Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 60 S.Ct. 900, 84 L.Ed. 1213 (1940), we held that this prohibition applies to the States by incorporation into the Fourteenth Amendment and that it categorically forbids government regulation of religious beliefs. Id., at 303, 60 S.Ct., at 903. As the Court recognizes, however, the "free exercise " of religion often, if not invariably, requires the performance of (or abstention from) certain acts. Ante, at 1599; cf. 3 A New English Dictionary on Historical Principles 401-402 (J. Murray ed. 1897) (defining "exercise" to include "[t]he practice and performance of rites and ceremonies, worship, *1608 etc.; the right or permission to celebrate the observances (of a religion)" and religious observances such as acts of public and private worship, preaching, and prophesying). "[B]elief and action cannot be neatly confined in logic-tight compartments." Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205, 220, 92 S.Ct. 1526, 32 L.Ed.2d 15 (1972). Because the First Amendment does not distinguish between religious belief and religious conduct, conduct motivated by sincere religious belief, like the belief itself, must be at least presumptively protected by the Free Exercise Clause.

The Court today, however, interprets the Clause to permit the government to prohibit, without justification, conduct mandated by an individual's religious beliefs, so long as that prohibition is generally applicable. Ante, at 1599. But a law that prohibits certain conduct-conduct that happens to be an act of worship for someone-manifestly does prohibit that person's free exercise of his religion. A person who is barred from engaging in religiously motivated conduct is barred from freely exercising his religion. Moreover, that person is barred from freely exercising his religion regardless of whether the law prohibits the conduct only when engaged in for religious reasons, only by members of that religion, or by all persons. It is difficult to deny that a law that prohibits894 religiously motivated conduct, even if the law is generally applicable, does not at least implicate First Amendment concerns.

The Court responds that generally applicable laws are "one large step" removed from laws aimed at specific religious practices. Ibid. The First Amendment, however, does not distinguish between laws that are generally applicable and laws that target particular religious practices. Indeed, few States would be so naive as to enact a law directly prohibiting or burdening a religious practice as such. Our free exercise cases have all concerned generally applicable laws that had the effect of significantly burdening a religious practice. If the First Amendment is to have any vitality, it ought not be construed to cover only the extreme and hypothetical situation in which a State directly targets a religious practice. As we have noted in a slightly different context, " '[s]uch a test has no basis in precedent and relegates a serious First Amendment value to the barest level of minimum scrutiny that the Equal Protection Clause already provides.' " Hobbie v. Unemployment Appeals Comm'n of Florida, 480 U.S. 136, 141-142, 107 S.Ct. 1046, 1049, 94 L.Ed.2d 190 (1987) (quoting Bowen v. Roy, 476 U.S. 693, 727, 106 S.Ct. 2147, 2166-67, 90 L.Ed.2d 735 (1986) (O'CONNOR, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part)).

To say that a person's right to free exercise has been burdened, of course, does not mean that he has an absolute right to engage in the conduct. Under our established First Amendment jurisprudence, we have recognized that the freedom to act, unlike the freedom to believe, cannot be absolute. See, e.g., Cantwell, supra, 310 U.S., at 304, 60 S.Ct., at 903-04; Reynolds v. United States, 98 U.S. 145, 161-167, 25 L.Ed. 244 (1878). Instead, we have respected both the First Amendment's express textual mandate and the governmental interest in regulation of conduct by requiring the government to justify any substantial burden on religiously motivated conduct by a compelling state interest and by means narrowly tailored to achieve that interest. See 895Hernandez v. Commissioner*, 490 U.S. 680, 699, 109 S.Ct. 2136, 2148, 104 L.Ed.2d 766 1989); Hobbie, supra, 480 U.S., at 141, 107 S.Ct., at 1049; United States v. Lee, 455 U.S. 252, 257-258 (1982); Thomas v. Review Bd. of Indiana Employment Security Div., 450 U.S. 707, 718, 101 S.Ct. 1425, 1432, 67 L.Ed.2d 624 (1981); McDaniel v. Paty, 435 U.S. 618, 626-629, 98 S.Ct. 1322, 1327-1329, 55 L.Ed.2d 593 (1978) (plurality opinion); Yoder, supra, 406 U.S., at 215, 92 S.Ct., at 1533; Gillette v. United States, 401 U.S. 437, 462, 91 S.Ct. 828, 842, 28 L.Ed.2d 168 (1971); Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398, 403, 83 S.Ct. 1790, 1793-94, 10 L.Ed.2d 965 (1963); see also *1609 Bowen v. Roy, supra, 476 U.S., at 732, 106 S.Ct., at 2169 (opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part); West Virginia State Bd. of Ed. v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 639, 63 S.Ct. 1178, 1186, 87 L.Ed. 1628 (1943). The compelling interest test effectuates the First Amendment's command that religious liberty is an independent liberty, that it occupies a preferred position, and that the Court will not permit encroachments upon this liberty, whether direct or indirect, unless required by clear and compelling governmental interests "of the highest order," Yoder, supra, 406 U.S., at 215, 92 S.Ct., at 1533. "Only an especially important governmental interest pursued by narrowly tailored means can justify exacting a sacrifice of First Amendment freedoms as the price for an equal share of the rights, benefits, and privileges enjoyed by other citizens." Roy, supra, 476 U.S., at 728, 106 S.Ct., at 2167 (opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part).

The Court attempts to support its narrow reading of the Clause by claiming that "[w]e have never held that an individual's religious beliefs excuse him from compliance with an otherwise valid law prohibiting conduct that the State is free to regulate." Ante, at 1600. But as the Court later notes, as it must, in cases such as Cantwell and Yoder we have in fact interpreted the Free Exercise Clause to forbid application of a generally applicable prohibition to religiously motivated conduct. See Cantwell, 310 U.S., at 304-307, 60 S.Ct., at 903-905; Yoder, 406 U.S., at 214-234, 92 S.Ct., at 1532-1542. Indeed, in Yoder we expressly rejected the interpretation the Court now adopts:

> "[O]ur decisions have rejected the idea that religiously grounded conduct is always outside the protection of the Free Exercise Clause. It is true that activities of individuals, even when religiously based, are often subject 896 to regulation by the States in the exercise of their undoubted power to promote the health, safety, and general welfare, or the Federal Government in the exercise of its delegated powers. But to agree that religiously grounded conduct must often be subject to the broad police power of the State is not to deny that there are areas of conduct protected by the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment and thus beyond the power of the State to control, even under regulations of general applicability....
> "... A regulation neutral on its face may, in its application, nonetheless offend the constitutional requirement for government neutrality if it unduly burdens the free exercise of religion." Id., at 219-220, 92 S.Ct., at 1535-36 (emphasis added; citations omitted).

© 2011 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

The Court endeavors to escape from our decisions in Cantwell and Yoder by labeling them "hybrid" decisions, ante, at 1607, but there is no denying that both cases expressly relied on the Free Exercise Clause, see Cantwell, 310 U.S., at 303-307, 60 S.Ct., at 903-905; Yoder, supra, 406 U.S., at 219-229, 92 S.Ct., at 1535-1540, and that we have consistently regarded those cases as part of the mainstream of our free exercise jurisprudence. Moreover, in each of the other cases cited by the Court to support its categorical rule, ante, at 1600-1601, we rejected the particular constitutional claims before us only after carefully weighing the competing interests. See Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 168-170, 64 S.Ct. 438, 443-444, 88 L.Ed. 645 (1944) (state interest in regulating children's activities justifies denial of religious exemption from child labor laws); Braunfeld v. Brown, 366 U.S. 599, 608-609, 81 S.Ct. 1144, 1148-1149, 6 L.Ed.2d 563 (1961) (plurality opinion) (state interest in uniform day of rest justifies denial of religious exemption from Sunday closing law); Gillette, supra, 401 U.S., at 462, 91 S.Ct., at 842-43 (state interest in military affairs justifies denial of religious exemption from conscription laws); Lee, supra, 455 U.S., at 258-259, 102 S.Ct., at 1055-1056 (state interest in comprehensive Social Security system justifies denial of religious exemption from mandatory participation requirement). That we rejected the free exercise897 claims in those cases hardly *1610 calls into question the applicability of First Amendment doctrine in the first place. Indeed, it is surely unusual to judge the vitality of a constitutional doctrine by looking to the win-loss record of the plaintiffs who happen to come before us.

Respondents, of course, do not contend that their conduct is automatically immune from all governmental regulation simply because it is motivated by their sincere religious beliefs. The Court's rejection of that argument, ante, at 1602, might therefore be regarded as merely harmless dictum. Rather, respondents invoke our traditional compelling interest test to argue that the Free Exercise Clause requires the State to grant them a limited exemption from its general criminal prohibition against the possession of peyote. The Court today, however, denies them even the opportunity to make that argument, concluding that "the sounder approach, and the approach in accord with the vast majority of our precedents, is to hold the [compelling interest] test inapplicable to" challenges to general criminal prohibitions. Ante, at 1603.

In my view, however, the essence of a free exercise claim is relief from a burden imposed by government on religious practices or beliefs, whether the burden is imposed directly through laws that prohibit or compel specific religious practices, or indirectly through laws that, in effect, make abandonment of one's own religion or conformity to the religious beliefs of others the price of an equal place in the civil community. As we explained in Thomas:

> "Where the state conditions receipt of an important benefit upon conduct proscribed by a religious faith, or where it denies such a benefit because of conduct mandated by religious belief, thereby putting substantial pressure on an adherent to modify his behavior and to violate his beliefs, a burden upon religion exists." 450 U.S., at 717-718, 101 S.Ct., at 1432.

898 See also Frazee v. Illinois Dept. of Employment Security, 489 U.S. 829, 832, 109 S.Ct. 1514, 1516-1517, 103 L.Ed.2d 914 (1989); Hobbie, 480 U.S., at 141, 107 S.Ct., at 1049. A State that makes criminal an individual's religiously motivated conduct burdens that individual's free exercise of religion in the severest manner possible, for it "results in the choice to the individual of either abandoning his religious principle or facing criminal prosecution." Braunfeld, supra, 366 U.S., at 605, 81 S.Ct., at 1147. I would have thought it beyond argument that such laws implicate free exercise concerns.

Indeed, we have never distinguished between cases in which a State conditions receipt of a benefit on conduct prohibited by religious beliefs and cases in which a State affirmatively prohibits such conduct. The Sherbert compelling interest test applies in both kinds of cases. See, e.g., Lee, 455 U.S., at 257-260, 102 S.Ct., at 1055-1057 (applying Sherbert to uphold Social Security tax liability); Gillette, 401 U.S., at 462, 91 S.Ct., at 842-43 (applying Sherbert to uphold military conscription requirement); Yoder, 406 U.S., at 215-234, 92 S.Ct., at 1533-1538 (applying Sherbert to strike down criminal convictions for violation of compulsory school attendance law). As I noted in Bowen v. Roy :

> "The fact that the underlying dispute involves an award of benefits rather than an exaction of penalties does not grant the Government license to apply a different version of the Constitution....

"... The fact that appellees seek exemption from a precondition that the Government attaches to an award of benefits does not, therefore, generate a meaningful distinction between this case and one where appellees seek an exemption from the Government's imposition of penalties upon them." 476 U.S., at 731-732, 106 S.Ct., at 2168-2169 (opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part).

*1611 See also Hobbie, supra, 480 U.S., at 141-142, 107 S.Ct., at 1049-1050; Sherbert, 374 U.S., at 404, 83 S.Ct., at 1794. I would reaffirm that principle today: A neutral criminal law prohibiting conduct that a State may legitimately regulate is, if anything, more burdensome than a neutral civil 899 statute placing legitimate conditions on the award of a state benefit.

Legislatures, of course, have always been "left free to reach actions which were in violation of social duties or subversive of good order." Reynolds, 98 U.S., at 164; see also Yoder, supra, at 219-220, 92 S.Ct., at 1535-1536; Braunfeld, 366 U.S., at 603-604, 81 S.Ct., at 1145-1146. Yet because of the close relationship between conduct and religious belief, "[i]n every case the power to regulate must be so exercised as not, in attaining a permissible end, unduly to infringe the protected freedom." Cantwell, 310 U.S., at 304, 60 S.Ct., at 903. Once it has been shown that a government regulation or criminal prohibition burdens the free exercise of religion, we have consistently asked the government to demonstrate that unbending application of its regulation to the religious objector "is essential to accomplish an overriding governmental interest," Lee, supra, 455 U.S., at 257-258, 102 S.Ct., at 1055, or represents "the least restrictive means of achieving some compelling state interest," Thomas, supra, 450 U.S., at 718, 101 S.Ct., at 1432. See, e.g., Braunfeld, supra, 366 U.S. at 607, 81 S.Ct., at 1148; Sherbert, supra, 374 U.S., at 406, 83 S.Ct., at 1795; Yoder, supra, 406 U.S., at 214-215, 92 S.Ct., at 1532-1533; Roy, 476 U.S., at 728-732, 106 S.Ct., at 2167-2169 (opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part). To me, the sounder approach-the approach more consistent with our role as judges to decide each case on its individual merits-is to apply this test in each case to determine whether the burden on the specific plaintiffs before us is constitutionally significant and whether the particular criminal interest asserted by the State before us is compelling. Even if, as an empirical matter, a government's criminal laws might usually serve a compelling interest in health, safety, or public order, the First Amendment at least requires a case-by-case determination of the question, sensitive to the facts of each particular claim. Cf. McDaniel, 435 U.S., at 628, n. 8, 98 S.Ct., at 1328, n. 8 (plurality opinion) (noting application of Sherbert to general criminal prohibitions and the "delicate balancing required by our decisions in" Sherbert and Yoder). Given the range of conduct that a State might legitimately make 900 criminal, we cannot assume, merely because a law carries criminal sanctions and is generally applicable, that the First Amendment never requires the State to grant a limited exemption for religiously motivated conduct.

Moreover, we have not "rejected" or "declined to apply" the compelling interest test in our recent cases. Ante, at 1602-1603. Recent cases have instead affirmed that test as a fundamental part of our First Amendment doctrine. See, e.g., Hernandez, 490 U.S., at 699, 109 S.Ct., at 2148-2149; Hobbie, supra, 480 U.S., at 141-142, 107 S.Ct., at 1049-1050 (rejecting Chief Justice Burger's suggestion in Roy, supra, 476 U.S., at 707-708, 106 S.Ct., at 2156-2157, that free exercise claims be assessed under a less rigorous "reasonable means" standard). The cases cited by the Court signal no retreat from our consistent adherence to the compelling interest test. In both Bowen v. Roy, supra, and Lyng v. Northwest Indian Cemetery Protective Assn., 485 U.S. 439, 108 S.Ct. 1319, 99 L.Ed.2d 534 (1988), for example, we expressly distinguished Sherbert on the ground that the First Amendment does not "require the Government itself to behave in ways that the individual believes will further his or her spiritual development.... The Free Exercise Clause simply cannot be understood to require the Government to conduct its own internal affairs in ways that comport with the religious beliefs of particular citizens." Roy, supra, 476 U.S., at 699, 106 S.Ct., at 2152; see Lyng, supra, 485 U.S., at 449, 108 S.Ct., at 1325. This distinction makes sense because "the Free Exercise Clause is written in *1612 terms of what the government cannot do to the individual, not in terms of what the individual can exact from the government." Sherbert, supra, 374 U.S., at 412, 83 S.Ct., at 1798 (Douglas, J., concurring). Because the case sub judice, like the other cases in which we have applied Sherbert, plainly falls into the former category, I would apply those established precedents to the facts of this case.

Similarly, the other cases cited by the Court for the proposition that we have rejected application of the Sherbert test outside the unemployment compensation field, ante, at 1603, are distinguishable because they arose in the narrow, specialized contexts in which we have not traditionally required901 the government to justify a burden on religious conduct by articulating a compelling interest. See Goldman v. Weinberger, 475 U.S. 503, 507, 106 S.Ct. 1310, 1313, 89 L.Ed.2d 478 (1986) ("Our review of military regulations challenged on First Amendment grounds is far more deferential than constitutional review of similar laws or regulations designed for civilian society"); O'Lone v. Estate of Shabazz, 482 U.S. 342, 349, 107 S.Ct. 2400, 2404, 96 L.Ed.2d 282 (1987) ("[P]rison regulations alleged to infringe constitutional rights are judged under a 'reasonableness' test less restrictive than that ordinarily applied to alleged infringements of fundamental constitutional rights") (citation omitted). That we did not apply the compelling interest test in these cases says nothing about whether the test should continue to apply in paradigm free exercise cases such as the one presented here.

The Court today gives no convincing reason to depart from settled First Amendment jurisprudence. There is nothing talismanic about neutral laws of general applicability or general criminal prohibitions, for laws neutral toward religion can coerce a person to violate his religious conscience or intrude upon his religious duties just as effectively as laws aimed at religion. Although the Court suggests that the compelling interest test, as applied to generally applicable laws, would result in a "constitutional anomaly," ante, at 1604, the First Amendment unequivocally makes freedom of religion, like freedom from race discrimination and freedom of speech, a "constitutional nor [m]," not an "anomaly." Ibid. Nor would application of our established free exercise doctrine to this case necessarily be incompatible with our equal protection cases. Cf. Rogers v. Lodge, 458 U.S. 613, 618, 102 S.Ct. 3272, 3276, 73 L.Ed.2d 1012 (1982) (race-neutral law that " 'bears more heavily on one race than another' " may violate equal protection) (citation omitted); Castaneda v. Partida, 430 U.S. 482, 492-495, 97 S.Ct. 1272, 1278-1281, 51 L.Ed.2d 498 (1977) (grand jury selection). We have in any event recognized that the Free Exercise Clause protects values distinct from those protected by the Equal Protection Clause. See Hobbie, 480 U.S., at 141-142, 107 S.Ct., at 1049. As the language of the 902 Clause itself makes clear, an individual's free exercise of religion is a preferred constitutional activity. See, e.g., McConnell, Accommodation of Religion, 1985 S.Ct.Rev. 1, 9 ("[T]he text of the First Amendment itself 'singles out' religion for special protections"); P. Kauper, Religion and the Constitution 17 (1964). A law that makes criminal such an activity therefore triggers constitutional concern-and heightened judicial scrutiny-even if it does not target the particular religious conduct at issue. Our free speech cases similarly recognize that neutral regulations that affect free speech values are subject to a balancing, rather than categorical, approach. See, e.g., United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 1679, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968); Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 46-47, 106 S.Ct. 925, 928-929, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986); cf. Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U.S. 780, 792-794, 103 S.Ct. 1564, 1571-1573, 75 L.Ed.2d 547 (1983) (generally applicable laws may impinge on free association concerns). The Court's parade of horribles, ante, at 1605-1606, not only fails as a reason for discarding the compelling interest *1613 test, it instead demonstrates just the opposite: that courts have been quite capable of applying our free exercise jurisprudence to strike sensible balances between religious liberty and competing state interests.

Finally, the Court today suggests that the disfavoring of minority religions is an "unavoidable consequence" under our system of government and that accommodation of such religions must be left to the political process. Ante, at 1606. In my view, however, the First Amendment was enacted precisely to protect the rights of those whose religious practices are not shared by the majority and may be viewed with hostility. The history of our free exercise doctrine amply demonstrates the harsh impact majoritarian rule has had on unpopular or emerging religious groups such as the Jehovah's Witnesses and the Amish. Indeed, the words of Justice Jackson in West Virginia State Bd. of Ed. v. Barnette (overruling Minersville School Dist. v. Gobitis, 310 U.S. 586, 60 S.Ct. 1010, 84 L.Ed. 1375 (1940)) are apt:

> 903 "The very purpose of a Bill of Rights was to withdraw certain subjects from the vicissitudes > of political controversy, to place them beyond the reach of majorities and officials and to establish them as legal principles to be applied by the courts. One's right to life, liberty, and property, to free speech, a free press, freedom of worship and assembly, and other fundamental rights may not be submitted to vote; they depend on the outcome of no elections." 319 U.S., at 638, 63 S.Ct., at 1185.

See also United States v. Ballard, 322 U.S. 78, 87, 64 S.Ct. 882, 886-87, 88 L.Ed. 1148 (1944) ("The Fathers of the Constitution were not unaware of the varied and extreme views of religious sects, of the violence of disagreement among them, and of the lack of any one religious creed on which all men would agree. They fashioned a charter of government which envisaged the widest possible toleration of conflicting views"). The compelling interest test reflects the First Amendment's mandate of preserving religious liberty to the fullest extent possible in a pluralistic society. For the Court to deem this command a "luxury," ante, at 1605, is to denigrate "[t]he very purpose of a Bill of Rights."

III

The Court's holding today not only misreads settled First Amendment precedent; it appears to be unnecessary to this case. I would reach the same result applying our established free exercise jurisprudence.

A

There is no dispute that Oregon's criminal prohibition of peyote places a severe burden on the ability of respondents to freely exercise their religion. Peyote is a sacrament of the Native American Church and is regarded as vital to respondents' ability to practice their religion. See O. Stewart, Peyote Religion: A History 327-336 (1987) (describing modern status of peyotism); E. Anderson, Peyote: The Divine Cactus 41-65 (1980) (describing peyote ceremonies); Teachings from 904 the American Earth: Indian Religion and Philosophy 96-104 (D. Tedlock & B. Tedlock eds. 1975) (same); see also People v. Woody, 61 Cal.2d 716, 721-722, 40 Cal.Rptr. 69, 73-74, 394 P.2d 813, 817-818 (1964). As we noted in Smith I, the Oregon Supreme Court concluded that "the Native American Church is a recognized religion, that peyote is a sacrament of that church, and that respondent's beliefs were sincerely held." 485 U.S., at 667, 108 S.Ct., at 1449. Under Oregon law, as construed by that State's highest court, members of the Native American Church must choose between carrying out the ritual embodying their religious beliefs and avoidance of criminal prosecution. That choice is, in my view, more than sufficient to trigger First Amendment scrutiny.

There is also no dispute that Oregon has a significant interest in enforcing laws that *1614 control the possession and use of controlled substances by its citizens. See, e.g., Sherbert, 374 U.S., at 403, 83 S.Ct., at 1793-94 (religiously motivated conduct may be regulated where such conduct "pose[s] some substantial threat to public safety, peace or order"); Yoder, 406 U.S., at 220, 92 S.Ct., at 1535 ("[A]ctivities of individuals, even when religiously based, are often subject to regulation by the States in the exercise of their undoubted power to promote the health, safety, and general welfare"). As we recently noted, drug abuse is "one of the greatest problems affecting the health and welfare of our population" and thus "one of the most serious problems confronting our society today." Treasury Employees v. Von Raab, 489 U.S. 656, 668, 674, 109 S.Ct. 1384, 1395, 103 L.Ed.2d 685 (1989). Indeed, under federal law (incorporated by Oregon law in relevant part, see Ore.Rev.Stat. § 475.005(6) (1987)), peyote is specifically regulated as a Schedule I controlled substance, which means that Congress has found that it has a high potential for abuse, that there is no currently accepted medical use, and that there is a lack of accepted safety for use of the drug under medical supervision. See 21 U.S.C. § 812(b)(1). See generally R. Julien, A Primer of Drug Action 149 (3d ed. 1981). In light of our recent decisions holding that the governmental 905 interests in the collection of income tax, Hernandez, 490 U.S., at 699-700, 109 S.Ct., at 2148-2149, a comprehensive Social Security system, see Lee, 455 U.S., at 258-259, 102 S.Ct., at 1055-1056, and military conscription, see Gillette, 401 U.S., at 460, 91 S.Ct., at 841, are compelling, respondents do not seriously dispute that Oregon has a compelling interest in prohibiting the possession of peyote by its citizens.

Thus, the critical question in this case is whether exempting respondents from the State's general criminal prohibition "will unduly interfere with fulfillment of the governmental interest." Lee, supra, 455 U.S. at 259, 102 S.Ct., at 1056; see also Roy, 476 U.S., at 727, 106 S.Ct., at 2166 ("[T]he Government must accommodate a legitimate free exercise claim unless pursuing an especially important interest by narrowly tailored means"); Yoder, supra, 406 U.S., at 221, 92 S.Ct., at 1536; Braunfeld, 366 U.S., at 605-607, 81 S.Ct., at 1146-1148. Although the question is close, I would conclude that uniform application of Oregon's criminal prohibition is "essential to accomplish," Lee, supra, at 455 U.S., at 257, 102 S.Ct., at 1055, its overriding interest in preventing the physical harm caused by the use of a Schedule I controlled substance. Oregon's criminal prohibition represents that State's judgment that the possession and use of controlled substances, even by only one person, is inherently harmful and dangerous. Because the health effects caused by the use of controlled substances exist regardless of the motivation of the user, the use of such substances, even for religious purposes, violates the very purpose of the laws that prohibit them. Cf. State v. Massey, 229 N.C. 734, 51 S.E.2d 179 (denying religious exemption to municipal ordinance prohibiting handling of poisonous reptiles), appeal dism'd sub nom. Bunn v. North Carolina, 336 U.S. 942, 69 S.Ct. 813, 93 L.Ed. 1099 (1949). Moreover, in view of the societal interest in preventing trafficking in controlled substances, uniform application of the criminal prohibition at issue is essential to the effectiveness of Oregon's stated interest in preventing any possession of peyote. Cf. 906Jacobson v. Massachusetts,* 197 U.S. 11, 25 S.Ct. 358, 49 L.Ed. 643 (1905) (denying exemption from small pox vaccination requirement).

For these reasons, I believe that granting a selective exemption in this case would seriously impair Oregon's compelling interest in prohibiting possession of peyote by its citizens. Under such circumstances, the Free Exercise Clause does not require the State to accommodate respondents' religiously motivated conduct. See, e.g., Thomas, 450 U.S., at 719, 101 S.Ct., at 1432-33. Unlike in Yoder, where we noted that "[t]he record strongly indicates that accommodating the *1615 religious objections of the Amish by forgoing one, or at most two, additional years of compulsory education will not impair the physical or mental health of the child, or result in an inability to be self-supporting or to discharge the duties and responsibilities of citizenship, or in any other way materially detract from the welfare of society," 406 U.S., at 234, 92 S.Ct., at 1542; see also id., at 238-240, 92 S.Ct., at 1544-1545 (WHITE, J., concurring), a religious exemption in this case would be incompatible with the State's interest in controlling use and possession of illegal drugs.

Respondents contend that any incompatibility is belied by the fact that the Federal Government and several States provide exemptions for the religious use of peyote, see 21 CFR § 1307.31 (1989); 307 Or., at 73, n. 2, 763 P.2d, at 148, n. 2 (citing 11 state statutes that expressly exempt sacramental peyote use from criminal proscription). But other governments may surely choose to grant an exemption without Oregon, with its specific asserted interest in uniform application of its drug laws, being required to do so by the First Amendment. Respondents also note that the sacramental use of peyote is central to the tenets of the Native American Church, but I agree with the Court, ante, at 1604, that because " '[i]t is not within the judicial ken to question the centrality of particular beliefs or practices to a faith,' " quoting Hernandez, supra, at 699, 109 S.Ct., at 2148, our determination of the constitutionality of Oregon's general criminal prohibition cannot, and should not, turn on the centrality of the particular 907 religious practice at issue. This does not mean, of course, that courts may not make factual findings as to whether a claimant holds a sincerely held religious belief that conflicts with, and thus is burdened by, the challenged law. The distinction between questions of centrality and questions of sincerity and burden is admittedly fine, but it is one that is an established part of our free exercise doctrine, see Ballard, 322 U.S., at 85-88, 64 S.Ct., at 885-87, and one that courts are capable of making. See Tony and Susan Alamo Foundation v. Secretary of Labor, 471 U.S. 290, 303-305, 105 S.Ct.1953, 1962-1963, 85 L.Ed.2d 278 (1985).

I would therefore adhere to our established free exercise jurisprudence and hold that the State in this case has a compelling interest in regulating peyote use by its citizens and that accommodating respondents' religiously motivated conduct "will unduly interfere with fulfillment of the governmental interest." Lee, supra, 455 U.S., at 259, 102 S.Ct., at 1056. Accordingly, I concur in the judgment of the Court.

Justice BLACKMUN, with whom Justice BRENNAN and Justice MARSHALL join, dissenting.

This Court over the years painstakingly has developed a consistent and exacting standard to test the constitutionality of a state statute that burdens the free exercise of religion. Such a statute may stand only if the law in general, and the State's refusal to allow a religious exemption in particular, are justified by a compelling interest that cannot be served by less restrictive means.[FN1]

*1616 *908 Until today, I thought this was a settled and inviolate principle of this Court's First Amendment jurisprudence. The majority, however, perfunctorily dismisses it as a "constitutional anomaly." Ante, at 1604. As carefully detailed in Justice O'CONNOR's concurring opinion, ante, p. 1606, the majority is able to arrive at this view only by mischaracterizing this Court's precedents. The Court discards leading free exercise cases such as Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 60 S.Ct. 900, 84 L.Ed. 1213 (1940), and Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205, 92 S.Ct. 1526, 32 L.Ed.2d 15 (1972), as "hybrid." Ante, at 1602. The Court views traditional free exercise analysis as somehow inapplicable to criminal prohibitions (as opposed to conditions on the receipt of benefits), and to state laws of general applicability (as opposed, presumably, to laws that expressly single out religious practices). Ante, at 1603-1604. The Court cites cases in which, due to various exceptional circumstances, we found strict scrutiny inapposite, to hint that the Court has repudiated that standard altogether. Ante, at 1602-1603. In short, it effectuates a wholesale overturning of settled law concerning the Religion Clauses of our Constitution. One hopes that the Court is aware of the consequences, and that its result is not a product of overreaction to the serious problems the country's drug crisis has generated.

This distorted view of our precedents leads the majority to conclude that strict scrutiny of a state law burdening the free exercise of religion is a "luxury" that a well-ordered society 909 cannot afford, ante, at 1605, and that the repression of minority religions is an "unavoidable consequence of democratic government." Ante, at 1606. I do not believe the Founders thought their dearly bought freedom from religious persecution a "luxury," but an essential element of liberty-and they could not have thought religious intolerance "unavoidable," for they drafted the Religion Clauses precisely in order to avoid that intolerance.

For these reasons, I agree with Justice O'CONNOR's analysis of the applicable free exercise doctrine, and I join parts I and II of her opinion.[FN2] As she points out, "the critical question in this case is whether exempting respondents from the State's general criminal prohibition 'will unduly interfere with fulfillment of the governmental interest.' " Ante, at 1614, quoting United States v. Lee, 455 U.S. 252, 259, 102 S.Ct. 1051, 1056, 71 L.Ed.2d 127 (1982). I do disagree, however, with her specific answer to that question.

FN2. I reluctantly agree that, in light of this Court's decision in Employment Division, Dept. of Human Resources of Ore. v. Smith, 485 U.S. 660, 108 S.Ct. 1444, 99 L.Ed.2d 753 (1988), the question on which certiorari was granted is properly presented in this case. I have grave doubts, however, as to the wisdom or propriety of deciding the constitutionality of a criminal prohibition which the State has not sought to enforce, which the State did not rely on in defending its denial of unemployment benefits before the state courts, and which the Oregon courts could, on remand, either invalidate on state constitutional grounds, or conclude that it remains irrelevant to Oregon's interest in administering its unemployment benefits program.

> It is surprising, to say the least, that this Court which so often prides itself about principles of judicial restraint and reduction of federal control over matters of state law would stretch its jurisdiction to the limit in order to reach, in this abstract setting, the constitutionality of Oregon's criminal prohibition of peyote use.

I

In weighing the clear interest of respondents Smith and Black (hereinafter respondents) in the free exercise of their religion *1617 against Oregon's asserted interest in enforcing its drug laws, it is important to articulate in precise terms the state interest involved. It is not the State's broad interest 910 in fighting the critical "war on drugs" that must be weighed against respondents' claim, but the State's narrow interest in refusing to make an exception for the religious, ceremonial use of peyote. See Bowen v. Roy, 476 U.S. 693, 728, 106 S.Ct. 2147, 2167, 90 L.Ed.2d 735 (1986) (O'CONNOR, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part) ("This Court has consistently asked the Government to demonstrate that unbending application of its regulation to the religious objector 'is essential to accomplish an overriding governmental interest,' " quoting Lee, 455 U.S., at 257-258, 102 S.Ct., at 1055); Thomas v. Review Bd. of Indiana Employment Security Div., 450 U.S. 707, 719, 101 S.Ct. 1425, 1432, 67 L.Ed.2d 624 (1981) ("focus of the inquiry" concerning State's asserted interest must be "properly narrowed"); Yoder, 406 U.S., at 221, 92 S.Ct., at 1536 ("Where fundamental claims of religious freedom are at stake," the Court will not accept a State's "sweeping claim" that its interest in compulsory education is compelling; despite the validity of this interest "in the generality of cases, we must searchingly examine the interests that the State seeks to promote ... and the impediment to those objectives that would flow from recognizing the claimed Amish exemption"). Failure to reduce the competing interests to the same plane of generality tends to distort the weighing process in the State's favor. See Clark, Guidelines for the Free Exercise Clause, 83 Harv.L.Rev. 327, 330-331 (1969) ("The purpose of almost any law can be traced back to one or another of the fundamental concerns of government: public health and safety, public peace and order, defense, revenue. To measure an individual interest directly against one of these rarified values inevitably makes the individual interest appear the less significant"); Pound, A Survey of Social Interests, 57 Harv.L.Rev. 1, 2 (1943) ("When it comes to weighing or valuing claims or demands with respect to other claims or demands, we must be careful to compare them on the same plane ... [or else] we may decide the question in advance in our very way of putting it").

The State's interest in enforcing its prohibition, in order to be sufficiently compelling to outweigh a free exercise claim, 911 cannot be merely abstract or symbolic. The State cannot plausibly assert that unbending application of a criminal prohibition is essential to fulfill any compelling interest, if it does not, in fact, attempt to enforce that prohibition. In this case, the State actually has not evinced any concrete interest in enforcing its drug laws against religious users of peyote. Oregon has never sought to prosecute respondents, and does not claim that it has made significant enforcement efforts against other religious users of peyote. [FN3] The State's asserted interest thus amounts only to the symbolic preservation of an unenforced prohibition. But a government interest in "symbolism, even symbolism for so worthy a cause as the abolition of unlawful drugs," Treasury Employees v. Von Raab, 489 U.S. 656, 687, 109 S.Ct. 1384, 1402, 103 L.Ed.2d 685 (1989) (SCALIA, J., dissenting), cannot suffice to abrogate the constitutional rights of individuals.

FN3. The only reported case in which the State of Oregon has sought to prosecute a person for religious peyote use is State v. Soto, 21 Ore.App. 794, 537 P.2d 142 (1975), cert. denied, 424 U.S. 955, 96 S.Ct. 1431, 47 L.Ed.2d 361 (1976).

Similarly, this Court's prior decisions have not allowed a government to rely on mere speculation about potential harms, but have demanded evidentiary support for a refusal to allow a religious exception. See Thomas, 450 U.S., at 719, 101 S.Ct., at 1432 (rejecting State's reasons for refusing religious exemption, for lack of "evidence in the record"); Yoder, 406 U.S., at 224-229, 92 S.Ct., at 1537-38 (rejecting State's argument concerning the dangers of a religious exemption as speculative, and unsupported by the record); Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398, 407, 83 S.Ct. 1790, 1795, 10 L.Ed.2d 965 (1963) *1618 ("[T]here is no proof whatever to warrant such fears ... as those which the [State] now advance[s]"). In this case, the State's justification for refusing to recognize an exception to its criminal laws for religious peyote use is entirely speculative.

The State proclaims an interest in protecting the health and safety of its citizens from the dangers of unlawful drugs. It offers, however, no evidence that the religious use of peyote912 has ever harmed anyone.[FN4] The factual findings of other courts cast doubt on the State's assumption that religious use of peyote is harmful. See State v. Whittingham, 19 Ariz.App. 27, 30, 504 P.2d 950, 953 (1973) ("[T]he State failed to prove that the quantities of peyote used in the sacraments of the Native American Church are sufficiently harmful to the health and welfare of the participants so as to permit a legitimate intrusion under the State's police power"); People v. Woody, 61 Cal.2d 716, 722-723, 40 Cal.Rptr. 69, 74, 394 P.2d 813, 818 (1964) ("[A]s the Attorney General ... admits, ... the opinion of scientists and other experts is 'that peyote ... works no permanent deleterious injury to the Indian' ").

FN4. This dearth of evidence is not surprising, since the State never asserted this health and safety interest before the Oregon courts; thus, there was no opportunity for factfinding concerning the alleged dangers of peyote use. What has now become the State's principal argument for its view that the criminal prohibition is enforceable against religious use of peyote rests on no evidentiary foundation at all.

The fact that peyote is classified as a Schedule I controlled substance does not, by itself, show that any and all uses of peyote, in any circumstance, are inherently harmful and dangerous. The Federal Government, which created the classifications of unlawful drugs from which Oregon's drug laws are derived, apparently does not find peyote so dangerous as to preclude an exemption for religious use.[FN5] Moreover, 913 other Schedule I drugs have lawful uses. See Olsen v. Drug Enforcement Admin., 279 U.S.App.D.C. 1, 6, n. 4, 878 F.2d 1458, 1463, n. 4 (medical and research uses of marijuana).

FN5. See 21 CFR § 1307.31 (1989) ("The listing of peyote as a controlled substance in Schedule I does not apply to the nondrug use of peyote in bona fide religious ceremonies of the Native American Church, and members of the Native American Church so using peyote are exempt from registration. Any person who manufactures peyote for or distributes peyote to the Native American Church, however, is required to obtain registration annually and to comply with all other requirements of law"); see Olsen v. Drug Enforcement Admin., 279 U.S.App.D.C. 1, 6-7, 878 F.2d 1458, 1463-1464 (1989) (explaining DEA's rationale for the exception).

Moreover, 23 States, including many that have significant Native American populations, have statutory or judicially crafted exemptions in their drug laws for religious use of peyote. See 307 Ore. 68, 73, n. 2, 763 P.2d 146, 148, n. 2 (1988) (case below). Although this does not prove that Oregon must have such an exception too, it is significant that these States, and the Federal Government, all find their (presumably compelling) interests in controlling the use of dangerous drugs compatible with an exemption for religious use of peyote. Cf. Boos v. Barry, 485 U.S. 312, 329, 108 S.Ct. 1157, 1168, 99 L.Ed.2d 333 (1988) (finding that an ordinance restricting picketing near a foreign embassy was not the least restrictive means of serving the asserted government interest; existence of an analogous, but more narrowly drawn, federal statute showed that "a less restrictive alternative is readily available").

The carefully circumscribed ritual context in which respondents used peyote is far removed from the irresponsible and unrestricted recreational use of unlawful drugs.[FN6] The Native American Church's internal restrictions on, and supervision of, its members' use of peyote substantially obviate the State's health and safety concerns. See Olsen, id., at 10, 878 F.2d, at 1467 (" 'The Administrator [of the Drug Enforcement Administration 1619 (DEA)] finds that ... the Native American Church's use of peyote is isolated to specific ceremonial occasions,' " and so " 'an accommodation can be made for a religious organization which uses peyote in circumscribed ceremonies' " (quoting DEA Final Order)); id., at 7, 878 F.2d, at 1464 ("[F]or members of the Native American Church, use of peyote outside the ritual is sacrilegious"); Woody, 61 Cal.2d, at 721, 394 P.2d, at 817 ("[T]o use peyote for nonreligious purposes is sacrilegious"); R. Julien, A Primer of Drug Action 148 (3d ed. 1981) ("[P]eyote is seldom abused by members of the Native American 914 Church"); Slotkin, The Peyote Way, in Teachings from the American Earth 96, 104 (D. Tedlock & B. Tedlock eds. 1975) ("[T]he Native American Church ... refuses to permit the presence of curiosity seekers at its rites, and vigorously opposes the sale or use of Peyote for nonsacramental purposes"); Bergman, Navajo Peyote Use: Its Apparent Safety, 128 Am.J. Psychiatry 695 (1971) (Bergman).[FN7]

FN6. In this respect, respondents' use of peyote seems closely analogous to the sacramental use of wine by the Roman Catholic Church. During Prohibition, the Federal Government exempted such use of wine from its general ban on possession and use of alcohol. See National Prohibition Act, Title II, § 3, 41 Stat. 308. However compelling the Government's then general interest in prohibiting the use of alcohol may have been, it could not plausibly have asserted an interest sufficiently compelling to outweigh Catholics' right to take communion.

FN7. The use of peyote is, to some degree, self-limiting. The peyote plant is extremely bitter, and eating it is an unpleasant experience, which would tend to discourage casual or recreational use. See State v. Whittingham, 19 Ariz.App. 27, 30, 504 P.2d 950, 953 (1973) (" '[P]eyote can cause vomiting by reason of its bitter taste' "); E. Anderson, Peyote: The Divine Cactus 161 (1980) ("[T]he eating of peyote usually is a difficult ordeal in that nausea and other unpleasant physical manifestations occur regularly. Repeated use is likely, therefore, only if one is a serious researcher or is devoutly involved in taking peyote as part of a religious ceremony"); Slotkin, The Peyote Way, in Teachings from the American Earth 96, 98 (D. Tedlock & B. Tedlock eds. 1975) ("[M]any find it bitter, inducing indigestion or nausea").

Moreover, just as in Yoder, the values and interests of those seeking a religious exemption in this case are congruent, to a great degree, with those the State seeks to promote through its drug laws. See Yoder, 406 U.S., at 224, 228-229, 92 S.Ct., at 1540 (since the Amish accept formal schooling up to 8th grade, and then provide "ideal" vocational education, State's interest in enforcing its law against the Amish is "less substantial than ... for children generally"); id., at 238, 92 S.Ct., at 1544 (WHITE, J., concurring). Not only does the church's doctrine forbid nonreligious use of peyote; it also generally advocates self-reliance, familial responsibility, and abstinence from alcohol. See Brief for Association on American Indian Affairs et al. as Amici Curiae 33-34 (the church's "ethical code" has four parts: brotherly love, care of family, self-reliance, and avoidance of alcohol (quoting from the church membership card)); Olsen, 279 U.S.App.D.C., at 7, 878 F.2d, at 1464 (the Native American Church, "for all purposes other than the special, stylized ceremony, reinforced the state's prohibition"); 915 Woody, 61 Cal.2d, at 721-722, n. 3, 394 P.2d, at 818, n. 3 ("[M]ost anthropological authorities hold Peyotism to be a positive, rather than negative, force in the lives of its adherents ... the church forbids the use of alcohol ..."). There is considerable evidence that the spiritual and social support provided by the church has been effective in combating the tragic effects of alcoholism on the Native American population. Two noted experts on peyotism, Dr. Omer C. Stewart and Dr. Robert Bergman, testified by affidavit to this effect on behalf of respondent Smith before the Employment Appeal Board. yote: The Divine Cactus 165-166 (1980) (research by Dr. Bergman suggests "that the religious use of peyote seemed to be directed in an ego-strengthening direction with an emphasis on interpersonal relationships where each individual is assured of his own significance as well as the support of the group"; many people have " 'come through difficult crises with the help of this religion.... It provides real help in seeing themselves not as people whose place and way in the world is gone, but as people whose way can be strong enough to change and meet new challenges' " (quoting Bergman 698)); Pascarosa & Futterman, Ethnopsychedelic Therapy for Alcoholics: Observations in the Peyote Ritual of the Native American Church, 8 J. of Psychedelic Drugs, No. 3, p. 215 (1976) (religious peyote use has been helpful in overcoming alcoholism); Albaugh & Anderson, Peyote in the Treatment of Alcoholism among American Indians, 131 Am.J. Psychiatry 1247, 1249 (1974) ("[T]he *1620 philosophy, teachings, and format of the [Native American Church] can be of great benefit to the Indian alcoholic"); see generally O. Stewart, Peyote Religion 75 et seq. (1987) (noting frequent observations, across many tribes and periods in history, of correlation between peyotist religion and abstinence from alcohol). Far from promoting the lawless and irresponsible use of drugs, Native American Church members' spiritual916 code exemplifies values that Oregon's drug laws are presumably intended to foster.

The State also seeks to support its refusal to make an exception for religious use of peyote by invoking its interest in abolishing drug trafficking. There is, however, practically no illegal traffic in peyote. See Olsen, 279 U.S.App.D.C., at 6, 7, 878 F.2d, at 1463, 1467 (quoting DEA Final Order to the effect that total amount of peyote seized and analyzed by federal authorities between 1980 and 1987 was 19.4 pounds; in contrast, total amount of marijuana seized during that period was over 15 million pounds). Also, the availability of peyote for religious use, even if Oregon were to allow an exemption from its criminal laws, would still be strictly controlled by federal regulations, see 21 U.S.C. §§ 821-823 (registration requirements for distribution of controlled substances); 21 CFR § 1307.31 (1989) (distribution of peyote to Native American Church subject to registration requirements), and by the State of Texas, the only State in which peyote grows in significant quantities. See Texas Health & Safety Code Ann. § 481.111 (1990 pamphlet); Texas Admin.Code, Tit. 37, pt. 1, ch. 13, Controlled Substances Regulations, §§ 13.35-13.41 (1989); Woody, 61 Cal.2d, at 720, 394 P.2d, at 816 (peyote is "found in the Rio Grande Valley of Texas and northern Mexico"). Peyote simply is not a popular drug; its distribution for use in religious rituals has nothing to do with the vast and violent traffic in illegal narcotics that plagues this country.

Finally, the State argues that granting an exception for religious peyote use would erode its interest in the uniform, fair, and certain enforcement of its drug laws. The State fears that, if it grants an exemption for religious peyote use, a flood of other claims to religious exemptions will follow. It would then be placed in a dilemma, it says, between allowing a patchwork of exemptions that would hinder its law enforcement efforts, and risking a violation of the Establishment Clause by arbitrarily limiting its religious exemptions. This 917 argument, however, could be made in almost any free exercise case. See Lupu, Where Rights Begin: The Problem of Burdens on the Free Exercise of Religion, 102 Harv.L.Rev. 933, 947 (1989) ("Behind every free exercise claim is a spectral march; grant this one, a voice whispers to each judge, and you will be confronted with an endless chain of exemption demands from religious deviants of every stripe"). This Court, however, consistently has rejected similar arguments in past free exercise cases, and it should do so here as well. See Frazee v. Illinois Dept. of Employment Security, 489 U.S. 829, 835, 109 S.Ct. 1514, 1518, 103 L.Ed.2d 914 (1989) (rejecting State's speculation concerning cumulative effect of many similar claims); Thomas, 450 U.S., at 719, 101 S.Ct., at 1432 (same); Sherbert, 374 U.S., at 407, 83 S.Ct., at 1795.

The State's apprehension of a flood of other religious claims is purely speculative. Almost half the States, and the Federal Government, have maintained an exemption for religious peyote use for many years, and apparently have not found themselves overwhelmed by claims to other religious exemptions. [FN8] Allowing an exemption for religious *1621 peyote use 918 would not necessarily oblige the State to grant a similar exemption to other religious groups. The unusual circumstances that make the religious use of peyote compatible with the State's interests in health and safety and in preventing drug trafficking would not apply to other religious claims. Some religions, for example, might not restrict drug use to a limited ceremonial context, as does the Native American Church. See, e.g., Olsen, 279 U.S.App.D.C., at 7, 878 F.2d, at 1464 ("[T]he Ethiopian Zion Coptic Church ... teaches that marijuana is properly smoked 'continually all day' "). Some religious claims, see n. 8, supra, involve drugs such as marijuana and heroin, in which there is significant illegal traffic, with its attendant greed and violence, so that it would be difficult to grant a religious exemption without seriously compromising law enforcement efforts.[FN9] That the State might grant an exemption for religious peyote use, but deny other religious claims arising in different circumstances, would not violate the Establishment Clause. Though the State must treat all religions equally, and not favor one over another, this obligation is fulfilled by the uniform application of the "compelling interest" test to all free exercise claims, not by reaching uniform results as to all claims. A showing that religious peyote use does not unduly interfere with the State's interests is "one that probably few other religious groups or sects could make," Yoder, 406 U.S., at 236, 92 S.Ct., at 1543; this does not mean that an exemption limited to peyote use is tantamount to an establishment of religion. See Hobbie v. Unemployment Appeals Comm'n of Fla., 480 U.S. 136, 144-145, 107 S.Ct. 1046, 1051, 94 L.Ed.2d 190 (1987) ("[T]he government may (and 919 sometimes must) accommodate religious practices and ... may do so without violating the Establishment Clause"); Yoder, 406 U.S., at 220-221, 92 S.Ct., at 1536 ("Court must not ignore the danger that an exception from a general [law] ... may run afoul of the Establishment Clause, but that danger cannot be allowed to prevent any exception no matter how vital it may be to the protection of values promoted by the right of free exercise"); id., at 234, n. 22, 92 S.Ct., at 1542, n. 22.

FN8. Over the years, various sects have raised free exercise claims regarding drug use. In no reported case, except those involving claims of religious peyote use, has the claimant prevailed. See, e.g., Olsen v. Iowa, 808 F.2d 652 (CA8 1986) (marijuana use by Ethiopian Zion Coptic Church); United States v. Rush, 738 F.2d 497 (CA1 1984) (same), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1004, 105 S.Ct. 1355, 84 L.Ed.2d 378 (1985); United States v. Middleton, 690 F.2d 820 (CA11 1982) (same), cert. denied, 460 U.S. 1051, 103 S.Ct. 1497, 75 L.Ed.2d 929 (1983) (same); United States v. Hudson, 431 F.2d 468 (CA5 1970) (marijuana and heroin use by Moslems), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 1011, 91 S.Ct. 575, 577, 27 L.Ed.2d 624 (1971); Leary v. United States, 383 F.2d 851 (CA5 1967) (marijuana use by Hindu), rev'd on other grounds, 395 U.S. 6, 89 S.Ct. 1532, 23 L.Ed.2d 57 (1969); Commonwealth v. Nissenbaum, 404 Mass. 575, 536 N.E.2d 592 (1989) (marijuana use by Ethiopian Zion Coptic Church); *State v. See generally Annotation, Free Exercise of Religion as Defense to Prosecution for Narcotic or Psychedelic Drug Offense, 35 A.L.R.3d 939 (1971 and Supp.1989).

FN9. Thus, this case is distinguishable from United States v. Lee, 455 U.S. 252, 102 S.Ct. 1051, 71 L.Ed.2d 127 (1982), in which the Court concluded that there was "no principled way" to distinguish other exemption claims, and the "tax system could not function if denominations were allowed to challenge the tax system because tax payments were spent in a manner that violates their religious belief." Id., at 260, 102 S.Ct., at 1056.

II

Finally, although I agree with Justice O'CONNOR that courts should refrain from delving into questions whether, as a matter of religious doctrine, a particular practice is "central" to the religion, ante, at 1614, I do not think this means that the courts must turn a blind eye to the severe impact of a State's restrictions on the adherents of a minority religion. Cf. Yoder, 406 U.S., at 219, 92 S.Ct., at 1535 (since "education is inseparable from and a part of the basic tenets of their religion ... [, just as] baptism,*1622 the confessional, or a sabbath may be for others," enforcement of State's compulsory education law would "gravely endanger if not destroy the free exercise of respondents' religious beliefs").

Respondents believe, and their sincerity has never been at issue, that the peyote plant embodies their deity, and eating it is an act of worship and communion. Without peyote, they could not enact the essential ritual of their religion. See Brief for Association on American Indian Affairs et al. as Amici Curiae 5-6 ("To the members, peyote is consecrated with powers to heal body, mind and spirit. It is a teacher; it teaches the way to spiritual life through living in harmony and balance with the forces of the Creation. The rituals are an integral part of the life process. They embody a form of worship in which the sacrament Peyote is the means for communicating with the Great Spirit"). See also O. Stewart, Peyote Religion 327-330 (1987) (description of peyote ritual); 920 T. Hillerman, People of Darkness 153 (1980) (description of Navajo peyote ritual).

If Oregon can constitutionally prosecute them for this act of worship, they, like the Amish, may be "forced to migrate to some other and more tolerant region." Yoder, 406 U.S., at 218, 92 S.Ct., at 1534-1535. This potentially devastating impact must be viewed in light of the federal policy-reached in reaction to many years of religious persecution and intolerance-of protecting the religious freedom of Native Americans. See American Indian Religious Freedom Act, 92 Stat. 469, 42 U.S.C. § 1996 (1982 ed.) ("[I]t shall be the policy of the United States to protect and preserve for American Indians their inherent right of freedom to believe, express, and exercise the traditional religions ..., including but not limited to access to sites, use and possession of sacred objects, and the freedom to worship through ceremonials and traditional rites").[FN10] Congress recognized that certain substances, such as peyote, "have religious significance because they are sacred, they have power, they heal, they are necessary to the exercise of 921 the rites of the religion, they are necessary to the cultural integrity of the tribe, and, therefore, religious survival." H.R.Rep. No. 95-1308, p. 2 (1978), U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1978, pp. 1262, 1263.

> FN10. See Federal Agencies Task Force, Report to Congress on American Indian Religious Freedom Act of 1978, pp. 1-8 (Aug. 1979) (history of religious persecution); Barsh, The Illusion of Religious Freedom for Indigenous Americans, 65 Ore.L.Rev. 363, 369-374 (1986).
> Indeed, Oregon's attitude toward respondents' religious peyote use harkens back to the repressive federal policies pursued a century ago:
> "In the government's view, traditional practices were not only morally degrading, but unhealthy. 'Indians are fond of gatherings of every description,' a 1913 public health study complained, advocating the restriction of dances and 'sings' to stem contagious diseases. In 1921, Commissioner of Indian Affairs Charles Burke reminded his staff to punish any Indian engaged in 'any dance which involves ... the reckless giving away of property ... frequent or prolonged periods of celebration ... in fact, any disorderly or plainly excessive performance that promotes superstitious cruelty, licentiousness, idleness, danger to health, and shiftless indifference to family welfare.' Two years later, he forbid Indians under the age of 50 from participating in any dances of any kind, and directed federal employees 'to educate public opinion' against them." Id., at 370-371 (footnotes omitted).

The American Indian Religious Freedom Act, in itself, may not create rights enforceable against government action restricting religious freedom, but this Court must scrupulously apply its free exercise analysis to the religious claims of Native Americans, however unorthodox they may be. Otherwise, both the First Amendment and the stated policy of Congress will offer to Native Americans merely an unfulfilled and hollow promise.

For these reasons, I conclude that Oregon's interest in enforcing its drug laws against religious use of peyote is not sufficiently compelling to outweigh respondents' right to the free exercise of their religion. Since the State could not constitutionally enforce its criminal prohibition against respondents,*1623 the interests underlying the State's drug laws cannot justify its denial of unemployment benefits. Nos. 89, 569, 570.
Decided June 28, 1971.

Actions challenging constitutionality of state aid to, or for the benefit of, nonpublic schools. A three-judge United States District Court for the District of Rhode Island, 316 F.Supp. 112, held the Rhode Island statute unconstitutional, while a three-judge United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, 310 F.Supp. 35, dismissed the complaint challenging the Pennsylvania statute, and appeals were taken. The Supreme Court, Mr. Chief Justice Burger, held that both statutes were unconstitutional under the religion clauses of the First Amendment, though promoting secular legislative purposes, since both involved excessive entanglement of state with church, where the Rhode Island program, consisting of salary supplements paid to teachers of secular subjects in nonpublic schools, operated to the benefit of parochial schools constituting integral part of the religious mission of the church and in which the recipient teachers were under religious control and discipline, and involved necessity of comprehensive and continuing state surveillance to insure obedience to restrictions as to the courses which could be taught, the materials which could be used, where the Pennsylvania program, involving reimbursement of nonpublic schools for teachers' salaries, taxtbooks, and instructional materials used in the teaching of specific secular subjects, provided direct aid to church schools and intimate and continuing relationship arising from state's postaudit power to inspect and evaluate schools' financial records and to determine which expenditures were religious and which were secular, and where both posed danger of divisive political activity and possibility of progression leading toward the establishment of state churches and state religion.

Judgment in Rhode Island cases affirmed; judgment in Pennsylvania case reversed and case remanded.

Mr. Justice Douglas filed concurring opinion in which Mr. Justice Black joined and in which Mr. Justice Marshall joined as to the Rhode Island cases; Mr. Justice Brennan filed a concurring opinion and would reverse outright the judgment in the Pennsylvania case; Mr. Justice White filed an opinion concurring in the judgment in the Pennsylvania case and dissenting in the Rhode Island cases; Mr. Justice Marshall took no part in the consideration or decision of the Pennsylvania case.

Rhode Island's 1969 Salary Supplement Act provides for a 15% salary supplement to be paid to teachers in nonpublic schools at which the average perpupil expenditure on secular education is below the average in public schools. Eligible teachers must teach only courses offered in the public schools, using only materials used in the public schools, and must agree not to teach courses in religion. A three-judge court found that about 25% of the State's elementary students attended nonpublic schools, about 95% of whom attended Roman Catholic affiliated schools, and that to date about 250 teachers at Roman Catholic schools are the sole beneficiaries under the Act. The court found that the parochial school system was 'an integral part of the religious mission of the Catholic Church,' and held that the Act fostered 'excessive entanglement' between government and religion, thus violating the Establishment Clause. Pennsylvania's Nonpublic Elementary and Secondary Education Act, passed in 1968, authorizes the state Superintendent of Public Instruction to 'purpose' certain 'secular educational services' from nonpublic schools, directly reimbursing those schools solely for teachers' salaries, textbooks, and instructional materials. Reimbursement is restricted to courses in specific secular subjects, the textbooks and materials must be approved by the Superintendent, and no payment is to be made for any course containing 'any subject matter expressing religious teaching, or the morals or forms of worship of any sect.' Contracts were made with schools that have more than 20% of all the students in the State, most of which were affiliated with the Roman Catholic Church. The complaint challenging the constitutionality of 603 the Act alleged that the church-affiliated schools are controlled by religious organizations, have the purpose of propagating and promoting a particular religious faith, and conduct their operations to fulfill that purpose. A three-judge court granted the State's motion to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim for relief, finding no violation of the Establishment or Free Exercise Clause. Held: Both statutes are unconstitutional under the Religion Clauses of the First Amendment, as the cumulative impact of the entire relationship arising under the statutes involves excessive entanglement between government and religion. Pp. 2110-2117.

(a) The entanglement in the Rhode Island program arises because of the religious activity, and purpose of the church-affiliated schools, especially with respect to children of impressionable age in the primary grades, and the dangers that a teacher under religious control and discipline poses to the separation of religious from purely secular aspect of elementary education in such schools. These factors require continuing state surveillance to ensure that the statutory restrictions are obeyed and the First Amendment otherwise respected. Furthermore, under the Act the government must inspect school records to determine what part of the expenditures is attributable to secular education as opposed to religious activity, in the event a nonpublic school's expenditures per pupil exceed the comparable figures for public schools. Pp. 2112-2115.

(b) The entanglement in the Pennsylvania program also arises from the restrictions and surveillance necessary to ensure that teachers play a strictly nonideological role and the state supervision of nonpublic school accounting procedures required to establish the cost of secular as distinguished from religious education. In addition, the Pennsylvania statute has the further defect of providing continuing financial aid directly to the church-related schools. Historically2108 governmental control and surveillance measures tend to follow cash grant programs, and here the government's post-audit power to inspect the financial records of church-related schools creates an intimate and continuing relationship between church and state. P. 2115.

(c) Political division along religious lines was one of the evils at which the First Amendment aimed, and in these programs, where successive and probably permanent annual appropriations that benefit relatively few religious groups are involved, political 604 fragmentation and divisiveness on religious lines are likely to be intensified. Pp. 2115-2116.

(d) Unlike the tax exemption for places of religious worship, upheld in Walz v. Tax Commission, 397 U.S. 664, 90 S.Ct. 1409, 25 L.Ed.2d 697, which was based on a practice of 200 years, these innovative programs have self-perpetuating and self-expanding propensities which provide a warning signal against entanglement between government and religion. Pp. 2116-2117.

Pennsylvania has adopted a statutory program that provides financial support to nonpublic elementary and 607 secondary schools by way of reimbursement for the cost of teachers' salaries, textbooks, and instructional materials in specified secular subjects. Rhode Island has adopted a statute under which the State pays directly to teachers in nonpublic elementary schools a supplement of 15% of their annual salary. Under each statute state aid has been given to church-related educational institutions. We hold that both statutes are unconstitutional.

I

The Rhode Island Statute

The Rhode Island Salary Supplement Act[FN1] was enacted in 1969. It rests on the legislative finding that the quality of education available in nonpublic elementary schools has been jeopardized by the rapidly rising salaries needed to attract competent and dedicated teachers. The Act authorizes state officials to supplement the salaries of teachers of secular subjects in nonpublic elementary schools by paying directly to a teacher an amount not in excess of 15% of his current annual salary. As supplemented, however, a nonpublic school teacher's salary cannot exceed the maximum paid to teachers in the State's public schools, and the recipient must be certified by the state board of education in substantially the same manner as public school teachers.

FN1. R.I.Pen.Laws Ann. s 16-51-1 et seq. (Supp.1970).

In order to be eligible for the Rhode Island salary supplement, the recipient must teach in a nonpublic school at which *2109 the average per-pupil expenditure on secular education is less than the average in the State's public schools during a specified period. Appellant State Commissioner of Education also requires eligible schools to submit financial data. If this information indicates a per-pupil expenditure in excess of the statutory limitation,608 the records of the school in question must be examined in order to assess how much of the expenditure is attributable to secular education and how much to religious activity.[FN2]

FN2. The District Court found only one instance in which this breakdown between religious and secular expenses was necessary. The school in question was not affiliated with the Catholic church. The court found it unlikely that such determinations would be necessary with respect to Catholic schools because their heavy reliance on nuns kept their wage costs substantially below those of the public schools.

The Act also requires that teachers eligible for salary supplements must teach only those subjects that are offered in the State's public schools. They must use 'only teaching materials which are used in the public schools.' Finally, any teacher applying for a salary supplement must first agree in writing 'not to teach a course in religion for so long as or during such time as he or she receives any salary supplements' under the Act.

Appellees are citizens and taxpayers of Rhode Island. They brought this suit to have the Rhode Island Salary Supplement Act declared unconstitutional and its operation enjoined on the ground that it violates the Establishment and Free Exercise Clauses of the First Amendment. Appellants are state officials charged with administration of the Act, teachers eligible for salary supplements under the Act, and parents of children in church-related elementary schools whose teachers would receive state salary assistance.

A three-judge federal court was convened pursuant to 28 U.S.C. ss 2281, 2284. It found that Rhode Island's nonpublic elementary schools accommodated approximately 25% of the State's pupils. About 95% of these pupils attended schools affiliated with the Roman Catholic church. To date some 250 teachers have applied for benefits under the Act. All of them are employed by Roman Catholic schools.

609 The court held a hearing at which extensive evidence was introduced concerning the nature of the secular instruction offered in the Roman Catholic schools whose teachers would be eligible for salary assistance under the Act. Although the court found that concern for religious values does not necessarily affect the content of secular subjects, it also found that the parochial school system was 'an integral part of the religious mission of the Catholic Church.'

The District Court concluded that the Act violated the Establishment Clause, holding that it fostered 'excessive entanglement' between government and religion. In addition two judges thought that the Act had the impermissible effect of giving 'significant aid to a religious enterprise.' 316 F.Supp. 112. We affirm.

The Pennsylvania Statute

Pennsylvania has adopted a program that has some but not all of the features of the Rhode Island program. The Pennsylvania Nonpublic Elementary and Secondary Education Act[FN3] was passed in 1968 in response to a crisis that the Pennsylvania Legislature found existed in the State's nonpublic schools due to rapidly rising costs. The statute affirmatively reflects the legislative conclusion that the State's educational goals could appropriately be fulfilled by government support of 'those purely secular educational objectives achieved through nonpublic education * * *.'

FN3. Pa.Stat.Ann., Tit. 24, ss 5601-5609 (Supp.1971).

The statute authorizes appellee state Superintendent of Public Instruction to 'purchase' specified 'secular educational services' from nonpublic schools. Under the 'contracts' authorized by the statute,2110 the State directly reimburses nonpublic schools solely for their actual expenditures for teachers' salaries, textbooks, and instructional materials. A school seeking reimbursement must *610 maintain prescribed accounting procedures that identify the 'separate' cost of the 'secular educational service.' These accounts are subject to state audit. The funds for this program were originally derived from a new tax on horse and harness racing, but the Act is now financed by a portion of the state tax on cigarettes.

There are several significant statutory restrictions on state aid. Reimbursement is limited to courses 'presented in the curricula of the public schools.' It is further limited 'solely' to courses in the following 'secular' subjects: mathematics, modern foreign languages,[FN4] physical science, and physical education. Textbooks and instructional materials included in the program must be approved by the state Superintendent of Public Instruction. Finally, the statute prohibits reimbursement for any course that contains 'any subject matter expressing religious teaching, or the morals or forms of worship of any sect.'

FN4. Latin, Hebrew, and classical Greek are excluded.

The Act went into effect on July 1, 1968, and the first reimbursement payments to schools were made on September 2, 1969. It appears that some $5 million has been expended annually under the Act. The State has now entered into contracts with some 1,181 nonpublic elementary and secondary schools with a student population of some 535,215 pupils-more than 20% of the total number of students in the State. More than 96% of these pupils attend church-related schools, and most of these schools are affiliated with the Roman Catholic church.

Appellants brought this action in the District Court to challenge the constitutionality of the Pennsylvania statute. The organizational plaintiffs-appellants are associations of persons resident in Pennsylvania declaring *611 belief in the separation of church and state; individual plaintiffs-appellants are citizens and taxpayers of Pennsylvania. Appellant Lemon, in addition to being a citizen and a taxpayer, is a parent of a child attending public school in Pennsylvania. Lemon also alleges that he purchased a ticket at a race track and thus had paid the specific tax that supports the expenditures under the Act. Appellees are state officials who have the responsibility for administering the Act. In addition seven church-related schools are defendants-appellees.

A three-judge federal court was convened pursuant to 28 U.S.C. ss 2281, 2284. The District Court held that the individual plaintiffs-appellants had standing to challenge the Act, 310 F.Supp. 42. The organizational plaintiffs-appellants were denied standing under Flast v. Cohen, 392 U.S. 83, 99, 101, 88 S.Ct. 1942, 1952, 1953, 20 L.Ed.2d 947 (1968).

The court granted appellees' motion to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim for relief.[FN5] 310 F.Supp. 35. It held that the Act violated neither the Establishment nor the Free Exercise Clause, Chief Judge Hastie dissenting. We reverse.

FN5. Plaintiffs-appellants also claimed that the Act violated the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment by providing state assistance to private institutions that discriminated on racial and religious grounds in their admissions and hiring policies. The court unanimously held that no plaintiff had standing to raise this claim because the complaint did not allege that the child of any plaintiff had been denied admission to any nonpublic school on racial or religious grounds. Our decision makes it unnecessary for us to reach this issue.

II

In Everson v. Board of Education, 330 U.S. 1, 67 S.Ct. 504, 91 L.Ed. 711 (1947), this Court upheld a state statute that reimbursed the parents of parochial school children for bus transportation 2111 *612 expenses. There Mr. Justice Black, writing for the majority, suggested that the decision carried to 'the verge' of forbidden territory under the Religion Clauses. Id., at 16, 67 S.Ct., at 511. Candor compels acknowledgment, moreover, that we can only dimly perceive the lines of demarcation in this extraordinarily sensitive area of constitutional law.

[1] The language of the Religion Clauses of the First Amendment is at best opaque, particularly when compared with other portions of the Amendment. Its authors did not simply prohibit the establishment of a state church or a state religion, an area history shows they regarded as very important and fraught with great dangers. Instead they commanded that there should be 'no law respecting an establishment of religion.' A law may be one 'respecting' the forbidden objective while falling short of its total realization. A law 'respecting' the proscribed result, that is, the establishment of religion, is not always easily identifiable as one violative of the Clause. A given law might not establish a state religion but nevertheless be one 'respecting' that end in the sense of being a step that could lead to such establishment and hence offend the First Amendment.

In the absence of precisely stated constitutional prohibitions, we must draw lines with reference to the three main evils against which the Establishment Clause was intended to afford protection: 'sponsorship, financial support, and active involvement of the sovereign in religious activity.' Walz v. Tax Commission, 397 U.S. 664, 668, 90 S.Ct. 1409, 1411, 25 L.Ed.2d 697 (1970).

[2] Every analysis in this area must begin with consideration of the cumulative criteria developed by the Court over many years. Three such tests may be gleaned from our cases. First, the statute must have a secular legislative purpose; second, its principal or primary effect must be one that neither advances nor inhibits religion, Board of Education v. Allen, 392 U.S. 236, 243, 88 S.Ct. 1923, 1926, 20 L.Ed.2d 1060 (1968); *613 finally, the statute must not foster 'an excessive government entanglement with religion.' Walz, supra, at 674, 90 S.Ct., at 1414.

Inquiry into the legislative purposes of the Pennsylvania and Rhode Island statutes affords no basis for a conclusion that the legislative intent was to advance religion. On the contrary, the statutes themselves clearly state that they are intended to enhance the quality of the secular education in all schools covered by the compulsory attendance laws. There is no reason to believe the legislatures meant anything else. A State always has a legitimate concern for maintaining minimum standards in all schools it allows to operate. As in Allen, we find nothing here that undermines the stated legislative intent; it must therefore be accorded appropriate deference.

In Allen the Court acknowledged that secular and religious teachings were not necessarily so intertwined that secular textbooks furnished to students by the State were in fact instrumental in the teaching of religion. 392 U.S., at 248, 88 S.Ct., at 1929. The legislatures of Rhode Island and Pennsylvania have concluded that secular and religious education are identifiable and separable. In the abstract we have no quarrel with this conclusion.

The two legislatures, however, have also recognized that church-related elementary and secondary schools have a significant religious mission and that a substantial portion of their activities is religiously oriented. They have therefore sought to create statutory restrictions designed to guarantee the separation between secular and religious educational functions and to ensure that State financial aid supports only the former. All these provisions are precautions taken in candid recognition that these programs approached, even if they did not intrude upon, the forbidden areas under the Religion Clauses. We need not decide whether these legislative precautions restrict the principal or primary effect of the programs to the point where they 2112 do not offend the Religion *614 Clauses, for we conclude that the cumulative impact of the entire relationship arising under the statutes in each State involves excessive entanglement between government and religion.

III

In Walz v. Tax Commission, supra, the Court upheld state tax exemptions for real property owned by religious organizations and used for religious worship. That holding, however, tended to confine rather than enlarge the area of permissible state involvement with religious institutions by calling for close scrutiny of the degree of entanglement involved in the relationship. The objective is to prevent, as far as possible, the intrusion of either into the precincts of the other.

Our prior holdings do not call for total separation between church and state; total separation is not possible in an absolute sense. Some relationship between government and religious organizations is inevitable. Zorach v. Clauson, 343 U.S. 306, 312, 72 S.Ct. 679, 683, 96 L.Ed. 954 (1952); Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398, 422, 83 S.Ct. 1790, 1803, 10 L.Ed.2d 965 (1963) (Harlan, J., dissenting). Fire inspections, building and zoning regulations, and state requirements under compulsory school-attendance laws are examples of necessary and permissible contacts. Indeed, under the statutory exemption before us in Walz, the State had a continuing burden to ascertain that the exempt property was in fact being used for religious worship. Judicial caveats against entanglement must recognize that the line of separation, far from being a 'wall,' is a blurred, indistinct, and variable barrier depending on all the circumstances of a particular relationship.

This is not to suggest, however, that we are to engage in a legalistic minuet in which precise rules and forms must govern. A true minuet is a matter of pure form and style, the observance of which is itself the substantive end. Here we examine the form of the relationship for the light that it casts on the substance.

615 In order to determine whether the government entanglement with religion is excessive, we must examine the character and purposes of the institutions that are benefited, the nature of the aid that the State provides, and the resulting relationship between the government and the religious authority. Mr. Justice Harlan, in a separate opinion in Walz, supra, echoed the classic warning as to 'programs, whose very nature is apt to entangle the state in details of administration. * * *' Id., at 695, 90 S.Ct., at 1425. Here we find that both statutes foster an impermissible degree of entanglement.

(a) Rhode Island program

[3] The District Court made extensive findings on the grave potential for excessive entanglement that inheres in the religious character and purpose of the Roman Catholic elementary schools of Rhode Island, to date the sole beneficiaries of the Rhode Island Salary Supplement Act.

The church schools involved in the program are located close to parish churches. This understandably permits convenient access for religious exercises since instruction in faith and morals is part of the total educational process. The school buildings contain identifying religious symbols such as crosses on the exterior and crucifixes, and religious paintings and statutes either in the classrooms or hallways. Although only approximately 30 minutes a day are devoted to direct religious instruction, there are religiously oriented extracurricular activities. Approximately two-thirds of the teachers in these schools are nuns of various religious orders. Their dedicated efforts provide an atmosphere in which religious instruction and religious vocations are natural and proper parts of life in such schools. Indeed, as the District Court found, the role of teaching nuns in enhancing the religious atmosphere has led the parochial school authorities*2113 *616 to attempt to maintain a one-to-one ratio between nuns and lay teachers in all schools rather than to permit some to be staffed almost entirely by lay teachers.

On the basis of these findings the District Court concluded that the parochial schools constituted 'an integral part of the religious mission of the Catholic Church.' The various characteristics of the schools make them 'a powerful vehicle for transmitting the Catholic faith to the next generation.' This process of inculcating religious doctrine is, of course, enhanced by the impressionable age of the pupils, in primary schools particularly. In short, parochial schools involve substantial religious activity and purpose.[FN6] church-related schools gives rise to entangling church-state relationships of the kind the Religion Clauses sought to avoid. Although the District Court found that concern for religious values did not inevitably or necessarily intrude into the content of secular subjects, the considerable religious activities of these schools led the legislature to provide for careful governmental controls and surveillance by state authorities in order to ensure that state aid supports only secular education.

The substantial religious character of these

The dangers and corresponding entanglements are enhanced by the particular form of aid that the Rhode Island Act provides. Our decisions from Everson to Allen have permitted the States to provide church-related schools with secular, neutral, or nonideological services, facilities, or materials. Bus transportation, school lunches, public health services, and secular textbooks supplied in common to all students were not 617 thought to offend the Establishment Clause. We note that the dissenters in Allen seemed chiefly concerned with the pragmatic difficulties involved in ensuring the truly secular content of the textbooks provided at state expense.

In Allen the Court refused to make assumptions, on a meager record, about the religious content of the textbooks that the State would be asked to provide. We cannot, however, refuse here to recognize that teachers have a substantially different ideological character from books. In terms of potential for involving some aspect of faith or morals in secular subjects, a textbook's content is ascertainable, but a teacher's handling of a subject is not. We cannot ignore the danger that a teacher under religious control and discipline poses to the separation of the religious from the purely secular aspects of precollege education. The conflict of functions inheres in the situation.

In our view the record shows these dangers are present to a substantial degree. The Rhode Island Roman Catholic elementary schools are under the general supervision of the Bishop of Providence and his appointed representative, the Diocesan Superintendent of Schools. In most cases, each individual parish, however, assumes the ultimate financial responsibility for the school, with the parish priest authorizing the allocation of parish funds. With only two exceptions, school principals are nuns appointed either by the Superintendent or the Mother Provincial of the order whose members staff the school. By 1969 lay teachers constituted more than a third of all teachers in the parochial elementary schools, and their number is growing. They are first interviewed by the superintendent's office and then by the school principal. The contracts are signed by the parish priest, and he retains some discretion in negotiating salary levels. Religious authority necessarily pervades the school system.

618 The schools are governed by the standards set forth in a 'Handbook of School Regulations,' which has the force of *2114 synodal law in the diocese. It emphasizes the role and importance of the teacher in parochial schools: 'The prime factor for the success or the failure of the school is the spirit and personality, as well as the professional competency, of the teacher * * *.' The Handbook also states that: 'Religious formation is not confined to formal courses; nor is it restricted to a single subject area.' Finally, the Handbook advises teachers to stimulate interest in religious vocations and missionary work. Given the mission of the church school, these instructions are consistent and logical.

Several teachers testified, however, that they did not inject religion into their secular classes. And the District Court found that religious values did not necessarily affect the content of the secular instruction. But what has been recounted suggests the potential if not actual hazards of this form of state aid. The teacher is employed by a religious organization, subject to the direction and discipline of religious authorities, and works in a system dedicated to rearing children in a particular faith. These controls are not lessened by the fact that most of the lay teachers are of the Catholic faith. Inevitably some of a teacher's responsibilities hover on the border between secular and religious orientation.

We need not and do not assume that teachers in parochial schools will be guilty of bad faith or any conscious design to evade the limitations imposed by the statute and the First Amendment. We simply recognize that a dedicated religious person, teaching in a school affiliated with his or her faith and operated to inculcate its tenets, will inevitably experience great difficulty in remaining religiously neutral. Doctrines and faith are not inculcated or advanced by neutrals. With the best of intentions such a teacher would find it hard to make 619 a total separation between secular teaching and religious doctrine. What would appear to some to be essential to good citizenship might well for others border on or constitute instruction in religion. Further difficulties are inherent in the combination of religious discipline and the possibility of disagreement between teacher and religious authorities over the meaning of the statutory restrictions.

We do not assume, however, that parochial school teachers will be unsuccessful in their attempts to segregate their religious beliefs from their secular educational responsibilities. But the potential for impermissible fostering of religion is present. The Rhode Island Legislature has not, and could not, provide state aid on the basis of a mere assumption that secular teachers under religious discipline can avoid conflicts. The State must be certain, given the Religion Clauses, that subsidized teachers do not inculcate religion-indeed the State here has undertaken to do so. To ensure that no trespass occurs, the State has therefore carefully conditioned its aid with pervasive restrictions. An eligible recipient must teach only those courses that are offered in the public schools and use only those texts and materials that are found in the public schools. In addition the teacher must not engage in teaching any course in religion.

A comprehensive, discriminating, and continuing state surveillance will inevitably be required to ensure that these restrictions are obeyed and the First Amendment otherwise respected. Unlike a book, a teacher cannot be inspected once so as to determine the extent and intent of his or her personal beliefs and subjective acceptance of the limitations imposed by the First Amendment. These prophylactic contacts will involve excessive and enduring entanglement between state and church.

620 There is another area of entanglement in the Rhode Island program that gives concern. The statute excludes teachers employed by nonpublic schools whose average per-pupil expenditures on secular education equal or exceed the comparable figures for public schools. In the event that the total expenditures of an otherwise eligible school exceed this norm, the program requires the government to examine*2115 the school's records in order to determine how much of the total expenditures is attributable to secular education and how much to religious activity. This kind of state inspection and evaluation of the religious content of a religious organization is fraught with the sort of entanglement that the Constitution forbids. It is a relationship pregnant with dangers of excessive government direction of church schools and hence of churches. The Court noted 'the hazards of government supporting churches' in Walz v. Tax Commission, supra, 397 U.S., at 675, 90 S.Ct., at 1414, and we cannot ignore here the danger that pervasive modern governmental power will ultimately intrude on religion and thus conflict with the Religion Clauses.

(b) Pennsylvania program

[4] The Pennsylvania statute also provides state aid to church-related schools for teachers' salaries. The complaint describes an educational system that is very similar to the one existing in Rhode Island. According to the allegations, the church-related elementary and secondary schools are controlled by religious organizations, have the purpose of propagating and promoting a particular religious faith, and conduct their operations to fulfill that purpose. Since this complaint was dismissed for failure to state a claim for relief, we must accept these allegations as true for purposes of our review.

As we noted earlier, the very restrictions and surveillance necessary to ensure that teachers play a strictly non-ideological role give rise to entanglements between 621 church and state. The Pennsylvania statute, like that of Rhode Island, fosters this kind of relationship. Reimbursement is not only limited to courses offered in the public schools and materials approved by state officials, but the statute excludes 'any subject matter expressing religious teaching, or the morals or forms of worship of any sect.' In addition, schools seeking reimbursement must maintain accounting procedures that require the State to establish the cost of the secular as distinguished from the religious instruction.

The Pennsylvania statute, moreover, has the further defect of providing state financial aid directly to the church-related schools. This factor distinguishes both Everson and Allen, for in both those cases the Court was careful to point out that state aid was provided to the student and his parents-not to the church-related school. Board of Education v. Allen, supra, 392 U.S., at 243-244, 88 S.Ct., at 1926-1927; Everson v. Board of Education, supra, 330 U.S., at 18, 67 S.Ct., at 512. In Walz v. Tax Commission, supra, 397 U.S., at 675, 90 S.Ct., at 1414, the Court warned of the dangers of direct payments to religious organizations:

'Obviously a direct money subsidy would be a relationship pregnant with involvement and, as with most governmental grant programs, could encompass sustained and detailed administrative relationships for enforcement of statutory or administrative standards * * *.'

The history of government grants of a continuing cash subsidy indicates that such programs have almost always been accompanied by varying measures of control and surveillance. The government cash grants before us now provide no basis for predicting that comprehensive measures of surveillance and controls will not follow. In particular the government's post-audit power to inspect and evaluate a church-related school's financial records and to determine which expenditures are religious and 622 which are secular creates an intimate and continuing relationship between church and state.

[5] A broader base of entanglement of yet a different character is presented by the devisive political potential of these state programs. In a community where such a large number of pupils are served by church-related schools, it can be assumed*2116 that state assistance will entail considerable political activity. Partisans of parochial schools, understandably concerned with rising costs and sincerely dedicated to both the religious and secular educational missions of their schools, will inevitably champion this cause and promote political action to achieve their goals. Those who oppose state aid, whether for constitutional, religious, or fiscal reasons, will inevitably respond and employ all of the usual political campaign techniques to prevail. Candidates will be forced to declare and voters to choose. It would be unrealistic to ignore the fact that many people confronted with issues of this kind will find their votes aligned with their faith.

[6] Ordinarily political debate and division, however vigorous or even partisan, are normal and healthy manifestations of our democratic system of government, but political division along religious lines was one of the principal evils against which the First Amendment was intended to protect. Freund, Comment, Public Aid to Parochial Schools, 82 Harv.L.Rev. 1680, 1692 (1969). The potential divisiveness of such conflict is a threat to the normal political process. Walz v. Tax Commission, supra, at 695, 90 S.Ct., at 1424. (separate opinion of Harlan, J.). See also Board of Education v. Allen, 392 U.S., at 249, 88 S.Ct., at 1929 (Harlan, J., concurring); Abington School District v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 307, 83 S.Ct. 1560, 1616, 10 L.Ed.2d 844 (1963) (Goldberg, J., concurring). To have States or communities divide on the issues presented by state aid to parochial schools would tend to confuse 623 and obscure other issues of great urgency. We have an expanding array of vexing issues, local and national, domestic and international, to debate and divide on. It conflicts with our whole history and tradition to permit questions of the Religion Clauses to assume such importance in our legislatures and in our elections that they could divert attention from the myriad issues and problems that confront every level of government. The highways of church and state relationships are not likely to be one-way streets, and the Constitution's authors sought to protect religious worship from the pervasive power of government. The history of many countries attests to the hazards of religion's intruding into the political arena or of political power intruding into the legitimate and free exercise of religious belief.

Of course, as the Court noted in Walz, '(a)dherents of particular faiths and individual churches frequently take strong positions on public issues.' Walz v. Tax Commission, supra, at 670, 90 S.Ct., at 1412. We could not expect otherwise, for religious values pervade the fabric of our national life. But in Walz we dealt with a status under state tax laws for the benefit of all religious groups. Here we are confronted with successive and very likely permanent annual appropriations that benefit relatively few religious groups. Political fragmentation and divisiveness on religious lines are thus likely to be intensified.

The potential for political divisiveness related to religious belief and practice is aggravated in these two statutory programs by the need for continuing annual appropriations and the likelihood of larger and larger demands as costs and populations grow. The Rhode Island District Court found that the parochial school system's 'monumental and deepening financial crisis' would 'inescapably' require larger annual appropriations subsidizing greater percentages of the salaries of lay teachers. Although no facts have been developed in this respect 624 in the Pennsylvania case, it appears that such pressures for expanding aid have already required the state legislature to include a portion of the state revenues from cigarette taxes in the program.

[7] In Walz it was argued that a tax exemption for places of religious worship would prove to be the first step in an inevitable progression leading to the 2117 establishment of state churches and state religion. That claim could not stand up against more than 200 years of virtually universal practice imbedded in our colonial experience and continuing into the present.

The progression argument, however, is more persuasive here. We have no long history of state aid to church-related educational institutions comparable to 200 years of tax exemption for churches. Indeed, the state programs before us today represent something of an innovation. We have already noted that modern governmental programs have self-perpetuating and self-expanding propensities. These internal pressures are only enhanced when the schemes involve institutions whose legitimate needs are growing and whose interests have substantial political support. Nor can we fail to see that in constitutional adjudication some steps, which when taken were thought to approach 'the verge,' have become the platform for yet further steps. A certain momentum develops in constitutional theory and it can be a 'downhill thrust' easily set in motion but difficult to retard or stop. Development by momentum is not invariably bad; indeed, it is the way the common law has grown, but it is a force to be recognized and reckoned with. The dangers are increased by the difficulty of perceiving in advance exactly where the 'verge' of the precipice lies. As well as constituting an independent evil against which the Religion Clauses were intended to protect, involvement*625 or entanglement between government and religion serves as a warning signal.

Finally, nothing we have said can be construed to disparage the role of church-related elementary and secondary schools in our national life. Their contribution has been and is enormous. Nor do we ignore their economic plight in a period of rising costs and expanding need. Taxpayers generally have been spared vast sums by the maintenance of these educational institutions by religious organizations, largely by the gifts of faithful adherents.

The merit and benefits of these schools, however, are not the issue before us in these cases. The sole question is whether state aid to these schools can be squared with the dictates of the Religion Clauses. Under our system the choice has been made that government is to be entirely excluded from the area of religious instruction and churches excluded from the affairs of government. The Constitution decrees that religion must be a private matter for the individual, the family, and the institutions of private choice, and that while some involvement and entanglement are inevitable, lines must be drawn.

The judgment of the Rhode Island District Court in No. 569 and No. 570 is affirmed. The judgment of the Pennsylvania District Court in No. 89 is reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Mr. Justice MARSHALL took no part in the consideration or decision of No. 89.

Mr. Justice DOUGLAS, whom Mr. Justice BLACK joins, concurring.

While I join the opinion of the Court, I have expressed at some length my views as to the rationale of today's decision in these three cases.

*626 They involve two different statutory schemes for providing aid to parochial schools. Lemon deals with the Pennsylvania Nonpublic Elementary and Secondary Education Act, Laws 1968, Act No. 109. By its terms the Pennsylvania Act allows the State to provide funds directly to private schools to purchase 'secular educational service' such as teachers' salaries, textbooks, and educational materials. Pa.Stat.Ann., Tit. 24, s 5604 (Supp.1971). Reimbursement for these services may be made only for courses in mathematics, modern foreign languages, physical science, and physical education. Reimbursement is prohibited for any course containing subject matter 'expressing religious teaching, or the morals or forms of worship of any sect.' s 5603 (Supp.1971). To qualify, a school must demonstrate that its pupils achieve a satisfactory level of performance in standardized tests approved by the Superintendent of Public Instruction, 2118 and that the textbooks and other instructional materials used in these courses have been approved by the Superintendent of Public Instruction. The three-judge District Court below upheld this statute against the argument that it violates the Establishment Clause. We noted probable jurisdiction. 397 U.S. 1034, 91 S.Ct. 1354, 25 L.Ed.2d 646.

The DiCenso cases involve the Rhode Island Salary Supplement Act, Laws 1969, c. 246. The Rhode Island Act authorizes supplementing the salaries of teachers of secular subjects in nonprofit private schools. The supplement is not more than 15% of an eligible teacher's current salary but cannot exceed the maximum salary paid to teachers in the State's public schools. To be eligible a teacher must teach only those subjects offered in public schools in the State, must be certified in substantially the same manner as teachers in public schools, and may use only teaching materials which are used in the public schools. Also the teacher must agree in writing 627 'not to teach a course in religion for so long as or during such time as he or she receives any salary supplements.' R.I.Gen.Laws Ann. s 16-51-3 (Supp.1970). The schools themselves must not be operated for profit, must meet state educational standards, and the annual per-student expenditure for secular education must not equal or exceed 'the average annual per student expenditure in the public schools in the state at the same grade level in the second preceding fiscal year.' s 16-51-2 (Supp. 1970). While the Rhode Island Act, unlike the Pennsylvania Act, provides for direct payments to the teacher, the three-judge District Court below found it unconstitutional because it 'results in excessive government entanglement with religion.' Probable jurisdiction was noted and the cases were set for oral argument with the other school cases. 400 U.S. 901, 91 S.Ct. 142, 27 L.Ed.2d 137.

In Walz v. Tax Commission, 397 U.S. 664, 674, 90 S.Ct. 1409, 1414, 25 L.Ed.2d 697, the Court in approving a tax exemption for church property said:

'Determining that the legislative purpose of tax exemption is not aimed at establishing, sponsoring, or supporting religion does not end the inquiry, however. We must also be sure that the end result-the effect-is not an excessive government entanglement with religion.'

There is in my view such an entanglement here. The surveillance or supervision of the States needed to police grants involved in these three cases, if performed, puts a public investigator into every classroom and entails a pervasive monitoring of these church agencies by the secular authorities. Yet if that surveillance or supervision does not occur the zeal of religious proselytizers promises to carry the day and make a shambles of the Establishment Clause. Moreover, when taxpayers of 628 many faiths are required to contribute money for the propagation of one faith, the Free Exercise Clause is infringed.

The analysis of the constitutional objections to these two state systems of grants to parochial or sectarian schools must start with the admitted and obvious fact that the raison d'e tre of parochial schools is the propagation of a religious faith. They also teach secular subjects; but they came into existence in this country because Protestant groups were perverting the public schools by using them to propagate their faith. The Catholics naturally rebelled. If schools were to be used to propagate a particular creed or religion, then Catholic ideals should also be served. Hence the advent of parochial schools.

By 1840 there were 200 Catholic parish schools in the United States.[FN1] By 1964 there were 60 times as many.[FN2] Today 57% of the 9,000 Catholic parishes in the country have their church schools. '(E)very diocesan chancery has its school department, and it enjoys a primacy*2119 of status.' [FN3] The parish schools indeed consume 40% to 65% of the parish's total income.[FN4] The parish is so 'school centered' that '(t)he school almost becomes the very reason for being.[FN5] revealed in the King James version of the Bible.[FN6] The contests 629 between Protestants and Catholics, often erupting into violence including the burning of Catholic churches, are a twice-told tale;[FN7] the Know-Nothing Party, which included in its platform 'daily Bible reading in the schools,'[FN8] carried three States in 1854-Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and Delaware.[FN9] Parochial schools grew, but not Catholic schools alone. Other dissenting sects established their own schools-Lutherans, Methodists, Presbyterians, and others.[FN10] But the major force in shaping the pattern of education in this country was the conflict between Protestants and Catholics. The Catholics logically argued that a public school was sectarian when it taught the King James version of the Bible. They therefore wanted it removed from the public schools; and in time they tried to get public funds for their own parochial schools.[FN11]

The constitutional right of dissenters to substitute their parochial schools for public schools was sustained by the Court in Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 45 S.Ct. 571, 69 L.Ed. 1070.

The story of conflict and dissension is long and well known. The result was a state of so-called equilibrium where religious instruction was eliminated from public schools and the use of public funds to support religious schools was deemed to be banned.[FN12]

FN12. See E. Knight, Education in the United States 3, 314 (3d rev. ed. 1951); E. Cubberley, Public Education in the United States 164 et seq. (1919).

But the hydraulic pressures created by political forces and by economic stress were great and they began to 630 change the situation. Laws were passed-state and federal-that dispensed public funds to sustain religious schools and the plea was always in the educational frame of reference: education in all sectors was needed, from languages to calculus to nuclear physics. And it was forcefully argued that a linguist or mathematician or physicist trained in religious schools was just as competent as one trained in secular schools.

And so we have gradually edged into a situation where vast amounts of public funds are supplied each year to sectarian schools.[FN13]

FN13. In 1960 the Federal Government provided $500 million to private colleges and universities. Amounts contributed by state and local governments to private schools at any level were negligible. Just one decade later federal aid to private colleges and universities had grown to. $2.1 billion. State aid had begun and reached $100 million. Statistical Abstract of the United States 105 (1970). As the present cases demonstrate, we are now reaching a point where state aid is being given to private elementary and secondary schools as well as colleges and universities.

And the argument is made that the private parochial school system takes about $9 billion a year off the back of government[FN14]-as if that were enough to justify violating the Establishment Clause.

*2120 While the evolution of the public school system in this country marked an escape from denominational control and was therefore admirable as seen through the eyes of those who think like Madison and Jefferson, it has disadvantages. The main one is that a state system may attempt to mold all students alike according to the views of the dominant group and to discourage the emergence of individual idiosyncrasies.

Sectarian education, however, does not remedy that condition. The advantages of sectarian education relate solely to religious or doctrinal matters. They give the 631 church the opportunity to indoctrinate its creed delicately and indirectly, or massively through doctrinal courses.

Many nations follow that course: Moslem nations teach the Koran in their schools; Sweden vests its elementary education in the parish; Newfoundland puts its school system under three superintendents-one from the Church of England, one from the Catholic church, one from the United Church. In Ireland the public schools are under denominational managership-Catholic, Episcopalian, Presbyterian, and Hebrew.

England puts sectarian schools under the umbrella of its school system. It finances sectarian education; it exerts control by prescribing standards; it requires some free scholarships; it provides nondenominational membership on the board of directors.[FN15]

> FN15. S. Curtis, History of Education in Great Britain 316-383 (5th ed. 1963); W. Alexander, Education in England, c II (2d ed. 1964).

The British system is, in other words, one of surveillance over sectarian schools. We too have surveillance over sectarian schools but only to the extent of making sure that minimum educational standards are met, viz., competent teachers, accreditation of the school for diplomas, the number of hours of work and credits allowed, and so on.

But we have never faced, until recently, the problem of policing sectarian schools. Any surveillance to date has been minor and has related only to the consistently unchallenged matters of accreditation of the sectarian school in the State's school system.[FN16]

> FN16. See Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 534, 45 S.Ct. 571, 573, 69 L.Ed. 1070; Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390, 402, 43 S.Ct. 625, 627, 67 L.Ed. 1042.

The Rhode Island Act allows a supplementary salary to a teacher in a sectarian school if he or she 'does not teach a course in religion.'

632 The Pennsylvania Act provides for state financing of instruction in mathematics, modern foreign languages, physical science, and physical education, provided that the instruction in those courses 'shall not include any subject matter expressing religious teaching, or the morals or forms of worship of any sect.'

Public financial support of parochial schools puts those schools under disabilities with which they were not previously burdened. For, as we held in Cooper v. Aaron, 358 U.S. 1, 19, 78 S.Ct. 1401, 1410, 3 L.Ed.2d 5, governmental activities relating to schools 'must be exercised consistently with federal constitutional requirements.' There we were concerned with equal protection; here we are faced with issues of Establishment of religion and its Free Exercise as those concepts are used in the First Amendment.

Where the governmental activity is the financing of the private school, the various limitations or restraints imposed by the Constitution on state governments come into play. Thus, Arkansas, as part of its attempt to avoid the consequences of Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483, 74 S.Ct. 686, 98 L.Ed. 873, 349 U.S. 294, 75 S.Ct. 753, 99 L.Ed. 1083, withdrew its financial support from some public schools and sent the funds instead to private schools. That state action was held to violate the Equal Protection Clause. Aaron v. McKinley, D.C., 173 F.Supp. 944, 952. We affirmed, sub nom. *2121Faubus v. Aaron, 361 U.S. 197, 80 S.Ct. 291, 4 L.Ed.2d 237. Louisiana tried a like tactic and it too was invalidated. Poindexter v. Louisiana Financial Assistance Commission, D.C., 296 F.Supp. 686. Again we affirmed. Louisiana Ed. Commission for Needy Children v. Poindexter, 393 U.S. 17, 89 S.Ct. 48, 21 L.Ed.2d 16. Whatever might be the result in case of grants to students,[FN17] it is clear that once 633 one of the States finances a private school, it is duty-bound to make certain that the school stays within secular bounds and does not use the public funds to promote sectarian causes.

The government may, of course, finance a hospital though it is run by a religious order, provided it is open to people of all races and creeds. Bradfield v. Roberts, 175 U.S. 291, 20 S.Ct. 121, 44 L.Ed. 168. The government itself could enter the hospital business; and it would, of course, make no difference if its agents who ran its hospitals were Catholics, Methodists, agnostics, or whatnot. For the hospital is not indulging in religious instruction or guidance or indoctrination. As Mr. Justice Jackson said in Everson v. Board of Education, 330 U.S. 1, 26, 67 S.Ct. 504, 516, 91 L.Ed. 711 (dissenting):

'(Each State has) great latitude in deciding for itself, in the light of its own conditions, what shall be public purposes in its scheme of things. It may socialize utilities and economic enterprises and make taxpayers' business out of what conventionally had been private business. It may make public business of individual welfare, health, education, entertainment or security. But it cannot make public business of religious worship or instruction, or of attendance at religious institutions of any character.'

The reason is that given by Madison in his Remonstrance:[FN18]

FN18. Remonstrance 3. The Memorial and Remonstrance Against Religious Assessments has been reproduced in appendices to the opinion of Rutledge, J., in Everson, 330 U.S., at 63, 67 S.Ct., at 534, and to that of Douglas, J., in Walz, 397 U.S., at 719, 90 S.Ct., at 1437.

'(T)he same authority which can force a citizen to contribute three pence only of his property for 634 the support of any one establishment, may force him to conform to any other establishment * * *.'

When Madison in his Remonstrance attacked a taxing measure to support religious activities, he advanced a series of reasons for opposing it. One that is extremely relevant here was phrased as follows:[FN19] '(I)t will destroy that moderation and harmony which the forbearance of our laws to intermeddle with Religion, has produced amongst its several sects.' Intermeddling, to use Madison's word, or 'entanglement,' to use what was said in Watz, has two aspects. The intrusion of government into religious schools through grants, supervision, or surveillance may result in establishment of religion in the constitutional sense when what the State does enthrones a particular sect for overt or subtle propagation of its faith. Those activities of the State may also intrude on the Free Exercise Clause by depriving a teacher, under threats of reprisals, *2122 of the right to give sectarian construction or interpretation of, say, history and literature, or to use the teaching of such subjects to inculcate a religious creed or dogma.

FN19. Remonstrance 11.

Under these laws there will be vast governmental suppression, surveillance, or meddling in church affairs. As I indicated in Tilton v. Richardson, 403 U.S. 672, 91 S.Ct. 2091, 29 L.Ed.2d 790, decided this day, school prayers, the daily routine of parochial schools, must go if our decision in Engel v. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421, 82 S.Ct. 1261, 8 L.Ed.2d 601, is honored. If it is not honored, then the state has established a religious sect. Elimination of prayers is only part of the problem. The curriculum presents subtle and difficult problems. The constitutional mandate can in part be carried out by censoring the curricula. What is palpably a sectarian course can be marked for 635 deletion. But the problem only starts there. Sectarian instruction, in which, of course, a State may not indulge, can take place in a course on Shakespeare or in one on mathematics. No matters what the curriculum offers, the question is, what is taught? We deal not with evil teachers but with zealous ones who may use any opportunity to indoctrinate a class.[FN20]

FN20. 'In the parochial schools Roman > Catholic indoctrination is included in every subject. History, literature, geography, civics, and science are given a Roman Catholic slant. The whole education of the child is filled with propaganda. That, of course, is the very purpose of such schools, the very reason for going to all of the work and expense of maintaining a dual school system. Their purpose is not so much to educate, but to indoctrinate and train, not to teach Scripture truths and Americanism, but to make loyal Roman Catholics. The children are regimented, and are told what to wear, what to do, and what to think.' L. Boettner, Roman Catholicism 360 (1962).

It is well known that everything taught in most parochial schools is taught with the ultimate goal of religious education in mind. Rev. Joseph H. Fichter, S.J., stated in Parochial School: A Sociological Study 86 (1958):

'It is a commonplace observation that in the parochial school religion permeates the whole curriculum, and is not confined to a single half-hour period of the day. Even arithmetic can be used as an instrument of pious thoughts, as in the case of the teacher who gave this problem to her class: 'If it takes forty thousand priests and a hundred and forty thousand sisters to care for forty million Catholics in the United States, how many more priests and sisters will be needed to convert and care for the hundred million non-Catholics in the United States?''

One can imagine what a religious zealot, as contrasted to a civil libertarian, can do with the Reformation636 or with the Inquisition. Much history can be given the gloss of a particular religion. I would think that policing these grants to detect sectarian instruction would be insufferable to religious partisans and would breed division and dissension between church and state.

This problem looms large where the church controls the hiring and firing of teachers:

'(I)n the public school the selection of a faculty and the administration of the school usually rests with a school board which is subject to election and recall by the voters, but in the parochial school the selection of a faculty and the administration of the school is in the hands of the bishop alone, and usually is administered through the local priest. If a faculty member in the public school believes that he has been treated unjustly in being disciplined or dismissed, he can seek redress through the civil court and he is guaranteed a hearing. But if a faculty member in a parochial school is disciplined or dismissed he has no recourse whatsoever. The word of the bishop or priest is final, even without explanation if he so chooses. The tax payers have a voice in the way their money is used in the *2123 public school, but the people who support a parochial school have no voice at all in such affairs.' L. Boettner, Roman Catholicism 375 (1962).

Board of Education v. Allen, 392 U.S. 236, 88 S.Ct. 1923, 20 L.Ed.2d 1060, dealt only with textbooks. Even so, some had difficulty giving approval. Yet books can be easily examined independently of other aspects of the teaching process. In the present cases we deal with the totality of instruction destined to be sectarian, at least in part, if the religious character of the school is to be maintained. A school which operates to commingle religion with other instruction plainly cannot completely secularize its instruction. 637 Parochial schools, in large measure, do not accept the assumption that secular subjects should be unrelated to religious teaching.

Lemon involves a state statute that prescribes that courses in mathematics, modern foreign languages, physical science, and physical education 'shall not include any subject matter expressing religious teaching, or the morals or forms of worship of any sect.' The subtleties involved in applying this standard are obvious. It places the State astride a sectarian school and gives it power to dictate what is or is not secular, what is or is not religious. I can think of no more disrupting influence apt to promote rancor and ill-will between church and state than this kind of surveillance and control. They are the very opposite of the 'moderation and harmony' between church and state which Madison thought was the aim and purpose of the Establishment Clause.

The DiCenso cases have all the vices which are in Lemon, because the supplementary salary payable to the teacher is conditioned on his or her not teaching 'a course in religion.'

Moreover the DiCenso cases reveal another, but related, knotty problem presented when church and state launch one of these educational programs. The Bishop of Rhode Island has a Handbook of School Regulations for the Diocese of Providence.[FN21]

FN21. It was said on oral argument that the handbook shown as an exhibit in the record had been superseded. The provisions hereinafter quoted are from the handbook as it reads after all the deletions to which we were referred.

The school board supervises 'the education, both spiritual and secular, in the parochial schools and diocesan high schools.'

The superintendent is an agent of the bishop and he interprets and makes 'effective state and diocesan educational directives.'

638 The pastors visit the schools and 'give their assistance in promoting spiritual and intellectual discipline.'

Community supervisors 'assist the teacher in the problems of instruction' and these duties are:

'I. To become well enough acquainted with the teachers of their communities so as to be able to advise the community superiors on matters of placement and reassignment.

II. To act as liaison between the provincialate and the religious teacher in the school.

'III. To cooperate with the superintendent by studying the diocesan school regulations and to encourage the teachers of their community to observe these regulations.

'IV. To avoid giving any orders or directions to the teachers of their community that may be in conflict with diocesan regulations or policy regarding curriculum, testing, textbooks, method, or administrative matters.

'V. To refer questions concerning school administration beyond the scope of their own authority to the proper diocesan school authorities, namely, the superintendent of schools or the pastor.'

*2124 The length of the school day includes Mass:

'A full day session for Catholic schools at the elementary level consists of five and one-half hours, exclusive of lunch and Mass,[FN22] but inclusive of recess for pupils in grades 1-3.'

FN22. 'The use of school time to participate in the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass on the feasts of All Saints, Ascension, and the patronal saint of the parish or school, as well as during the 40 Hours Devotion, is proper and commendable.'

A course of study or syllabus prescribed for an elementary or secondary school is 'mandatory.'

639 Religious instruction is provided as follows:

'A. Systematic religious instructions must be provided in all schools of the diocese.

'B. Modern catechetics requires a teacher with unusual aptitudes, specialized training, and such unction of the spirit that his words possess the force of a personal call. He should be so filled with his subject that he can freely improvize in discussion, dramatization, drawing, song, and prayer. A teacher so gifted and so permeated by the message of the Gospel is rare. Perhaps no teacher in a given school attains that ideal. But some teachers come nearer it than others. If our pupils are to hear the Good News so that their minds are enlightened and their hearts respond to the love of God and His Christ, if they are to be formed into vital, twentieth-century Christians, they should receive their religious instructions only from the very best teachers.

'C. Inasmuch as the textbooks employed in religious instruction above the fifth grade require a high degree of catechetical preparation, religion should be a departmentalized subject in grade six through twelve.'

Religious activities are provided, through observance of specified holy days and participation in Mass.

© 2011 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

'Religious formation' is not restricted to courses but is achieved 'through the example of the faculty, the tone of the school * * * and religious activities.'

No unauthorized priest may address the students.

'Retreats and days of recollection form an integral part of our religious program in the Catholic schools.'

Religious factors are used in the selection of students:

'Although wealth should never serve as a criterion for accepting a pupil into a Catholic school, all other 640 things being equal, it would seem fair to give preference to a child whose parents support the parish. Regular use of the budget, rather than the size of the contributions, would appear equitable. It indicates whether parents regularly attend Mass.'

These are only highlights of the handbook. But they indicate how pervasive is the religious control over the school and how remote this type of school is from the secular school. Public funds supporting that structure are used to perpetuate a doctrine and creed in innumerable and in pervasive ways. Those who man these schools are good people, zealous people, dedicated people. But they are dedicated to ideas that the Framers of our Constitution placed beyond the reach of government.

If the government closed its eyes to the manner in which these grants are actually used it would be allowing public funds to promote sectarian education. If it did not close its eyes but undertook the surveillance needed, it would, I fear, intermeddle in parochial affairs in a way that would breed only rancor and dissension.

We have announced over and over again that the use of taxpayers' money to support parochial schools violates the First Amendment, applicable to the States by virtue of the Fourteenth.

*2125 We said in unequivocal words in Everson v. Board of Education, 330 U.S. 1, 16, 67 S.Ct. 504, 511, 91 L.Ed. 711, 'No tax in any amount, large or small, can be levied to support any religious activities or institutions, whatever they may be called, or whatever form they may adopt to teach or practice religion.' We reiterated the same idea in Zorach v. Clauson, 343 U.S. 306, 314, 72 S.Ct. 679, 684, 96 L.Ed. 954, and in McGowan v. Maryland, 366 U.S. 420, 443, 8u S.Ct. 1101, 1114, 6 L.Ed.2d 393, and in Torcaso v. Watkins, 367 U.S. 488, 493, 81 S.Ct. 1680, 1682, 6 L.Ed.2d 982. We repeated the same idea in McCollum v. Board of Education, 333 U.S. 203, 210, 68 S.Ct. 461, 464, 92 L.Ed. 648, and added that a State's 641 tax-supported public schools could not be used 'for the dissemination of religious doctrines' nor could a State provide the church 'pupils for their religious classes through use of the state's compulsory public school machinery.' Id., at 212, 68 S.Ct., at 466.

Yet in spite of this long and consistent history there are those who have the courage to announce that a State may nonetheless finance the secular part of a sectarian school's educational program. That, however, makes a grave constitutional decision turn merely on cost accounting and bookkeeping entries. A history class, a literature class, or a science class in a parochial school is not a separate institute; it is part of the organic whole which the State subsidizes. The funds are used in these cases to pay or help pay the salaries of teachers in parochial schools; and the presence of teachers is critical to the essential purpose of the parochial school, viz., to advance the religious endeavors of the particular church. It matters not that the teacher receiving taxpayers' money only teaches religion a fraction of the time. Nor does it matter that he or she teaches no religion. The school is an organism living on one budget. What the taxpayers give for salaries of those who teach only the humanities or science without any trace of proseletyzing enables the school to use all of its own funds for religious training. As Judge Coffin said, 316 F.Supp. 112, 120, we would be blind to realities if we let 'sophisticated bookkeeping' sanction 'almost total subsidy of a religious institution by assigning the bulk of the institution's expenses to 'secular' activities.' And sophisticated attempts to avoid the Constitution are just as invalid as simple-minded ones. Lane v. Wilson, 307 U.S. 268, 275, 59 S.Ct. 872, 876, 83 L.Ed. 1281.

In my view the taxpayers' forced contribution to the 642 parochial schools in the present cases violates the First Amendment.

Supreme Court of the United States
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR the ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE, a Corporation, Petitioner,
v.
STATE OF ALABAMA, ex rel. John PATTERSON, Attorney General.

No. 91.
Argued Jan. 15, 1958.
Decided June 30, 1958.

Suit against association to oust it from state and enjoin it from conducting further activities, wherein the association was adjudged in contempt for noncompliance with order requiring it to produce records including names of its members. The Supreme Court of Alabama denied certiorari to review the adjudication, 265 Ala. 349, 91 So.2d 214, and the association brought certiorari. The Supreme Court, Mr. Justice Harlan, held that order requiring association to produce records including names and addresses of all members and agents was a denial of due process as entailing likelihood of a substantial restraint upon members' exercise of their right to freedom of association.

Reversed and remanded.

Under Alabama law, effect of contempt adjudication based on violation of order to produce records in suit for ouster of association from state was to foreclose association from obtaining a hearing on merits of the underlying ouster action, or from taking any steps to dissolve temporary restraining order which had been issued ex parte, until it purged itself of contempt.

The proper method for raising questions in Alabama appellate courts pertaining to suit for injunction against foreign association's continuing activities within the state would be by appeal, after hearing on merits and final judgment by lower state court, and only from disposition of such an appeal could review of restraining order in such suit be sought in United States Supreme Court.

*1166 450 Mr. Robert L. Carter, New York City, for petitioner.

Mr. Edmon L. Rinehart, Montgomery, Ala., for respondent.

451 Mr. Justice HARLAN delivered the opinion of the Court.

We review from the standpoint of its validity under the Federal Constitution a judgment of civil contempt entered against petitioner, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, in the courts of Alabama. The question presented is whether Alabama, consistently with the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, can compel petitioner to reveal to the State's Attorney General the names and addresses of all its Alabama members and agents, without regard to their positions or functions in the Association. The judgment of contempt was based upon petitioner's refusal to comply fully with a court order requiring in part the production of membership lists. Petitioner's claim is that the order, in the circumstances shown by this record, violated rights assured to petitioner and its members under the Constitution.

Alabama has a statute similar to those of many other States which requires a foreign corporation, except as exempted, to qualify before doing business by filing its corporate charter with the Secretary of State and designating a place of business and an agent to receive service of process. The statute imposes a fine on a corporation transacting intrastate business before qualifying and provides for criminal prosecution of officers of such a corporation. Ala.Code, 1940, Tit. 10, ss 192-198. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is a nonprofit membership corporation organized under the laws of New York. Its purposes, fostered on a nationwide basis, are those indicated by its name,[FN*] and it operates452 through chartered affiliates which are independent unincorporated associations, with membership therein equivalent to membership in petitioner. The first Alabama affiliates were chartered in 1918. Since that time the aims of the Association have been advanced through activities of its affiliates, and in 1951 the Association itself opened a regional office in Alabama, at which it employed two supervisory persons and one clerical worker. The Association has never complied with the qualification statute, from which it considered itself exempt.

> FN* The Certificate of Incorporation of the Association provides that its '* * * principal objects * * * are voluntarily to promote equality of rights and eradicate caste or race prejudice among the citizens of the United States; to advance the interest of colored citizens; to secure for them impartial suffrage; and to increase their opportunities for securing justice in the courts, education for their children, employment according to their ability, and complete equality before the law.'

In 1956 the Attorney General of Alabama brought an equity suit in the State Circuit Court, Montgomery County, to 1167 enjoin the Association from conducting further activities within, and to oust it from, the State. Among other things the bill in equity alleged that the Association had opened a regional office and had organized various affiliates in Alabama; had recruited members and solicited contributions within the State; had given financial support and furnished legal assistance to Negro students seeking admission to the state university; and had supported a Negro boycott of the bus lines in Montgomery to compel the seating of passengers without regard to race. The bill recited that the Association, by continuing to do business in Alabama without complying with the qualification statute, was ' * * causing irreparable injury to the property and civil rights of the residents and citizens of the State of Alabama for which criminal prosecution and civil actions at law afford no adequate relief * * *.' On the day the complaint was filed, the Circuit Court issued ex parte an order restraining the Association, pendente lite, from engaging in 453 further activities within the State and forbidding it to take any steps to qualify itself to do business therein.

Petitioner demurred to the allegations of the bill and moved to dissolve the restraining order. It contended that its activities did not subject it to the qualification requirements of the statute and that in any event what the State sought to accomplish by its suit would violate rights to freedom of speech and assembly guaranteed under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Before the date set for a hearing on this motion, the State moved for the production of a large number of the Association's records and papers, including bank statements, leases, deeds, and records containing the names and addresses of all Alabama 'members' and 'agents' of the Association. It alleged that all such documents were necessary for adequate preparation for the hearing, in view of petitioner's denial of the conduct of intrastate business within the meaning of the qualification statute. Over petitioner's objections, the court ordered the production of a substantial part of the requested records, including the membership lists, and postponed the hearing on the restraining order to a date later than the time ordered for production.

Thereafter petitioner filed its answer to the bill in equity. It admitted its Alabama activities substantially as alleged in the complaint and that it had not qualified to do business in the State. Although still disclaiming the statute's application to it, petitioner offered to qualify if the bar from qualification made part of the restraining order were lifted, and it submitted with the answer an executed set of the forms required by the statute. However petitioner did not comply with the production order, and for this failure was adjudged in civil contempt and fined $10,000. The contempt judgment provided that the fine would be subject to reduction or remission if compliance 454 were forthcoming within five days but otherwise would be increased to $100,000.

[1] At the end of the five-day period petitioner produced substantially all the data called for by the production order except its membership lists, as to which it contended that Alabama could not constitutionally compel disclosure, and moved to modify or vacate the contempt judgment, or stay it execution pending appellate review. This motion was denied. While a similar stay application, which was later denied, was pending before the Supreme Court of Alabama, the Circuit Court made a further order adjudging petitioner in continuing contempt and increasing the fine already imposed to $100,000. Under Alabama law, see Jacoby v. Goetter, Weil & Co., 74 Ala. 427, the effect of the contempt adjudication was to foreclose petitioner from obtaining a hearing on the merits of the underlying ouster action, or from taking any steps to dissolve the temporary restraining order which had been issued ex *1168 parte, until it purged itself of contempt. But cf. Harrison v. St. Louis & S.F.R. Co., 232 U.S. 318, 34 S.Ct. 333, 58 L.Ed. 621; Hovey v. Elliott, 167 U.S. 409, 17 S.Ct. 841, 42 L.Ed. 215.

[2] The State Supreme Court thereafter twice dismissed petitions for certiorari to review this final contempt judgment, the first time, 265 Ala. 699, 91 So.2d 221, for insufficiency of the petition's allegations and the second time on procedural grounds. 265 Ala. 349, 91 So.2d 214. We granted certiorari because of the importance of the constitutional questions presented. 353 U.S. 972, 77 S.Ct. 1056, 1 L.Ed.2d 1135.

I.

[3][4] We address ourselves first to respondent's contention that we lack jurisdiction because the denial of certiorari by the Supreme Court of Alabama rests on an independent nonfederal ground, namely, that petitioner in applying for certiorari had pursued the wrong appellate 455 remedy under state law. Respondent recognizes that our jurisdiction is not defeated if the nonfederal ground relied on by the state court is 'without any fair or substantial support,' Ward v. Board of County Commissioners, 253 U.S. 17, 22, 40 S.Ct. 419, 421, 64 L.Ed. 751. It thus becomes our duty to ascertain, '* * * in order that constitutional guaranties may appropriately be enforced, whether the asserted non-federal ground independently and adequately supports the judgment.' Abie State Bank v. Bryan, 282 U.S. 765, 773, 51 S.Ct. 252, 255, 75 L.Ed. 690.

The Alabama Supreme Court held that it could not consider the constitutional issues underlying the contempt judgment which related to the power of the State to order production of membership lists because review by certiorari was limited to instances '* * * where the court lacked jurisdiction of the proceeding, or where on the face of it the order disobeyed was void, or where procedural requirements with respect to citation for contempt and the like were not observed, or where the fact of contempt is not sustained * * *.' 265 Ala. at page 353, 91 So.2d at page 217. The proper means for petitioner to obtain review of the judgment in light of its constitutional claims, said the court, was by way of mandamus to quash the discovery order prior to the contempt adjudication. Because of petitioner's failure to pursue this remedy, its challenge to the contempt order was restricted to the above grounds. Apparently not deeming the constitutional objections to draw into question whether 'on the face of it the order disobeyed was void,' the court found no infirmity in the contempt judgment under this limited scope of review. At the same time it did go on to consider petitioner's constitutional challenge to the order to produce membership lists but found it untenable since membership lists were not privileged against disclosure pursuant to reasonable state demands and since the privilege against self-incrimination was not available to corporations.

456 [5] We are unable to reconcile the procedural holding of the Alabama Supreme Court in the present case with its past unambiguous holdings as to the scope of review available upon a writ of certiorari addressed to a contempt judgment. As early as 1909 that court said in such a case, Ex parte Dickens, 162 Ala. 272, at pages 276, 279-280, 50 So. 218, at pages 220, 221:

© 2011 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

'Originally, on certiorari, only the question of jurisdiction was inquired into; but this limit has been removed, and now the court 'examines the law questions involved in the case which may affect its merits.' * * * (T)he judgment of this court is that the proper way to review the action of the court in cases of this kind is by certiorari, and not by appeal.

'We think that certiorari is a better remedy than mandamus, because 1169 the office of a 'mandamus' is to require the lower court or judge to act, and not 'to correct error or to reverse judicial action,' * * * whereas, in a proceeding by certiorari, errors of law in the judicial action of the lower court may be inquired into and corrected.'

This statement was in full accord with the earlier case of Ex parte Boscowitz, 84 Ala. 463, 4 So. 279, and the practice in the later Alabama cases, until we reach the present one, appears to have been entirely consistent with this rule. See Ex parte Wheeler, 231 Ala. 356, 357, 165 So. 74, 75-76; Ex parte Blakey, 240 Ala. 517, 199 So. 857; Ex parte Sellers, 250 Ala. 87, 88, 33 So.2d 349, 350. For example, in Ex parte Morris, 252 Ala. 551, 42 So.2d 17, decided as late as 1949, the petitioner had been held in contempt for his refusal to obey a court order to produce names of members of the Ku Klux Klan. On writ of certiorari, constitutional grounds were urged in part for *457 reversal of the contempt conviction. In denying the writ of certiorari, the Supreme Court concluded that petitioner had been accorded due process, and in explaining its denial the court considered and rejected various constitutional claims relating to the validity of the order. There was no intimation that the petitioner had selected an inappropriate form of appellate review to obtain consideration of all questions of law raised by a contempt judgment.

[6][7][8] The Alabama cases do indicate, as was said in the opinion below, that an order requiring production of evidence '* * * may be reviewed on petition for mandamus.' 265 Ala. at page 353, 91 So.2d at page 217. (Italics added.) See Ex parte Hart, 240 Ala. 642, 200 So. 783; cf. Ex parte Driver, 255 Ala. 118, 50 So.2d 413. But we can discover nothing in the prior state cases which suggests that mandamus is the exclusive remedy for reviewing court orders after disobedience of them has led to contempt judgments. Nor, so far as we can find, do any of these prior decisions indicate that the validity of such orders can be drawn in question by way of certiorari only in instances where a defendant had no opportunity to apply for mandamus. Although the opinion below suggests no such distinction, the State now argues that this was in fact the situation in all of the earlier certiorari cases, because there the contempt adjudications, unlike here, had followed almost immediately the disobedience to the court orders. Even if that is indeed the rationale of the Alabama Supreme Court's present decision, such a local procedural rule, although it may now appear in retrospect to form part of a consistent pattern of procedures to obtain appellate review, cannot avail the State here, because petitioner could not fairly be deemed to have been apprised of its existence. Novelty in procedural requirements cannot be permitted to thwart review in this Court applied for by those who, in justified reliance upon prior decisions, seek vindication in state courts of their federal constitutional*458 rights. Cf. Brinkerhoff-Faris Trust & Savings Co. v. Hill, 281 U.S. 673, 50 S.Ct. 451, 74 L.Ed. 1107.

[9] That there was justified reliance here is further indicated by what the Alabama Supreme Court said in disposing of petitioner's motion for a stay of the first contempt judgment in this case. This motion, which was filed prior to the final contempt judgment and which stressed constitutional issues, recited that '(t)he only way in which the (Association) can seek a review of the validity of the order upon which the adjudication of contempt is based (is) by filing a petition for Writ of Certiorari in this Court.' In denying the motion, 265 Ala. 356, 357, 91 So.2d 220, 221, the Supreme Court stated:

'It is the established rule of this Court that the proper method of reviewing a judgment for civil contempt of the kind here involved is 1170 by a petition for common law writ of certiorari * * *.

'But the petitioner here has not applied for writ of certiorari, and we do not feel that the petition (for a stay) presently before us warrants our interference with the judgment of the Circuit Court of Montgomery County here sought to be stayed.'

We hold that this Court has jurisdiction to entertain petitioner's federal claims.

II.

[10] The Association both urges that it is constitutionally entitled to resist official inquiry into its membership lists, and that it may assert, on behalf of its members, a right personal to them to be protected from compelled disclosure by the State of their affiliation with the Association as revealed by the membership lists. We think that petitioner argues more appropriately the rights of its members, and that its nexus with them is sufficient to permit that it act as their representative before this 459 Court. In so concluding, we reject respondent's argument that the Association lacks standing to assert here constitutional rights pertaining to the members, who are not of course parties to the litigation.

[11] To limit the breadth of issues which must be dealt with in particular litigation, this Court has generally insisted that parties rely only on constitutional rights which are personal to themselves. Tileston v. Ullman, 318 U.S. 44, 63 S.Ct. 493, 87 L.Ed. 603; Robertson and Kirkham, Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court (1951 ed.) s 293. This rule is related to the broader doctrine that constitutional adjudication should where possible be avoided. See Ashwander v. Tennessee Valley Authority, 297 U.S. 288, 346-348, 56 S.Ct. 466, 482-483, 80 L.Ed. 688 (concurring opinion). The principle is not disrespected where constitutional rights of persons who are not immediately before the Court could not be effectively vindicated except through an appropriate representative before the Court. See Barrows v. Jackson, 346 U.S. 249, 255-259, 73 S.Ct. 1031, 1034-1036, 97 L.Ed. 1586; Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee v. McGrath, 341 U.S. 123, 183-187, 71 S.Ct. 624, 654-656, 95 L.Ed. 817 (concurring opinion).

[12] If petitioner's rank-and-file members are constitutionally entitled to withhold their connection with the Association despite the production order, it is manifest that this right is properly assertable by the Association. To require that it be claimed by the members themselves would result in nullification of the right at the very moment of its assertion. Petitioner is the appropriate party to assert that rights, because it and its members are in every practical sense identical. The Association, which provides in its constitution that '(a)ny person who is in accordance with (its) principles and policies * * *' may become a member, is but the medium through which its individual members seek to make more effective the expression of their own views. The reasonable likelihood that the Association itself through diminished financial support and membership may be adversely 460 affected if production is compelled is a further factor pointing towards our holding that petitioner has standing to complain of the production order on behalf of its members. Cf. Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 534-536, 45 S.Ct. 571, 573-574, 69 L.Ed. 1070.

III.

We thus reach petitioner's claim that the production order in the state litigation trespasses upon fundamental freedoms protected by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Petitioner argues that in view of the facts and circumstances shown in the record, the effect of compelled disclosure of the membership lists will be to abridge the rights of its rank-and-file members to engage in lawful association in support*1171 of their common beliefs. It contends that governmental action which, although not directly suppressing association, nevertheless carries this consequence, can be justified only upon some overriding valid interest of the State.

[13][14][15][16] Effective advocacy of both public and private points of view, particularly controversial ones, is undeniably enhanced by group association, as this Court has more than once recognized by remarking upon the close nexus between the freedoms of speech and assembly. De Jonge v. Oregon, 299 U.S. 353, 364, 57 S.Ct. 255, 259, 81 L.Ed. 278; Thomas v. Collins, 323 U.S. 516, 530, 65 S.Ct. 315, 322, 89 L.Ed. 430. It is beyond debate that freedom to engage in association for the advancement of beliefs and ideas is an inseparable aspect of the 'liberty' assured by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, which embraces freedom of speech. See Gitlow v. New York, 268 U.S. 652, 666, 45 S.Ct. 625, 629, 69 L.Ed. 1138; Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319, 324, 58 S.Ct. 149, 151, 82 L.Ed. 288; Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 303, 60 S.Ct. 900, 84 L.Ed. 1213; Staub v. City of Baxley, 355 U.S. 313, 321, 78 S.Ct. 277, 281, 2 L.Ed.2d 302. Of course, it is immaterial whether the beliefs sought to be advanced by association pertain to political, economic, religious or cultural matters, and state action which may have the 461 effect of curtailing the freedom to associate is subject to the closest scrutiny.

ently under review, has taken no direct action, cf. De Jonge v. Oregon, supra; Near v. Minnesota, 283 U.S. 697, 51 S.Ct. 625, 75 L.Ed. 1357, to restrict the right of petitioner's members to associate freely, does not end inquiry into the effect of the production order. See American Communications Ass'n v. Douds, 339 U.S. 382, 402, 70 S.Ct. 674, 685, 94 L.Ed. 925. In the domain of these indispensable liberties, whether of speech, press, or association, the decisions of this Court recognize that abridgement of such rights, even though unintended, may inevitably follow from varied forms of governmental action. Thus in Douds, the Court stressed that the legislation there challenged, which on its face sought to regulate labor unions and to secure stability in interstate commerce, would have the practical effect 'of discouraging' the exercise of constitutionally protected political rights, 339 U.S. at page 393, 70 S.Ct. at page 681, and it upheld that statute only after concluding that the reasons advanced for its enactment were constitutionally sufficient to justify its possible deterrent effect upon such freedoms. Similar recognition of possible unconstitutional intimidation of the free exercise of the right to advocate underlay this Court's narrow construction of the authority of a congressional committee investigating lobbying and of an Act regulating lobbying, although in neither case was there an effort to suppress speech. United States v. Rumely, 345 U.S. 41, 46-47, 73 S.Ct. 543, 546, 97 L.Ed. 770; United States v. Harriss, 347 U.S. 612, 625-626, 74 S.Ct. 808, 815-816, 98 L.Ed. 989. The governmental action challenged may appear to be totally unrelated to protected liberties. Statutes imposing taxes upon rather than prohibiting particular activity have been struck down when perceived to have the consequence of unduly curtailing the liberty of freedom of press assured under the Fourteenth Amendment. 462Grosjean v. American Press Co., 297 U.S. 233, 56 S.Ct. 444, 80 L.Ed. 660; Murdock v. Pennsylvania, 319 U.S. 105, 63 S.Ct. 891, 87 L.Ed. 1292.

[19][20][21] It is hardly a novel perception that compelled disclosure of affiliation with groups engaged in advocacy may constitute as effective a restraint on freedom of association as the forms of governmental action in the cases above were thought likely to produce upon the particular constitutional rights there involved. This Court has recognized the *1172 vital relationship between freedom to associate and privacy in one's associations. When referring to the varied forms of governmental action which might interfere with freedom of assembly, it said in American Communications Ass'n v. Douds, supra, 339 U.S. at page 402, 70 S.Ct. at page 686: 'A requirement that adherents of particular religious faiths or political parties wear identifying arm-bands, for example, is obviously of this nature.' Compelled disclosure of membership in an organization engaged in advocacy of particular beliefs is of the same order. Inviolability of privacy in group association may in many circumstances be indispensable to preservation of freedom of association, particularly where a group espouses dissident beliefs. Cf. United States v. Rumely, supra, 345 U.S. at pages 56-58, 73 S.Ct. at pages 550-551 (concurring opinion).

[22] We think that the production order, in the respects here drawn in question, must be regarded as entailing the likelihood of a substantial restraint upon the exercise by petitioner's members of their right to freedom of association. Petitioner has made an uncontroverted showing that on past occasions revelation of the identity of its rank-and-file members has exposed these members to economic reprisal, loss of employment, threat of physical coercion, and other manifestations of public hostility. Under these circumstances, we think it apparent that compelled disclosure of petitioner's Alabama membership is likely to affect adversely the ability of petitioner and 463 its members to pursue their collective effort to foster beliefs which they admittedly have the right to advocate, in that it may induce members to withdraw from the Association and dissuade others from joining it because of fear of exposure of their beliefs shown through their associations and of the consequences of this exposure.

[23][24] It is not sufficient to answer, as the State does here, that whatever repressive effect compulsory disclosure of names of petitioner's members may have upon participation by Alabama citizens in petitioner's activities follows not from state action but from private community pressures. The crucial factor is the interplay of governmental and private action, for it is only after the initial exertion of state power represented by the production order that private action takes hold.

[25] We turn to the final question whether Alabama has demonstrated an interest in obtaining the disclosures it seeks from petitioner which is sufficient to justify the deterrent effect which we have concluded these disclosures may well have on the free exercise by petitioner's members of their constitutionally protected right of association. See American Communications Ass'n v. Douds, supra, 339 U.S. at page 400, 70 S.Ct. at page 684; Schneider v. State,308 U.S. 147, 161, 60 S.Ct. 146, 150, 84 L.Ed. 155. Such a '* * * subordinating interest of the State must be compelling.' Sweezy v. New Hampshire, 354 U.S. 234, 265, 77 S.Ct. 1203, 1219, 1 L.Ed.2d 1311 (concurring opinion). It is not of moment that the State has here acted solely through its judicial branch, for whether legislative or judicial, it is still the application of state power which we are asked to scrutinize.

[26] It is important to bear in mind that petitioner asserts no right to absolute immunity from state investigation, and no right to disregard Alabama's laws. As shown by its substantial compliance with the production order, petitioner does not deny Alabama's right to obtain from it such information as the State desires concerning the purposes464 of the Association and its activities within the State. Petitioner has not objected to divulging the identity of its members who are employed by or hold official positions with it. *1173 It has urged the rights solely of its ordinary rank-and-file members. This is therefore not analogous to a case involving the interest of a State in protecting its citizens in their dealings with paid solicitors or agents of foreign corporations by requiring identifications. See Cantwell v. Connecticut, supra, 310 U.S. at page 306, 60 S.Ct. at page 904; Thomas v. Collins, supra, 323 U.S. at page 538, 65 S.Ct. at page 326.

Whether there was 'justification' in this instance turns solely on the substantiality of Alabama's interest in obtaining the membership lists. During the course of a hearing before the Alabama Circuit Court on a motion of petitioner to set aside the production order, the State Attorney General presented at length, under examination by petitioner, the State's reason for requesting the membership lists. The exclusive purpose was to determine whether petitioner was conducting intrastate business in violation of the Alabama foreign corporation registration statute, and the membership lists were expected to help resolve this question. The issues in the litigation commenced by Alabama by its bill in equity were whether the character of petitioner and its activities in Alabama had been such as to make petitioner subject to the registration statute, and whether the extent of petitioner's activities without qualifying suggested its permanent ouster from the State. Without intimating the slightest view upon the merits of these issues, we are unable to perceive that the disclosure of the names of petitioner's rank-and-file members has a substantial bearing on either of them. As matters stand in the state court, petitioner (1) has admitted its presence and conduct of activities in Alabama since 1918; (2) has offered to comply in all respects with the state qualification statute, although preserving465 its contention that the statute does not apply to it; and (3) has apparently complied satisfactorily with the production order, except for the membership lists, by furnishing the Attorney General with varied business records, its charter and statement of purposes, the names of all of its directors and officers, and with the total number of its Alabama members and the amount of their dues. These last items would not on this record appear subject to constitutional challenge and have been furnished, but whatever interest the State may have in obtaining names of ordinary members has not been shown to be sufficient to overcome petitioner's constitutional objections to the production order.

From what has already been said, we think it apparent that People of State of New York ex rel. Bryant v. Zimmerman, 278 U.S. 63, 49 S.Ct. 61, 73 L.Ed. 184, cannot be relied on in support of the State's position, for that case involved markedly different considerations in terms of the interest of the State in obtaining disclosure. There, this Court upheld as applied to a member of a local chapter of the Ku Klux Klan, a New York statute requiring any unincorporated association which demanded an oath as a condition to membership to file with state officials copies of its '* * * constitution, by-laws, rules, regulations and oath of membership, together with a roster of its membership and a list of its officers for the current year.' N.Y. Laws 1923, c. 664, ss 53, 56. In its opinion, the Court took care to emphasize the nature of the organization which New York sought to regulate. The decision was based on the particular character of the Klan's activities, involving acts of unlawful intimidation and violence, which the Court assumed was before the state legislature when it enacted the statute, and of which the Court itself took judicial notice. Furthermore, the situation before us is significantly different from that in Bryant, because the organization there had made no effort to comply with 466 any of the requirements of New York's statute but rather had refused to furnish the State with any information as to its local activities.

1174 [27] We hold that the immunity from state scrutiny of membership lists which the Association claims on behalf of its members is here so related to the right of the members to pursue their lawful private interests privately and to associate freely with others in so doing as to come within the protection of the Fourteenth Amendment. And we conclude that Alabama has fallen short of showing a controlling justification for the deterrent effect on the free enjoyment of the right to associate which disclosure of membership lists is likely to have. Accordingly, the judgment of civil contempt and the $100,000 fine which resulted from petitioner's refusal to comply with the production order in this respect must fall.

IV.

[28][29] Petitioner joins with its attack upon the production order a challenge to the constitutionality of the State's ex parte temporary restraining order preventing it from soliciting support in Alabama, and it asserts that the Fourteenth Amendment precludes such state action. But as noted above, petitioner has never received a hearing on the merits of the ouster suit, and we do not consider these questions properly here. The Supreme Court of Alabama noted in its denial of the petition for certiorari that such petition raised solely a question pertinent to the contempt adjudication. 'The ultimate aim and purpose of the litigation is to determine the right of the state to enjoin petitioners from doing business in Alabama. That question, however, is not before us in this proceeding.' 265 Ala. at page 352, 91 So.2d at page 216. The proper method for raising questions in the state appellate courts pertinent to the underlying suit for an injunction appears *467 to be by appeal, after a hearing on the merits and final judgment by the lower state court. Only from the disposition of such an appeal can review be sought here.

For the reasons stated, the judgment of the Supreme Court of Alabama must be reversed and the case remanded for proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Reversed.

Mr. Philip B. Perlman, Sol. Gen., of Washington, D.C., for the United States, as amicus curiae, by special leave of Court.

*4 Mr. Chief Justice VINSON delivered the opinion of the Court.

These cases present for our consideration questions relating to the validity of court enforcement of private agreements, generally described as restrictive covenants, which have as their purpose the exclusion of persons of designated race or color from the ownership or occupancy of real property. Basic constitutional issues of obvious importance have been raised.

The first of these cases comes to this Court on certiorari to the Supreme Court of Missouri. On February 16, 1911, thirty out of a total of thirty-nine owners of property fronting both sides of Labadie Avenue between Taylor Avenue and Cora Avenue in the city of St. Louis, signed an agreement, which was subsequently recorded, providing in part:

'* * * the said property is hereby restricted to the use and occupancy for the term of Fifty (50) years from this date, so that it shall be a condition all the time and whether recited and referred to as (sic) not in subsequent conveyances and shall attach to the land, as a condition precedent to the sale of the same, that hereafter no part of said property or any *5 portion thereof shall be, for said term of Fifty-years, occupied by any person not of the Caucasian race, it being intended hereby to restrict the use of said property for said period of time against the occupancy as owners or tenants of any portion of said property for resident or other purpose by people of the Negro or Mongolian Race.'

The entire district described in the agreement included fifty-seven parcels of lamd. The thirty owners who signed the agreement held title to forty-seven parcels, including the particular parcel involved in this case. At the time the agreement was signed, five of the parcels in the district were owned by Negroes. One of those had been occupied by Negro families since 1882, nearly thirty years before the restrictive agreement was executed. The trial court found that owners of seven out of nine homes on the south side of Labadie Avenue, within the restricted district and 'in the immediate vicinity' of the premises in question, had failed to sign the restrictive agreement in 1911. At the time this action was brought, four of the premises were occupied by Negroes, and had been so occupied for periods ranging from twenty-three to sixty-three years. A fifth parcel had been occupied by Negroes until a year before this suit was instituted.

On August 11, 1945, pursuant to a contract of sale, petitioners Shelley, who are Negroes, for valuable consideration received from one Fitzgerald a warranty deed to the parcel in question.[FN1] The trial court found that petitioners had no actual knowledge of the restrictive agreement at the time of the purchase.

FN1 The trial court found that title to the property which petitioners Shelley sought to purchase was held by one Bishop, a real estate dealer, who placed the property in the name of Josephine Fitzgerald. Bishop, who acted as agent for petitioners in the purchase, concealed the fact of his ownership.

6 On October 9, 1945, respondents, as owners of other property subject to the terms of the restrictive covenant, brought suit in Circuit Court of the city of St. Louis praying that petitioners Shelley be restrained from taking possession of the property and that judgment be entered divesting title out of petitioners Shelley and revesting title in the immediate grantor or in such other person as the court should direct. The trial court denied the requested relief on the ground that the restrictive agreement, upon which respondents based their action, had never become final and complete because it was the intention of the parties to that agreement that it was not to become effective until signed by all property owners in the district, and signatures of all the owners had never been obtained.

*839 The Supreme Court of Missouri sitting en banc reversed and directed the trial court to grant the relief for which respondents had prayed. That court held the agreement effective and concluded that enforcement of its provisions violated no rights guaranteed to petitioners by the Federal Constitution.[FN2] At the time the court rendered its decision, petitioners were occupying the property in question.

FN2 Kraemer v. Shelley, 1946, 355 Mo. 814, 198 S.W.2d 679.

The second of the cases under consideration comes to this Court from the Supreme Court of Michigan. The circumstances presented do not differ materially from the Missouri case. In June, 1934, one Ferguson and his wife, who then owned the property located in the city of Detroit which is involved in this case, executed a contract providing in part:

'This property shall not be used or occupied by any person or persons except those of the Caucasian race.

*7 'It is further agreed that this restriction shall not be effective unless at least eighty percent of the property fronting on both sides of the street in the block where our land is located is subjected to this or a similar restriction.'

The agreement provided that the restrictions were to remain in effect until January 1, 1960. The contract was subsequently recorded; and similar agreements were executed with respect to eighty percent of the lots in the block in which the property in question is situated.

By deed dated November 30, 1944, petitioners, who were found by the trial court to be Negroes, acquired title to the property and thereupon entered into its occupancy. On January 30, 1945, respondents, as owners of property subject to the terms of the restrictive agreement, brought suit against petitioners in the Circuit Court of Wayne County. After a hearing, the court entered a decree directing petitioners to move from the property within ninety days. Petitioners were further enjoined and restrained from using or occupying the premises in the future. On appeal, the Supreme Court of Michigan affirmed, deciding adversely to petitioners' contentions that they had been denied rights protected by the Fourteenth Amendment.[FN3]

Petitioners have placed primary reliance on their contentions, first raised in the state courts, that judicial enforcement of the restrictive agreements in these cases has violated rights guaranteed to petitioners by the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution and Acts of Congress passed pursuant to that Amendment.[FN4] Specifically,*8 petitioners urge that they have been denied the equal protection of the laws, deprived of property without due process of law, and have been denied privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States. We pass to a consideration of those issues.

FN4 The first section of the Fourteenth Amendment provides: 'All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.'

I.

[1] Whether the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment inhibits judicial enforcement by state courts of restrictive covenants based on race or color is a question which this Court has not heretofore been called upon to consider. Only two cases have been decided by this Court which in any way have involved the enforcement of such agreements. The first of these was the case of Corrigan v. Buckley, 1926, 271 U.S. 323, 46 S.Ct. 521, 70 L.Ed. 969. There, suit was brought in the courts of the District of Columbia to enjoin a threatened violation of certain restrictive covenants relating to lands situated in the city of Washington. Relief was granted, and the case was brought here 840 on appeal. It is apparent that that case, which had originated in the federal courts and involved the enforcement of covenants on land located in the District of Columbia, could present no issues under the Fourteenth Amendment; for that Amendment by its terms applies only to the States. Nor was the question of the validity of court enforcement of the restrictive covenants under the Fifth Amendment properly before the Court, as the opinion of this Court specifically recognizes.[FN5] The only constitutional issue which the appellants had raised in the lower courts, and hence the only constitutional issue *9 before this Court on appeal, was the validity of the covenant agreements as such. This Court concluded that since the inhibitions of the constitutional provisions invoked, apply only to governmental action, as contrasted to action of private individuals, there was no showing that the covenants, which were simply agreements between private property owners, were invalid. Accordingly, the appeal was dismissed for want of a substantial question. Nothing in the opinion of this Court, therefore, may properly be regarded as an adjudication on the merits of the constitutional issues presented by these cases, which raise the question of the validity, not of the private agreements as such, but of the judicial enforcement of those agreements.

FN5 Corrigan v. Buckley, 1926, 271 U.S. 323, 330, 331, 46 S.Ct. 521, 523, 524, 70 L.Ed. 969.

The second of the cases involving racial restrictive covenants was Hansberry v. Lee, 1940, 311 U.S. 32, 61 S.Ct. 115, 85 L.Ed. 22, 132 A.L.R. 741. In that case, petitioners, white property owners, were enjoined by the state courts from violating the terms of a restrictive agreement. The state Supreme Court had held petitioners bound by an earlier judicial determination, in litigation in which petitioners were not parties, upholding the validity of the restrictive agreement, although, in fact, the agreement had not been signed by the number of owners necessary to make it effective under state law. This Court reversed the judgment of the state Supreme Court upon the ground that petitioners had been denied due process of law in being held estopped to challenge the validity of the agreement on the theory, accepted by the state court, that the earlier litigation, in which petitioners did not participate, was in the nature of a class suit. In arriving at its result, this Court did not reach the issues presented by the cases now under consideration.

It is well, at the outset, to scrutinize the terms of the restrictive agreemens involved in these cases. In the Missouri case, the covenant declares that no part of the *10 affected property shall be (355 Mo. 814, 198 S.W.2d 681) 'occupied by any person not of the Caucasian race, it being intended hereby to restrict the use of said property * * * against the occupancy as owners or tenants of any portion of said property for resident or other purpose by people of the Negro or Mongolian Race.' Not only does the restricton seek to proscribe use and occupancy of the affected properties by members of the excluded class, but as construed by the Missouri courts, the agreement requires that title of any person who uses his property in violation of the restriction shall be divested. The restriction of the covenant in the Michigan case seeks to bar occupancy by persons of the excluded class. It provides that (316 Mich. 614, 25 N.W.2d 642) 'This property shall not be used or occupied by any person or persons except those of the Caucasian race.'

It should be observed that these covenants do not seek to proscribe any particular use of the affected properties. Use of the properties for residential occupancy, as such, is not forbidden. The restrictions of these agreements, rather, are directed toward a designated class of persons and seek to determine who may and who may not own or make use of the properties for residential purposes. The excluded class is defined wholly in terms of race or color.; 'simply that and nothing more.'[FN6]

*841 [2] It cannot be doubted that among the civil rights intended to be protected from discriminatory state action by the Fourteenth Amendment are the rights to acquire, enjoy, own and dispose of property. Equality in the enjoyment of property rights was regarded by the framers of that Amendment as an essential pre-condition to the realization of other basic civil rights and liberties which the Amendment was intended to guarantee.[FN7] Thus, 11 s 1978 of the Revised Statutes, derived from s 1 of the Civil Rights Act of 1866 which was enacted by Congress while the Fourteenth Amendment was also under consideration,[FN8] provides:

FN7. Slaughter-House Cases, 1873, 16 Wall. 36, 70, 81, 21 L.Ed. 394. See Flack, The Adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment.

FN8 In Oyama v. California, 1948, 332 U.S. 633, 640, 68 S.Ct. 269, 272, the section of the Civil Rights Act herein considered is described as the federal statute, 'enacted before the Fourteenth Amendment but vindicated by it.' The Civil Rights Act of 1866 was reenacted in s 18 of the Act of May 31, 1870, subsequent to the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment. 16 Stat. 144.

'All citizens of the United States shall have the same right, in every State and Territory, as is enjoyed by white citizens thereof to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real and personal property.'[FN9]

FN9 14 Stat. 27, 8 U.S.C. s 42, 8 U.S.C.A. s 42.

This Court has given specific recognition to the same principle. Buchanan v. Warley, 1917, 245 U.S. 60, 38 S.Ct. 16, 62 L.Ed. 149, L.R.A.1918C, 210, Ann.Cas.1918A, 1201.

It is likewise clear that restrictions on the right of occupancy of the sort sought to be created by the private agreements in these cases could not be squared with the requirements of the Fourteenth Amendment if imposed by state statute or local ordinance. We do not understand respondents to urge the contrary. In the case of Buchanan v. Warley, supa, a unanimous Court declared unconstitutional the provisions of a city ordinance which denied to colored persons the right to occupy houses in blocks in which the greater number of houses were occupied by white persons, and imposed similar restrictions on white persons with respect to blocks in which the greater number of houses were occupied by colored persons. During the course of the opinion in that case, this Court stated: 'The Fourteenth Amendment and these statutes enacted in furtherance of its purpose operate to qualify and entitle a colored man to acquire 12 property without state legislation discriminating against him solely because of color.'[FN10]

In Harmon v. Tyler, 1927, 273 U.S. 668, 47 S.Ct. 471, 71 L.Ed. 831, a unanimous court, on the authority of Buchanan v. Warley, supra, declared invalid an ordinance which forbade any Negro to establish a home on any property in a white community or any white person to establish a home in a Negro community, 'except on the written consent of a majority of the persons of the opposite race inhabiting such community or portion of the City to be affected.'

The precise question before this Court in both the Buchanan and Harmon cases, involved the rights of white sellers to dispose of their properties free from restrictions as to potential purchasers based on considerations of race or color. But that such legislation is also offensive to the rights of those desiring to acquire and occupy property and barred on grounds of race or color, is clear, not only from the language of the opinion in Buchanan v. Warley, supra, but from this Court's disposition of the case of City of Richmond v. Deans, 1930, 281 U.S. 704, 50 S.Ct. 407, 74 L.Ed. 1128. There, a Negro, barred from the occupancy of certain property by the terms of an ordinance similar to that in the Buchanan case, sought injunctive relief in the federal courts to enjoin the enforcement of the ordinance on the grounds that its provisions violated the terms of the Fourteenth Amendment. Such relief was granted, and this Court affirmed, finding the *842 citation of Buchanan v. Warley, supra, and Harmon v. Tyler, supra, sufficient to support its judgment. [FN11]

FN11 Courts of Georgia, Maryland, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Texas, and Virginia have also declared similar statutes invalid discussed, do not involve action by state Amendment. Glover v. Atlanta, 1918, 148 Ga. 285, 96 S.E. 562; Jackson v. State, 1918, 132 Md. 311, 103 A. 910; Clinard v. Winston-Salem, 1940, 217 N.C. 119, 6 S.E.2d 867, 126 A.L.R. 634; Allen v. Oklahoma City, 1936, 175 Okl. 421, 52 P.2d 1054; Liberty Annex Corp. v. Dallas, Tex.Civ.App. 1927, 289 S.W. 1067; Irvine v. Clifton Forge, 1918, 124 Va. 781, 97 S.E. 310.

But the present cases, unlike those just discussed, do not involve actionby state legislatures or city councils. 13 Here the particular patterns of discrimination and the areas in which the restrictions are to operate, are determined, in tne first instance, by the terms of agreements among private individuals. Participation of the State consists in the enforcement of the restrictions so defined. The crucial issue with which we are here confronted is whether this distinction removes these cases from the operation of the prohibitory provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment.

[3] Since the decision of this Court in the Civil Rights Cases, 1883, 109 U.S. 3, 3 S.Ct. 18, 27 L.Ed. 835, the principle has become firmly embedded in our constitutional law that the action inhibited by the first section of the Fourteenth Amendment is only such action as may fairly be said to be that of the States. That Amendment erects no shield against merely private conduct, however discriminatory or wrongful.[FN12]

[4] We conclude, therefore, that the restrictive agreements standing alone cannot be regarded as a violation of any rights guaranteed to petitioners by the Fourteenth Amendment. So long as the purposes of those agreements are effectuated by voluntary adherence to their terms, it would appear clear that there has been no action by the State and the provisions of the Amendment have not been violated. Cf. Corrigan v. Buckley, supra.

But here there was more. These are cases in which the purposes of the agreements were secured only by judicial enforcement by state courts of the restrictive 14 terms of the agreements. The respondents urge that jjdicial enforcement of private agreements does not amount to state action; or, in any event, the participation of the State is so attenuated in character as not to amount to state action within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment. Finally, it is suggested, even if the States in these cases may be deemed to have acted in the constitutional sense, their action did not deprive petitioners of rights guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment. We move to a consideration of these matters.

II.

[5] That the action of state courts and of judicial officers in their official capacities is to be regarded as action of the State within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment, is a proposition which has long been established by decisions of this Court. That principle was given expression in the earliest cases involving the construction of the terms of the Fourteenth Amendment. Thus, in Commonwealth of Virginia v. Rives, 1880, 100 U.S. 313, 318, 25 L.Ed.

© 2011 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

667, this Court stated: 'It is doubtless true that a State may act through different agencies,-either by its legislative, its executive, or its judicial authorities; and the prohibitions of the amendment extend to all action of the State denying equal protection of the laws, whether it be action by one of these agencies or by another.' In Ex parte Commonwealth of Virginia, 1880, 100 U.S. 339, 347, 25 L.Ed. 676, the Court observed: 'A State acts by its legislative, its executive, or its judicial authorities. It can act in no other way.' In the Civil Rights Cases, 1883, 109 U.S. 3, 11, 17, 3 S.Ct. 18, 21, 27 L.Ed. 835, this Court pointed out that the Amendment makes void 'state action of every kind' which is inconsistent with the guaranties therein contained, and extends to manifestations of 'state authority *843 in the shape of laws, customs, or judicial or executive proceedings.' Language to like effect is employed15 no less than eighteen times during the course of that opinion. [FN13]

FN13 Among the phrases appearing in the opinion are the following: 'the operation of state laws, and the action of state officers, executive or judicial'; 'state laws and state proceedings'; 'state law * * * or some state action through its officers or agents'; 'state laws and acts done under state authority'; 'state laws or state action of some kind'; 'such laws as the states may adopt or enforce'; 'such acts and proceedings as the states may commit or take'; 'state legislation or action'; 'state law or state authority.'

Similar expressions, giving specific recognition to the fact that judicial action is to be regarded as action on the State for the purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment, are to be found in numerous cases which have been more recently decided. In Twining v. New Jersey, 1908, 211 U.S. 78, 90, 91, 29 S.Ct. 14, 16, 53 L.Ed. 97, the Court said: 'The judicial act of the highest court of the state, in authoritatively construing and enforcing its laws, is the act of the state.' In Brinkerhoff-Faris Trust & Savings Co. v. Hill, 1930, 281 U.S. 673, 680, 50 S.Ct. 451, 454, 74 L.Ed. 1107, the Court, through Mr. Justice Brandeis, stated: 'The federal guaranty of due process extends to state action through its judicial as well as through its legislative, executive, or administrative branch of government.' Further examples of such declarations in the opinions of this Court are not lacking.[FN14]

FN14 Neal v. Delaware, 1881, 103 U.S. 370, 397, 26 L.Ed. 567; Scott v. McNeal, 1894, 154 U.S. 34, 45, 14 S.Ct. 1108, 1112, 38 L.Ed. 896; Chicago, B. & Q.R. Co. v. Los Angeles, 1913, 227 U.S. 278, 286, 287, 33 S.Ct. 312, 314, 57 L.Ed. 510; Prudential Ins. Co. v. Cheek, 1922, 259 U.S. 530, 548, 42 S.Ct. 516, 524, 66 L.Ed. 1044, 27 A.L.R. 27; American Ry. Exp. [6] One of the earliest applications of the prohibitions contained in the Fourteenth Amendment to action of state 16 judicial officials occurred in cases in which Negroes had been excluded from jury service in criminal prosecutions by reason of their race or color. These cases demonstrate, also, the early recognition by this Court that state action in violation of the Amendment's provisions is equally repugnant to the constitutional commands whether directed by state statute or taken by a judicial official in the absence of statute. Thus, in Strauder v. West Virginia, 1880, 100 U.S. 303, 25 L.Ed. 664, this Court declared invalid a state statute restricting jury service to white persons as amounting to a denial of the equal protection of the laws to the colored defendant in that case. In the notice and opportunity to defend, has, Ex parte Virginia, supra, held that a similar discrimination imposed by the action of a state judge denied rights protected by the Amendment, despite the fact that the language of the state statute relating to jury service contained no such restrictions.

without providing adequate notice and opportunity to defen, has, of course, long been regarded as a denial of the due process of law guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment. Brinkerhoff-Faris Trust & Savings Co. v. Hill, supra. Cf. Pennoyer v. Neff, 1878, 95 U.S. 714, 24 L.Ed. 565.[FN15]

FN15 And see Standard Oil Co. v. Missouri, 1912, 224 U.S. 270, 281, 282, 32 S.Ct. 406, 409, 56 L.Ed. 760, Ann.Cas.1913D, 936; Hansberry v. Lee, 1940, 311 U.S. 32, 61 S.Ct. 115, 85 L.Ed. 22, 132 A.L.R. 741.

In numerous cases, this Court has reversed criminal convictions in state courts for failure of those courts to provide the 844 essential ingredients of a fair hearing. Thus it has been held that convictions obtained in state courts under the domination of a mob are void. Moore v. Dempsey, 1923, 261 U.S. 86, 43 S.Ct. 265, 67 L.Ed. 543. And see Frank v. Mangum, 1915, 237 U.S. 309, 35 S.Ct. 582, 59 L.Ed. 969. Convictions obtained by *17 coerced confessions,[FN16] by the use of perjured testimony known by the prosecution to be such,[FN17] or without the effective assistance of counsel,[FN18] have also been held to be exertions of state authority in conflict with the fundamental rights protected by the Fourteenth Amendment.

[8] But the examples of state judicial action which have been held by this Court to violate the Amendment's commands are not restricted to situations in which the judicial proceedings were found in some manner to be procedurally unfair. It has been recognized that the action of state courts in enforcing a substantive common-law rule formulated by those courts, may result in the denial of rights guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment, even though the judicial proceedings in such cases may have been in complete accord with the most rigorous conceptions of procedural due process.[FN19] Thus, in American Federation of Labor v. Swing, 1941, 312 U.S. 321, 61 S.Ct. 568, 85 L.Ed. 855, enforcement by state courts of the common-law policy of the State, which resulted in the restraining of peaceful picketing, was held to be state action of the sort prohibited by the Amendment's guaranties of freedom of discussion.[FN20] In Cantwell v. Connecticut, 1940, 310 U.S. 296, 60 S.Ct. 900, 84 L.Ed. 1213, 128 A.L.R. 1352, *18 a conviction in a state court of the common-law crime of breach of the peace was, under the circumstances of the case, found to be a violation of the Amendment's commonds relating to freedom of religion. In Bridges v. California, 1941, 314 U.S. 252, 62 S.Ct. 190, 86 L.Ed. 192, 159 A.L.R. 1346, enforcement of the state's common-law rule relating to contempts by publication was held to be state action inconsistent with the prohibitions of the Fourteenth Amendment.[FN21] And cf. Chicago, B. & Q.R. Co. v. Chicago, 1897, 166 U.S. 226, 17 S.Ct. 581, 41 L.Ed. 979.

The short of the matter is that from the time of the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment until the present, it has been the consistent ruling of this Court that the action of the States to which the Amendment has reference, includes action of state courts and state judicial officials. Although, in construing the terms of the Fourteenth Amendment, differences have from time to time been expressed as to whether particular types of state action may be said to offend the Amendment's prohibitory provisions, it has never been suggested that state court action is immunized from the operation of those provisions simply because the act is that of the judicial branch of the state government.

III.

[9] Against this background of judicial construction, extending over a period of some three-quarters of a century, we are called upon to consider whether enforcement by state courts of the restrictive agreements*845 in these cases may be deemed to be the acts of those States; and, if so, whether that action has denied these petitioners the equal protection of the laws which the Amendment was intended to insure.

19 We have no doubt that there has been state action in these cases in the full and complete sense of the phrase. The undisputed facts disclose that petitioners were willing purchasers of properties upon which they desired to establish homes. The owners of the properties were willing sellers; and contracts of sale were accordingly consummated. It is clear that but for the active intervention of the state courts, supported by the full panoply of state power, petitioners would have been free to occupy the properties in question without restraint.

These are not cases, as has been suggested, in which the States have merely abstained from action, leaving private individuals free to impose such discriminations as they see fit. Rather, these are cases in which the States have made available to such individuals the full coercive power of government to deny to petitioners, on the grounds of race or color, the enjoyment of property rights in premises which petitioners are willing and financially able to acquire and which the grantors are willing to sell. The difference between judicial enforcement and nonenforcement of the restrictive covenants is the difference to petitioners between being denied rights of property available to other members of the community and being accorded full enjoyment of those rights on an equal footing.

[10][11][12] The enforcement of the restrictive agreements by the state courts courts in these cases was directed pursuant to the common-law policy of the States as formulated by those courts in earlier decisions. [FN22] In the Missouri case, enforcement of the covenant was directed in the first instance by the highest court of the State after the trial court had determined the agreement to be invalid for 20 want of the requisite number of signatures. In the Michigan case, the order of enforcement by the trial court was affirmed by the highest state court.[FN23] The judicial action in each case bears the clear and unmistakable imprimatur of the State. We have noted that previous decisions of this Court have established the proposition that judicial action is not immunized from the operation of the Fourteenth Amendment simply because it is taken pursuant to the state's common-law policy. [FN24] Nor is the Amendment ineffective simply because the particular pattern of discrimination, which the State has enforced, was defined initially by the terms of a private agreement. State action, as that phrase is understood for the purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment, refers to exertions of state power in all forms. And when the effect of that action is to deny rights subject to the protection of the Fourteenth Amendment, it is the obligation of this Court to enforce the constitutional commands.

[13] We hold that in granting judicial enforcement of the restrictive agreements in these cases, the States have denied petitioners the equal protection of the laws and that, therefore, the action of the state courts cannot stand. We have noted that freedom from discrimination by the States in the enjoyment of property rights was among the basic objectives sought to be effectuated by the framers of theFourteenth Amendment. That such discrimination has occurred in these cases is clear. Because of the race or color of these petitioners they have been denied rights of ownership or occupancy enjoyed as a matter of course by *846 other citizens of different race or 21 color.[FN25] The Fourteenth Amendment declares 'that all persons, whether colored or white, shall stand equal before the laws of the States, and, in regard to the colored race, for whose protection the amendment was primarily designed, that no discrimination shall be made against them by law because of their color.'[FN26] Strauder v. West Virginia, supra, 100 U.S. at 307, 25 L.Ed. 664. Only recently this Court has had occasion to declare that a state law which denied equal enjoyment of property rights to a designated class of citizens of specified race and ancestry, was not a legitimate exercise of the state's police power but violated the guaranty of the equal protection of the laws. Oyama v. California, 1948, 332 U.S. 633, 68 S.Ct. 269. Nor may the discriminations imposed by the state courts in these cases be justified as proper exertions of state police power.[FN27] Cf. Buchanan v. Warley, supra.

FN26 Restrictive agreements of the sort involved in these case have been used to exclude other than Negroes from the ownership or occupancy of real property. We are informed that such agreements have been directed against Indians, Jews, Chinese, Japanese, Mexicans, Hawaiians, Puerto Ricans, and Filipinos, among others.

[14][15][16] Respondents urge, however, that since the state courts stand ready to enforce restrictive covenants excluding white persons from the ownership or occupancy of property covered by such agreements, enforcement of covenants excluding colored persons may not be deemed a denial of equal protection of the laws to the colored persons who are thereby affected.[FN28] This contention does 22 not bear scrutiny. The parties have directed our attention to no case in which a court, state or federal, has been called upon to enforce a covenant excluding members of the white majority from ownership or occupancy of real property on grounds of race or color. But there are more fundamental considerations. The rights ceated by the first section of the Fourteenth Amendment are, by its terms, guaranteed to the individual. The rights established are personal rights.[FN29] It is, therefore, no answer to these petitioners to say that the courts may also be induced to deny white persons rights of ownership and occupancy on grounds of race or color. Equal protection of the laws is not achieved through indiscriminate imposition of inequalities.

FN28 It should be observed that the restrictions relating to residential occupancy contained in ordinances involved in the Buchanan, Harmon and Deans cases, cited supra, and declared by this Court to be inconsistent with the requirements of the Fourteenth Amendment, applied equally to white persons and Negroes.

FN29 McCabe v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe R. Co., 1914, 235 U.S. 151, 161-162, 35 S.Ct. 69, 71, 59 L.Ed. 169; Missouri ex rel. Gaines v. Canada, 1938, 305 U.S. 337, 59 S.Ct. 232, 83 L.Ed. 208; Oyama v. California, 1948, 332 U.S. 633, 68 S.Ct. 269.

[17][18] Nor do we find merit in the suggestion that property owners who are parties to these agreements are denied equal protection of the laws if denied access to the courts to enforce the terms of restrictive covenants and to assert property rights which the state courts have held to be created by such agreements. The Constitution confers upon no individual the right to demand action by the State which results in the denial of equal protection of the laws to other individuals. And it would appear beyond question that the power of the State to create and enforce property interests must be exercised within the boundaries defined by the Fourteenth Amendment. Cf. Marsh v. Alabama, 1946, 326 U.S. 501, 66 S.Ct. 276, 90 L.Ed. 265.

[19] The problem of defining the scope of the restrictions which the Federal Constitution847 imposes upon exertions of power by the States has given rise to many of the most persistent and fundamental issues which this Court has been called upon to consider. That problem was foremost in the minds of the framers of the Constitution, *23 and since that early day, has arisen in a multitude of forms. The task of determining whether the action of a State offends constitutional provisions is one which may not be undertaken lightly. Where, however, it is clear that the action of the State violates the terms of the fundamental charter, it is the obligation of this Court so to declare.

[20] The historical context in which the Fourteenth Amendment became a part of the Constitution should not be forgotten. Whatever else the framers sought to achieve, it is clear that the matter of primary concern was the establishment of equality in the enjoyment of basic civil and political rights and the preservation of those rights from discriminatory action on the part of the States based on considerations of race or color. Seventy-five years ago this Court announced that the provisions of the Amendment are to be construed with this fundamental purpose in mind.[FN30] Upon full consideration, we have concluded that in these cases the States have acted to deny petitioners the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment. Having so decided, we find it unnecessary to consider whether petitioners have also been deprived of property without due process of law or denied privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States.

For the reasons stated, the judgment of the Supreme Court of Missuri and the judgment of the Supreme Court of Michigan must be reversed.

Resolution of state board of education requiring children, as prerequisite to continued attendance at public school, to salute American flag and give pledge, is invalid as applied to children of Jehovah Witnesses since it denies "freedom of speech" and "freedom of worship" in that it transcends constitutional limitations on board's power and invades sphere of intellect and spirit which it is the purpose of the Constitution to reserve from official control. Code Supp.W.Va.1941, § 1734; U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1, 14.

*1179 *625 On Appeal from the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of West Virginia.Mr. W. Holt Wooddell, of Webster Springs, W. Va., for appellants.

Mr. Hayden C. Covington, of Brooklyn, N.Y., for appellees.

Mr. Justice JACKSON delivered the opinion of the Court.

Following the decision by this Court on June 3, 1940, in Minersville School District v. Gobitis, 310 U.S. 586, 60 S.Ct. 1010, 84 L.Ed. 1375, 127 A.L.R. 1493, the West Virginia legislature amended its statutes to require all schools therein to conduct courses of instruction in history, civics, and in the Constitutions of the United States and of the State 'for the purpose of teaching, fostering and perpetuating the ideals, principles and spirit of Americanism, and increasing the knowledge of the organization and machinery of the government.' Appellant626 Board of Education was directed, with advice of the State Superintendent of Schools, to 'prescribe the courses of study covering these subjects' for public schools. The Act made it the duty of private, parochial and denominational schools to prescribe courses of study 'similar to those required for the public schools.'[FN1]

FN1 s 1734, West Virginia Code (1941 Supp.):

'In all public, private, parochial and denominational schools located within this state there shall be given regular courses of instruction in history of the United States, in civics, and in the constitutions of the United States and of the state of West Virginia, for the purpose of teaching, fostering and perpetuating the ideals, principles and spirit of Americanism, and increasing the knowledge of the organization and machinery of the government of the United States and of the state of West Virginia. The state board of education shall, with the advice of the state superintendent of schools, prescribe the courses of study covering these subjects for the public elementary and grammar schools, public high schools and state normal schools. It shall be the duty of the officials or boards having authority over the respective private, parochial and denominational schools to prescribe courses of study for the schools under their control and supervision similar to those required for the public schools.'

The Board of Education on January 9, 1942, adopted a resolution containing recitals taken largely from the Court's Gobitis opinion and ordering that the salute to the flag become 'a regular part of the program of activities in the public schools,' that all teachers and pupils 'shall be required to participate in the salute honoring the Nation represented by the Flag; provided, however, that refusal to salute the Flag be regarded as an Act of insubordination, and shall be dealt with accordingly.'[FN2]

FN2 The text is as follows:

'WHEREAS, The West Virginia State Board of Education holds in highest regard those rights and privileges guaranteed by the Bill of Rights in the Constitution of the United States of America and in the Constitution of West Virginia, specifically, the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States as restated in the fourteenth amendment to the same document and in the guarantee of religious freedom in Article III of the Constitution of this States, and

'WHEREAS, The West Virginia State Board of Education honors the broad principle that one's convictions about the ultimate mystery of the universe and man's relation to it is placed beyond the reach of law; that the propagation of belief is protected whether in church or chapel, mosque or synagogue, tabernacle or meeting house; that the Constitutions of the United States and of the State of West Virginia assure generous immunity to the individual from imposition of penalty for offending, in the course of his own religious activities, the religious views of others, be they a minority or those who are dominant in the government, but

'WHEREAS, The West Virginia State Board of Education recognizes that the manifold character of man's relations may bring his conception of religious duty into conflict with the secular interests of his fellowman; that conscientious scruples have not in the course of the long struggle for religious toleration relieved the individual from obedience to the general law not aimed at the promotion or restriction of the religious beliefs; that the mere possession of convictions which contradict the relevant concerns of political society does not relieve the citizen from the discharge of political responsibility, and

'WHEREAS, The West Virginia State Board of Education holds that national unity is the basis of national security; that the flag of our Nation is the symbol of our National Unity transcending all internal differences, however large within the framework of the Constitution; that the Flag is the symbol of the Nation's power; that emblem of freedom in its truest, best sense; that it signifies government resting on the consent of the governed, liberty regulated by law, protection of the weak against the strong, security against the exercise of arbitrary power, and absolute safety for free institutions against foreign aggression, and

'WHEREAS, The West Virginia State Board of Education maintains that the public schools, established by the legislature of the State of West Virginia under the authority of the Constitution of the State of West Virginia and supported by taxes imposed by legally constituted measures, are dealing with the formative period in the development in citizenship that the Flag is an allowable portion of the program of schools thus publicly supported.

'Therefore, be it RESOLVED, That the West Virginia Board of Education does hereby recognize and order that the commonly accepted salute to the Flag of the United States-the right hand is placed upon the breast and the following pledge repeated in unison: 'I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands; one Nation, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all'-now becomes a regular part of the program of activities in the public schools, supported in whole or in part by public funds, and that all teachers as defined by law in West Virginia and pupils in such schools shall be required to participate in the salute honoring the Nation represented by the Flag; provided, however, that refusal to salute the Flag be regarded as an act of insubordination, and shall be dealt with accordingly.'

627 The resolution originally required the *1180 'commonly accepted salute to the Flag' which it defined. Objections to the salute as 'being too much like Hitler's' were raised by the Parent and Teachers Association, the Boy and Girl 628 Scouts, the Red Cross, and the Federation of Women's Clubs. [FN3] Some modification appears to have been made in deference to these objections, but no concession was made to Jehovah's Witnesses.[FN4] What is now required is the 'stiff-arm' salute, the saluter to keep the right hand raised with palm turned up *1181 while the following is repeated: 'I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of 629 America and to the Republic for which it stands; one Nation, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.'

FN3 The National Headquarters of the United States Flag Association takes the position that the extension of the right arm in this salute to the flag is not the Nazi-Fascist salute, 'although quite similar to it. In the Pledge to the Flag the right arm is extended and raised, palm Upward, whereas the Nazis extend the arm practically straight to the front (the finger tips being about even with the eyes), palm Downward, and the Fascists do the same except they raise the arm slightly higher.' James A. Moss, The Flag of the United States: Its History and Symbolism (1914) 108.

FN4 They have offered in lieu of participating in the flag salute ceremony 'periodically and publicly' to give the following pledge:

'I have pledged my unqualified allegiance and devotion to Jehovah, the Almighty God, and to His Kingdom, for which Jesus commands all Christians to pray.

'I respect the flag of the United States and acknowledge it as a symbol of freedom and justice to all.

'I pledge allegiance and obedience to all the laws of the United States that are consistent with God's law, as set forth in the Bible.'

Failure to conform is 'insubordination' dealt with by expulsion. Readmission is denied by statute until compliance. Meanwhile the expelled child is 'unlawfully absent'[FN5] and may be proceeded against as a delinquent. [FN6] His parents or guardians are liable to prosecution,[FN7] and if convicted are subject to fine not exceeding $50 and jail term not exceeding thirty days.[FN8]

FN5 s 1851(1), West Virginia Code (1941 Supp.):

'If a child be dismissed, suspended, or expelled from school because of refusal of such child to meet the legal and lawful requirements of the school and the established regulations of the county and/or state board of education, further admission of the child to school shall be refused until such requirements and regulations be complied with. Any such child shall be treated as being unlawfully absent from the school during the time he refuses to comply with such requirements and regulations, and any person having legal or actual control of such child shall be liable to prosecution under the provisions of this article for the absence of such child from school.'

FN6 s 4904(4), West Virginia Code (1941 Supp.).

FN7 See Note 5, supra.

FN8 ss 1847, 1851, West Virginia Code (1941 Supp.).

Appellees, citizens of the United States and of West Virginia, brought suit in the United States District Court for themselves and others similarly situated asking its injunction to restrain enforcement of these laws and regulations against Jehovah's Witnesses. The Witnesses are an unincorporated body teaching that the obligation imposed by law of God is superiod to that of laws enacted by temporal government. Their religious beliefs include a literal version of Exodus, Chapter 20, verses 4 and 5, which says: 'Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of anything that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth; thou shalt not bow down thyself to them nor serve them.' They consider that the flag is an 'image' within this command. For this reason they refuse to salute it.

630 Children of this faith have been expelled from school and are threatened with exclusion for no other cause. Officials threaten to send them to reformatories maintained for criminally inclined juveniles. Parents of such children have been prosecuted and are threatened with prosecutions for causing delinquency.

The Board of Education moved to dismiss the complaint setting forth these facts and alleging that the law and regulations are an unconstitutional denial of religious freedom, and of freedom of speech, and are invalid under the 'due process' and 'equal protection' clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution. The cause was submitted on the pleadings to a District Court of three judges. It restrained enforcement as to the plaintiffs and those of that class. The Board of Education brought the case here by direct appeal.[FN9]

FN9 s 266 of the Judicial Code, 28 U.S.C. s 380, 28 U.S.C.A. s 380.

This case calls upon us to reconsider a precedent decision, as the Court throughout its history often has been required to do.[FN10] Before turning to the Gobitis case, however, it is desirable to notice certain characteristics by which this controversy is distinguished.

FN10 See authorities cited in Helvering v. Griffiths, 318 U.S. 371, 63 S.Ct. 636, at page 652, 87 L.Ed. 843, note 52, decided March 1, 1943.

The freedom asserted by these appellees does not bring them into collision with rights asserted by any other individual. It is such conflicts which most frequently require intervention of the State to determine where the rights of one end and those of another begin. But the refusal of these persons to participate in the ceremony does not interfere with or deny rights of others to do so. Nor is there any question in this case that their behavior is peaceable and orderly. The sole conflict is between authority and rights of the individual. The State asserts power to condition access to public education on making a prescribed sign and profession and at the same time to coerce 631 attendance by punishing both parent and child. The latter stand on a right *1182 of self-determination in matters that touch individual opinion and personal attitude.

[1] As the present Chief Justice said in dissent in the Gobitis case, the State may 'require teaching by instruction and study of all in our history and in the structure and organization of our government, including the guaranties of civil liberty which tend to inspire patriotism and love of country.' 310 U.S. at page 604, 60 S.Ct. at page 1017, 84 L.Ed. 1375, 127 A.L.R. 1493. Here, however, we are dealing with a compulsion of students to declare a belief. They are not merely made acquainted with the flag salute so that they may be informed as to what it is or even what it means. The issue here is whether this slow and easily neglected[FN11] route to aroused loyalties constitutionally may be short-cut by substituting a compulsory salute and slogan.[FN12] This issue is not prejudiced by 632 the Court's previous holding that where a State, without compelling attendance, extends college facilities to pupils who voluntarily enroll, it may prescribe military training as part of the course without offense to the Constitution. It was held that those who take advantage of its opportunities may not on ground of conscience refuse compliance with such conditions. Hamilton v. Regents, 293 U.S. 245, 55 S.Ct. 197, 79 L.Ed. 343. In the present case attendance is not optional. That case is also to be distinguished from the present one because, independently of college privileges or requirements, the State has power to raise militia and impose the duties of service therein upon its citizens.

FN11 See the nation-wide survey of the study of American history conducted by the New York Times, the results of which are published in the issue of June 21, 1942, and are there summarized on p. 1, col. 1, as follows:

'82 per cent of the institutions of higher learning in the United States do not require the study of United States history for the undergraduate degree. Eighteen per cent of the colleges and universities require such history courses before a degree is awarded. It was found that many students complete their four years in college without taking any history courses dealing with this country.

'Seventy-two per cent of the colleges and universities do not require United States history for admission, while 28 per cent require it. As a result, the survey revealed, many students go through high school, college and then to the professional or graduate institution without having explored courses in the history of their country.

'Less than 10 per cent of the total undergraduate body was enrolled in United States history classes during the Spring semester just ended. Only 8 per cent of the freshman class took courses in United States history, although 30 per cent was enrolled in European or world history courses.'

FN12 The Resolution of the Board of Education did not adopt the flag salute because it was claimed to have educational value. It seems to have been concerned with promotion of national unity (see footnote 2), which justification is considered later in this opinion. No information as to its educational aspect is called to our attention except Olander, Children's Knowledge of the Flag Salute, 35 Journal of Educational Research, 300, 305, which sets forth a study of the ability of a large and representative number of children to remember and state the meaning of the flag salute which they recited each day in school. His conclusion was that it revealed 'a rather pathetic picture of our attempts to teach children not only the words but the meaning of our Flag Salute'.

There is no doubt that, in connection with the pledges, the flag salute is a form of utterance. Symbolism is a primitive but effective way of communicating ideas. The use of an emblem or flag to symbolize some system, idea, institution, or personality, is a short cut from mind to mind. Causes and nations, political parties, lodges and ecclesiastical groups seek to knit the loyalty of their followings to a flag or banner, a color or design. The State announces rank, function, and authority through crowns and maces, uniforms and black robes; the church speaks through the Cross, the Crucifix, the altar and shrine, and clerical reiment. Symbols of State often convey political ideas just as religious symbols come to convey theological ones. Associated with many of these symbols are appropriate gestures of acceptance or respect: a salute, a bowed or bared head, a bended knee. A person gets from a 633 symbol the meaning he puts into it, and *1183 what is one man's comfort and inspiration is another's jest and scorn.

Over a decade ago Chief Justice Hughes led this Court in holding that the display of a red flag as a symbol of opposition by peaceful and legal means to organized government was protected by the free speech guaranties of the Constitution. Stromberg v. California, 283 U.S. 359, 51 S.Ct. 532, 75 L.Ed. 1117, 73 A.L.R. 1484. Here it is the State that employs a flag as a symbol of adherence to government as presently organized. It requires the individual to communicate by word and sign his acceptance of the political ideas it thus bespeaks. Objection to this form of communication when coerced is an old one, well known to the framers of the Bill of Rights.[FN13]

FN13 Early Christians were frequently persecuted for their refusal to participate in ceremonies before the statue of the emperor or other symbol of imperial authority. The story of William Tell's sentence to shoot an apple off his son's head for refusal to salute a bailiff's hat is an ancient one. 21 Encyclopedia Britannica, 14th Ed., 911, 912. The Quakers, William Penn included, suffered punishment rather than uncover their heads in deference to any civil authority. Braithwaite, The Beginnings of Quakerism (1912) 200, 229-230, 232, 233, 447, 451; Fox, Quakers Courageous (1941) 113.

It is also to be noted that the compulsory flag salute and pledge requires affirmation of a belief and an attitude of mind. It is not clear whether the regulation contemplates that pupils forego any contrary convictions of their own and become unwilling converts to the prescribed ceremony or whether it will be acceptable if they simulate assent by words without belief and by a gesture barren of meaning. It is now a commonplace that censorship or suppression of expression of opinion is tolerated by our Constitution only when the expression presents a clear and present danger of action of a kind the State is empowered to prevent and punish. It would seem that involuntary affirmation could be commanded only on even more immediate and urgent grounds than silence. But here the power of compulsion634 is invoked without any allegation that remaining passive during a flag salute ritual creates a clear and present danger that would justify an effort even to muffle expression. To sustain the compulsory flag salute we are required to say that a Bill of Rights which guards the individual's right to speak his own mind, left it open to public authorities to compel him to utter what is not in his mind.

Whether the First Amendment to the Constitution will permit officials to order observance of ritual of this nature does not depend upon whether as a voluntary exercise we would think it to be good, bad or merely innocuous. Any credo of nationalism is likely to include what some disapprove or to omit what others think essential, and to give off different overtones as it takes on different accents or interpretations.[FN14] If official power exists to coerce acceptance of any patriotic creed, what it shall contain cannot be decided by courts, but must be largely discretionary with the ordaining authority, whose power to prescribe would no doubt include power to amend. Hence validity of the asserted power to force an American citizen publicly to profess any statement of belief or to engage in any ceremony of assent to one presents questions of power that must be considered independently of any idea we may have as to the utility of the ceremony in question.

> FN14 For example: Use of 'Republic,' if rendered to distinguish our government from a 'democracy,' or the words 'one Nation,' if intended to distinguish it from a 'federation,' open up old and bitter controversies in our political history; 'liberty and justice for all,' if it must be accepted as descriptive of the present order rather than an ideal, might to some seem an overstatement.

Nor does the issue as we see it turn on one's possession of particular religious views or the sincerity with which they are held. While religion supplies appellees' motive for enduring the discomforts of making the issue in this case, many citizens who do not share these religious views 635 hold such a compulsory rite to infringe constitutional liberty of the individual. [FN15] It is not necessary to inquire whether non-conformist beliefs will exempt*1184 from the duty to salute unless we first find power to make the salute a legal duty.

> FN15 Cushman, Constitutional Law in 1939-40, 35 American Political Science Review 250, 271, observes: 'All of the eloquence by which the majority extol the ceremony of flag saluting as a free expression of patriotism turns sour when used to describe the brutal compulsion which requires a sensitive and conscientious child to stultify himself in public.' For further criticism of the opinion in the Gobitis case by persons who do not share the faith of the Witnesses see: Powell, Conscience and the Constitution, in Democracy and National Unity (University of Chicago Press, 1941) 1; Wilkinson, Some Aspects of the Constitutional Guarantees of Civil Liberty, 11 Fordham Law Review 50; Fennell, The 'Reconstructed Court' and Religious Freedom: The Gobitis Case in Retrospect, 19 New York University Law Quarterly Review 31; Green, Liberty under the Fourteenth Amendment, 27 Washington University Law Quarterly 497; 9 International Juridical Association Bulletin 1; 39 Michigan Law Review 149; 15 St. John's Law Review 95.

The Gobitis decision, however, assumed, as did the argument in that case and in this, that power exists in the State to impose the flag salute discipline upon school children in general. The Court only examined and rejected a claim based on religious beliefs of immunity from an unquestioned general rule.[FN16] The question which underlies the 636 flag salute controversy is whether such a ceremony so touching matters of opinion and political attitude may be imposed upon the individual by official authority under powers committed to any political organization under our Constitution. We examine rather than assume existence of this power and, against this broader definition of issues in this case, re-examine specific grounds assigned for the Gobitis decision.

> FN16 The opinion says 'The the flagsalute is an allowable portion of a school program for those who do not invoke conscientious scruples is surely not debatable. But for us to insist that, though the ceremony may be required, exceptional immunity must be given to dissidents, is to maintain that there is no basis for a legislative judgment that such an exemption might introduce elements of difficulty into the school discipline, might cast doubts in the minds of the other children which would themselves weaken the effect of the exercise.' (Italics ours.) 310 U.S. at pages 599, 600, 60 S.Ct. at page 1015, 84 L.Ed. 1375, 127 A.L.R. 1493. And elsewhere the question under consideration was stated, 'When does the constitutional guarantee compel exemption from doing what society thinks necessary for the promotion of some great common end, or from a penalty for conduct which appears dangerous to the general good?' (Italics ours.) Id., 310 U.S. at page 593, 60 S.Ct. at page 1012, 84 L.Ed. 1375, 127 A.L.R. 1493. And again, '* * * whether school children, like the Gobitis children, must be excused from conduct required of all the other children in

1. It was said that the flag-salute controversy confronted the Court with 'the problem which Lincoln cast in memorable dilemma: 'Must a government of necessity be too strong for the liberties of its people, or too weak to maintain its own existence?" and that the answer must be in favor of strength. Minersville School District v. Gobitis, supra, 310 U.S. at page 596, 60 S.Ct. at page 1013, 84 L.Ed. 1375, 127 A.L.R. 1493.

We think these issues may be examined free of pressure or restraint growing out of such considerations.

It may be doubted whether Mr. Lincoln would have thought that the strength of government to maintain itself would be impressively vindicated by our confirming power of the state to expel a handful of children from school. Such oversimplification, so handy in political debate, often lacks the precision necessary to postulates of judicial reasoning. If validly applied to this problem, the utterance cited would resolve every issue of power in favor of those in authority and would require us to override every liberty thought to weaken or delay execution of their policies.

Government of limited power need not be anemic government. Assurance that rights are secure tends to diminish fear and jealousy of strong government, and by 1185 making us feel safe to live under it makes for its better support. Without promise of a limiting Bill of Rights it is *637 doubtful if our Constitution could have mustered enough strength to enable its ratification. To enforce those rights today is not to choose weak government over strong government. It is only to adhere as a means of strength to individual freedom of mind in preference to officially disciplined uniformity for which history indicates a disappointing and disastrous end.

The subject now before us exemplifies this principle. Free public education, if faithful to the ideal of secular instruction and political neutrality, will not be partisan or enemy of any class, creed, party, or faction. If it is to impose any ideological discipline, however, each party or denomination must seek to control, or failing that, to weaken the influence of the educational system. Observance of the limitations of the Constitution will not weaken government in the field appropriate for its exercise.

2. It was also considered in the Gobitis case that functions of educational officers in states, counties and school districts were such that to interfere with their authority 'would in effect make us the school board for the country.' Id., 310 U.S. at page 598, 60 S.Ct. at page 1015, 84 L.Ed. 1375, 127 A.L.R. 1493.

[2] The Fourteenth Amendment, as now applied to the States, protects the citizen against the State itself and all of its creatures-Boards of Education not excepted. These have, of course, important, delicate, and highly discretionary functions, but none that they may not perform within the limits of the Bill of Rights. That they are educating the young for citizenship is reason for scrupulous protection of Constitutional freedoms of the individual, if we are not to strangle the free mind at its source and teach youth to discount important principles of our government as mere platitudes.

Such Boards are numerous and their territorial jurisdiction often small. But small and local authority may feel less sense of responsibility to the Constitution, and agencies of publicity may be less vigilent in calling it to account.*638 The action of Congress in making flag observance voluntary [FN17] and respecting the conscience of the objector in a matter so vital as raising the Army[FN18] contrasts sharply with these local regulations in matters relatively trivial to the welfare of the nation. There are village tyrants as well as village Hampdens, but none who acts under color of law is beyond reach of the Constitution.

3. The Gobitis opinion reasoned that this is a field 'where courts possess no marked and certainly no controlling competence,' that it is committed to the legislatures as well as the courts to guard cherished liberties and that it is constitutionally appropriate to 'fight out the wise use of legislative authority in the forum of public opinion and before legislative assemblies rather than to transfer such a contest to the judicial arena,' since all the 'effective means of inducing political changes are left free.' Id., 310 U.S. at page 597, 598, 600, 60 S.Ct. at pages 1014, 1016, 84 L.Ed. 1375, 127 A.L.R. 1493.

[3][4] The very purpose of a Bill of Rights was to withdraw certain subjects from the vicissitudes of political controversy, to place them beyond the reach of majorities and officials and to establish them as legal principles to be applied by the courts. One's right to life, liberty, and property, to free speech, a free press, freedom of worship and assembly, and other fundamental rights may not be submitted 1186 to vote; they depend on the outcome of no elections.

*639 [5][6] In weighing arguments of the parties it is important to distinguish between the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment as an instrument for transmitting the principles of the First Amendment and those cases in which it is applied for its own sake. The test of legislation which collides with the Fourteenth Amendment, because it also collides with the principles of the First, is much more definite than the test when only the Fourteenth is involved. Much of the vagueness of the due process clause disappears when the specific prohibitions of the First become its standard. The right of a State to regulate, for example, a public utility may well include, so far as the due process test is concerned, power to impose all of the restrictions which a legislature may have a 'rational basis' for adopting. But freedoms of speech and of press, of assembly, and of worship may not be infringed on such slender grounds. They are susceptible of restriction only to prevent grave and immediate danger to interests which the state may lawfully protect. It is important to note that while it is the Fourteenth Amendment which bears directly upon the State it is the more specific limiting principles of the First Amendment that finally govern this case.

[7] Nor does our duty to apply the Bill of Rights to assertions of official authority depend upon our possession of marked competence in the field where the invasion of rights occurs. True, the task of translating the majestic generalities of the Bill of Rights, conceived as part of the pattern of liberal government in the eighteenth century, into concrete restraints on officials dealing with the problems of the twentieth century, is one to disturb self-confidence. These principles grew in soil which also produced a philosophy that the individual was the center of society, that his liberty was attainable through mere absence of governmental restraints, and that government should be entrusted with few controls and only the mildest supervision*640 over men's affairs. We must transplant these rights to a soil in which the laissez-faire concept or principle of non-interference has withered at least as to economic affairs, and social advancements are increasingly sought through closer integration of society and through expanded and strengthened governmental controls. These changed conditions often deprive precedents of reliability and cast us more than we would choose upon our own judgment. But we act in these matters not by authority of our competence but by force of our commissions. We cannot, because of modest estimates of our competence in such specialties as public education, withhold the judgment that history authenticates as the function of this Court when liberty is infringed.

4. Lastly, and this is the very heart of the Gobitis opinion, it reasons that 'National unity is the basis of national security,' that the authorities have 'the right to select appropriate means for its attainment,' and hence reaches the conclusion that such compulsory measures toward 'national unity' are constitutional. Id., 310 U.S. at page 595, 60 S.Ct. at page 1013, 84 L.Ed. 1375, 127 A.L.R. 1493. Upon the verity of this assumption depends our answer in this case.

National unity as an end which officials may foster by persuasion and example is not in question. The problem is whether under our Constitution compulsion as here employed is a permissible means for its achievement.

Struggles to coerce uniformity of sentiment in support of some end thought essential to their time and country have been waged by many good as well as by evil men. Nationalism is a relatively recent phenomenon but at other times and places the ends have been racial or territorial security, support of a dynasty or regime, and particular plans for saving souls. As first and moderate methods to attain unity have failed, those bent on its accomplishment must resort to an ever-increasing severity. 641 As governmental pressure toward unity becomes greater, so strife becomes more bitter as to whose unity it shall be. Probably no deeper division of our people could proceed from any provocation than from finding it necessary to choose what doctrine and whose program public educational officials shall compel youth to unite in embracing. Ultimate futility of such attempts to compel coherence is the lesson *1187 of every such effort from the Roman drive to stamp out Christianity as a disturber of its pagan unity, the Inquisition, as a means to religious and dynastic unity, the Siberian exiles as a means to Russian unity, down to the fast failing efforts of our present totalitarian enemies. Those who begin coercive elimination of dissent soon find themselves exterminating dissenters. Compulsory unification of opinion achieves only the unanimity of the graveyard.

[8] It seems trite but necessary to say that the First Amendment to our Constitution was designed to avoid these ends by avoiding these beginnings. There is no mysticism in the American concept of the State or of the nature or origin of its authority. We set up government by consent of the governed, and the Bill of Rights denies those in power any legal opportunity to coerce that consent. Authority here is to be controlled by public opinion, not public opinion by authority.

[9] The case is made difficult not b ecause the principles of its decision are obscure but because the flag involved is our own. Nevertheless, we apply the limitations of the Constitution with no fear that freedom to be intellectually and spiritually diverse or even contrary will disintegrate the social organization. To believe that patriotism will not flourish if patriotic ceremonies are voluntary and spontaneous instead of a compulsory routine is to make an unflattering estimate of the appeal of our institutions to free minds. We can have intellectual individualism 642 and the rich cultural diversities that we owe to exceptional minds only at the price of occasional eccentricity and abnormal attitudes. When they are so harmless to others or to the State as those we deal with here, the price is not too great. But freedom to differ is not limited to things that do not matter much. That would be a mere shadow of freedom. The test of its substance is the right to differ as to things that touch the heart of the existing order.

[10] If there is any fixed star in our constitutional constellation, it is that no official, high or petty, can prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nationalism, religion, or other matters of opinion or force citizens to confess by word or act their faith therein. If there are any circumstances which permit an exception, they do not now occur to us.[FN19]

> FN19 The Nation may raise armies and compel citizens to give military service. Selective Draft Law Cases (Arver v. United States), 245 U.S. 366, 38 S.Ct. 159, 62 L.Ed. 349, L.R.A.1918C, 361, Ann.Cas.1918B, 856. It follows, of course, that those subject to military discipline are under many duties and may not claim many freedoms that we hold inviolable as to those in civilian life.

[11] We think the action of the local authorities in compelling the flag salute and pledge transcends constitutional limitations on their power and invades the sphere of intellect and spirit which it is the purpose of the First Amendment to our Constitution to reserve from all official control.

The decision of this Court in Minersville School District v. Gobitis and the holdings of those few per curiam decisions which preceded and foreshadowed it are overruled, and the judgment enjoining enforcement of the West Virginia Regulation is affirmed.

Affirmed.

Mr. Justice ROBERTS and Mr. Justice REED adhere to the views expressed by the Court in 643Minersville School District v. Gobitis, 310 U.S. 586, 60 S.Ct. 1010, 84 L.Ed. 1375, 127 A.L.R. 1493, and are of the opinion that the judgment below should be reversed.

Mr. Justice BLACK and Mr. Justice DOUGLAS, concurring.

We are substantially in agreement with the opinion just read, but since we originally joined with the Court in the Gobitis case, it is appropriate that we make a brief statement of reasons for our change of view.

Reluctance to make the Federal Constitution a rigid bar against state regulation of conduct thought inimical to the public welfare was the controlling influence which moved us to consent to the Gobitis decision. Long reflection convinced us that although the principle is sound, its application1188 in the particular case was wrong. Jones v. Opelika, 316 U.S. 584, 623, 62 S.Ct. 1231, 1251, 86 L.Ed. 1691, 141 A.L.R. 514. We believe that the statute before us fails to accord full scope to the freedom of religion secured to the appellees by the First and Fourteenth Amendments.

The statute requires the appellees to participate in a ceremony aimed at inculcating respect for the flag and for this country. The Jehovah's Witnesses, without any desire to show disrespect for either the flag or the country, interpret the Bible as commanding, at the risk of God's displeasure, that they not go through the form of a pledge of allegiance to any flag. The devoutness of their belief is evidenced by their willingness to suffer persecution and punishment, rather than make the pledge.

No well-ordered society can leave to the individuals an absolute right to make final decisions, unassailable by the State, as to everything they will or will not do. The First Amendment does not go so far. Religious faiths, honestly held, do not free individuals from responsibility to conduct themselves obediently to laws which are either imperatively necessary to protect society as a whole from grave *644 and pressingly imminent dangers or which, without any general prohibition, merely regulate time, place or manner of religious activity. Decision as to the constitutionality of particular laws which strike at the substance of religious tenets and practices must be made be this Court. The duty is a solemn one, and in meeting it we cannot say that a failure, because of religious scruples, to assume a particular physical position and to repeat the words of a patriotic formula creates a grave danger to the nation. Such a statutory exaction is a form of test oath, and the test oath has always been abhorrent in the United States.

Words uttered under coercion are proof of loyalty to nothing but self-interest. Love of country must spring from willing hearts and free minds, inspired by a fair administration of wise laws enacted by the people's elected representatives within the bounds of express constitutional prohibitions. These laws must, to be consistent with the First Amendment, permit the widest toleration of conflicting viewpoints consistent with a society of free men.

Neither our domestic tranquillity in peace nor our martial effort in war depend on compelling little children to participate in a ceremony which ends in nothing for them but a fear of spiritual condemnation. If, as we think, their fears are groundless, time and reason are the proper antidotes for their errors. The ceremonial, when enforced against conscientious objectors, more likely to defeat than to serve its high purpose, is a handy implement for disguised religious persecution. As such, it is inconsistent with our Constitution's plan and purpose.

Mr. Justice MURPHY, concurring.

I agree with the opinion of the Court and join in it.

The complaint challenges an order of the State Board of Education which requires teachers and pupils to participate in the prescribed salute to the flag. For refusal to conform with the requirement the State law prescribes expulsion.*645 The offender is required by law to be treated as unlawfully absent from school and the parent or guardian is made liable to prosecution and punishment for such absence. Thus not only is the privilege of public education conditioned on compliance with the requirement, but noncompliance is virtually made unlawful. In effect compliance is compulsory and not optional. It is the claim of appellees that the regulation is invalid as a restriction on religious freedom and freedom of speech, secured to them against State infringement by the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States. DP A reluctance to interfere with considered state action, the fact that the end sought is a desirable one, the emotion aroused by the flag as a symbol for which we have fought and are now fighting again,-all of these are understandable. But there is before us the right of freedom to believe, freedom to worship one's Maker according to the dictates of one's conscience, a right which the Constitution specifically shelters. Reflection has convinced me that as a judge I have no loftier duty or responsibility than to uphold that spiritual freedom to its farthest reaches.

The right of freedom of thought and of religion as guaranteed by the Constitution *1189 against State action includes both the right to speak freely and the right to refrain from speaking at all, except in so far as essential operations of government may require it for the preservation of an orderly society,-as in the case of compulsion to give evidence in court. Without wishing to disparage the purposes and intentions of those who hope to inculcate sentiments of loyalty nd patriotism by requiring a declaration of allegiance as a feature of public education, or unduly belittle the benefits that may accrue therefrom, I am impelled to conclude that such a requirement is not essential to the maintenance of effective government and orderly society. To many it is deeply distasteful to join in a public chorus of affirmation of private belief. By some, including646 the members of this sect, it is apparently regarded as incompatible with a primary religious obligation and therefore a restriction on religious freedom. Official compulsion to affirm what is contrary to one's religious beliefs is the antithesis of freedom of worship which, it is well to recall, was achieved in this country only after what Jefferson characterized as the 'severest contests in which I have ever been engaged.' FN20

FN20 See Jefferson, Autobiography, vol. 1, pp. 53-59.

I am unable to agree that the benefits that may accrue to society from the compulsory flag salute are sufficiently definite and tangible to justify the invasion of freedom and privacy that it entailed or to compensate for a restraint on the freedom of the individual to be vocal or silent according to his conscience or personal inclination. The trenchant words in the preamble to the Virginia Statute for Religious Freedom remain unanswerable: '* * * all attempts to influence (the mind) by temporal punishment, or burthens, or by civil incapacitations, tend only to beget habits of hypocrisy and meanness, * * *.' Code Va.1919, s 34. Any spark of love for country which may be generated in a child or his associates by forcing him to make what is to him an empty gesture and recite words wrung from him contrary to his religious beliefs is overshadowed by the desirability of preserving freedom of conscience to the full. It is in that freedom and the example of persuasion, not in force and compulsion, that the real unity of America lies.

Mr. Justice FRANKFURTER, dissenting.

One who belongs to the most vilified and persecuted minority in history is not likely to be insensible to the freedoms guaranteed by our Constitution. Were my purely personal attitude relevant I should wholeheartedly associate myself with the general libertarian views in the Court's opinion, representing as they do the thought and 647 action of a lifetime. But as judges we are neither Jew nor Gentile, neither Catholic nor agnostic. We owe equal attachment to the Constitution and are equally bound by our judicial obligations whether we derive our citizenship from the earliest or the latest immigrants to these shores. As a member of this Court I am not justified in writing my private notions of policy into the Constitution, no matter how deeply I may cherish them or how mischievous I may deem their disregard. They duty of a judge who must decide which of two claims before the Court shall prevail, that of a State to enact and enforce laws within its general competence or that of an individual to refuse obedience because of the demands of his conscience, is not that of the ordinary person. It can never be emphasized too much that one's own opinion about the wisdom or evil of a law should be excluded altogether when one is doing one's duty on the bench. The only opinion of our own even looking in that direction that is material is our opinion whether legislators could in reason have enacted such a law. In the light of all the circumstances, including the history of this question in this Court, it would require more daring than I possess to deny that reasonable legislators could have taken the action which is before us for review. Most unwillingly, therefore, I must differ from my brethren with regard to legislation like this. I cannot bring my mind to believe that the 'liberty' secured by the Due Process Clause gives this Court authority to deny to the State of West Virginia the attainment of that which we all recognize as a legitimate legislative end, *1190 namely, the promotion of good citizenship, by employment of the means here chosen.

Not so long ago we were admonished that 'the only check upon our own exercise of power is our own sense of self-restraint. For the removal of unwise laws from the statute books appeal lies, not to the courts, but to the ballot and to the processes of democratic government.' 648 United States v. Butler, 297 U.S. 1, 79, 56 S.Ct. 312, 325, 80 L.Ed. 477, 102 A.L.R. 914 (dissent). We have been told that generalities do not decide concrete cases. But the intensity with which a general principle is held may determine a particular issue, and whether we put first things first may decide a specific controversy.

The admonition that judicial self-restraint alone limits arbitrary exercise of our authority is relevant every time we are asked to nullify legislation. The Constitution does not give us greater veto power when dealing with one phase of 'liberty' than with another, or when dealing with grade school regulations than with college regulations that offend conscience, as was the case in Hamilton v. Regents, 293 U.S. 245, 55 S.Ct. 197, 79 L.Ed. 343. In neither situation is our function comparable to that of a legislature or are we free to act as though we were a superlegislature. Judicial self-restraint is equally necessary whenever an exercise of political or legislative power is challenged. There is no warrant in the constitutional basis of this Court's authority for attributing different ro les to it depending upon the nature of the challenge to the legislation. Our power does not vary according to the particular provision of the Bill of Rights which is invoked. The right not to have property taken without just compensation has, so far as the scope of judicial power is concerned, the same constitutional dignity as the right to be protected against unreasonable searches and seizures, and the latter has no less claim than freedom of the press or freedom of speech or religious freedom. In no instance is this Court the primary protector of the particular liberty that is invoked. This Court has recognized, what hardly could be denied, that all the provisions of the first ten Amendments are 'specific' prohibitions, United States v. Carolene Products Co., 304 U.S. 144, 152, 58 S.Ct. 778, 783, 82 L.Ed. 1234, note 4. But each specific Amendment, in so far as embraced within the Fourteenth Amendment, must be equally respected, and the function of this 649 Court does not differ in passing on the constitutionality of legislation challenged under different Amendments.

When Mr. Justice Holmes, speaking for this Court, wrote that 'it must be remembered that legislatures are ultimate guardians of the liberties and welfare of the people in quite as great a degree as the courts', Missouri, Kansas & Texas R. Co. v. May, 194 U.S. 267, 270, 24 S.Ct. 638, 639, 48 L.Ed. 971, he went to the very essence of our constitutional system and the democratic conception of our society. He did not mean that for only some phases of civil government this Court was not to supplant legislatures and sit in judgment upon the right or wrong of a challenged measure. He was stating the comprehensive judicial duty and ro le of this Court in our constitutional scheme whenever legislation is sought to be nullified on any ground, namely, that responsibility for legislation lies with legislatures, answerable as they are directly to the people, and this Court's only and very narrow function is to determine whether within the broad grant of authority vested in legislatures they have exercised a judgment for which reasonable justification can be offered.

The framers of the federal Constitution might have chosen to assign an active share in the process of legislation to this Court. They had before them the well-known example of New York's Council of Revision, which had been functioning since 1777. After stating that 'laws inconsistent with the spirit of this constitution, or with the public good, may be hastily and unadvisedly passed', the state constitution made the judges of New York part of the legislative process by providing that 'all bills which have passed the senate and assembly shall, before they become laws', be presented to a Council of which the judges constituted a majority, 'for their revisal and consideration'. Art. III, New York Constitution of 1777. Judges exercised this legislative function in New York 650 for nearly fifty years. See Art. I, s 12, New York Constitution of 1821. But the framers of the Constitution denied such legislative powers to the federal judiciary. *1191 They chose instead to insulate the judiciary from the legislative function. They did not grant to this Court supervision over legislation.

The reason why from the beginning even the narrow judicial authority to nullify legislation has been viewed with a jealous eye is that it serves to prevent the full play of the democratic process. The fact that it may be an undemocratic aspect of our scheme of government does not call for its rejection or its disuse. But it is the best of reasons, as this Court has frequently recognized, for the greatest caution in its use.

The precise scope of the question before us defines the limits of the constitutional power that is in issue. The State of West Virginia requires all pupils to share in the salute to the flag as part of school training in citizenship. The present action is one to enjoin the enforcement of this requirement by those in school attendance. We have not before us any attempt by the State to punish disobedient children or visit penal consequences on their parents. All that is in question is the right of the state to compel participation in this exercise by those who choose to attend the public schools.

We are not reviewing merely the action of a local school board. The flag salute requirement in this case comes before us with the full authority of the State of West Virginia. We are in fact passing judgment on 'the power of the State as a whole'. Rippey v. Texas, 193 U.S. 504, 509, 24 S.Ct. 516, 517, 48 L.Ed. 767; Skiriotes v. Florida, 313 U.S. 69, 79, 61 S.Ct. 924, 930, 85 L.Ed. 1193. Practically we are passing upon the political power of each of the forty-eight states. Moreover, since the First Amendment has been read into the Fourteenth, our problem is precisely the same is it would be if we had before us an Act of Congress for the District of Columbia. To suggest that we are here concerned*651 with the heedless action of some village tyrants is to distort the augustness of the constitutional issue and the reach of the consequences of our decision.

Under our constitutional system the legislature is charged solely with civil concerns of society. If the avowed or intrinsic legislative purpose is either to promote or to discourage some religious community or creed, it is clearly within the constitutional restrictions imposed on legislatures and cannot stand. But it by no means follows that legislative power is wanting whenever a general non-discriminatory civil regulation in fact touches conscientious scruples or religious beliefs of an individual or a group. Regard for such scruples or beliefs undoubtedly presents one of the most reasonable claims for the exertion of legislative accommodation. It is, of course, beyond our power to rewrite the state's requirement, by providing exemptions for those who do not wish to participate in the flag salute or by making some other accommodations to meet their scruples. That wisdom might suggest the making of such accommodations and that school administration would not find it too difficult to make them and yet maintain the ceremony for those not refusing to conform, is outside our province to suggest. Tact, respect, and generosity toward variant views will always commend themselves to those charged with the duties of legislation so as to achieve a maximum of good will and to require a minimum of unwilling submission to a general law. But the real question is, who is to make such accommodations, the courts or the legislature?

This is no dry, technical matter. It cuts deep into one's conception of the democratic process-it concerns no less the practical differences between the means for making these accommodations that are open to courts and to legislatures. A court can only strike down. It can only say 'This or that law is void.' It cannot modify or qualify, it cannot make exceptions to a general requirement.*652 And it strikes down not merely for a day. At least the finding of unconstitutionality ought not to have ephemeral significance unless the Constitution is to be reduced to the fugitive importance of mere legislation. When we are dealing with the Constitution of the United States, and more particularly with the great safeguards of the Bill of Rights, we are dealing with principles of liberty and justice 'so rooted in the traditions and conscience of our people as to be ranked as fundamental'-something without which 'a fair and enlightened system of justice would be impossible'. Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319, 325, 58 S.Ct. 149, 152, 82 L.Ed. 288; 1192Hurtado v. California, 110 U.S. 516, 530, 531, 4 S.Ct. 111, 118, 119, 292, 28 L.Ed. 232. If the function of this Court is to be essentially no different from that of a legislature, if the considerations governing constitutional construction are to be substantially those that underlie legislation, then indeed judges should not have life tenure and they should be made directly responsible to the electorate. There have been many but unsuccessful proposals in the last sixty years to amend the Constitution to that end. See Sen. Doc. No. 91, 75th Cong., 1st Sess., pp. 248-51.

Conscientious scruples, all would admit, cannot stand against every legislative compulsion to do positive acts in conflict with such scruples. We have been told that such compulsions override religious scruples only as to major concerns of the state. But the determination of what is major and what is minor itself raises questions of policy. For the way in which men equally guided by reason appraise importance goes to the very heart of policy. Judges should be very diffident in setting their judgment against that of a state in determining what is and what is not a major concern, what means are appropriate to proper ends, and what is the total social cost in striking the balance of imponderables.

What one can say with assurance is that the history out of which grew constitutional provisions for religious equality*653 and the writings of the great exponents of religious freedom-Jefferson, Madison, John Adams, Benjamin Franklin-are totally wanting in justification for a claim by dissidents of exceptional immunity from civic measures of general applicability, measures not in fact disguised assaults upon such dissident views. The great leaders of the American Revolution were determined to remove political support from every religious establishment. They put on an equality the different religious sects-Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Catholics, Baptists, Methodists, Quakers, Huguenots-which, as dissenters, had been under the heel of the various orthodoxies that prevailed in different colonies. So far as the state was concerned, there was to be neither orthodoxy nor heterodoxy. And so Jefferson and those who followed him wrote guaranties of religious freedom into our constitutions. Religious minorities as well as religious majorities were to be equal in the eyes of the political state. But Jefferson and the others also knew that minorities may disrupt society. It never would have occurred to them to write into the Constitution the subordination of the general civil authority of the state to sectarian scruples.

The constitutional protection of religious freedom terminated disabilities, it did not create new privileges. It gave religious equality, not civil immunity. Its essence is freedom from conformity to religious dogma, not freedom from conformity to law because of religious dogma. Religious loyalties may be exercised without hindrance from the state, not the state may not exercise that which except by leave of religious loyalties is within the domain of temporal power. Otherwise each individual could set up his own censor against obedience to laws conscientiously deemed for the public good by those whose business it is to make laws.

The prohibition against any religious establishment by the government placed denominations on an equal footing*654 -it assured freedom from support by the government to any mode of worship and the freedom of individuals to support any mode of worship. Any person may therefore believe or disbelieve what he pleases. He may practice what he will in his own house of worship or publicly within the limits of public order. But the lawmaking authority is not circumscribed by the variety of religious beliefs, otherwise the constitutional guaranty would be not a protection of the free exercise of religion but a denial of the exercise of legislation.

The essence of the religious freedom guaranteed by our Constitution is therefore this: no religion shall either receive the state's support or incur its hostility. Religion is outside the sphere of political government. This does not mean that all matters on which religious organizations or beliefs may pronounce are outside the sphere of government. Were this so, instead of the separation of church and state, there would be the subordination of the state on any matter deemed within the sovereignty of the religious conscience. Much that is the concern of temporal authority affects the spiritual interests of men. But it is not enough to strike down a non-discriminatory 1193 law that it may hurt or offend some dissident view. It would be too easy to cite numerous prohibitions and injunctions to which laws run counter if the variant interpretations of the Bible were made the tests of obedience to law. The validity of secular laws cannot be measured by their conformity to religious doctrines. It is only in a theocratic state that ecclesiastical doctrines measure legal right or wrong.

An act compelling profession of allegiance to a religion, no matter how subtly or tenuously promoted, is bad. But an act promoting good citizenship and national allegiance is within the domain of governmental authority and is therefore to be judged by the same considerations of power and of constitutionality as those involved in the many *655 claims of immunity from civil obedience because of religious scruples.

That claims are pressed on behalf of sincere religious convictions does not of itself establish their constitutional validity. Nor does waving the banner of religious fredom relieve us from examining into the power we are asked to deny the states. Otherwise the doctrine of separation of church and state, so cardinal in the history of this nation and for the liberty of our people, would mean not the disestablishment of a state church but the establishment of all churches and of all religious groups.

The subjection of dissidents to the general requirement of saluting the flag, as a measure conducive to the training of children in good citizenship, is very far from being the first instance of exacting obedience to general laws that have offended deep religious scruples. Compulsory vaccination, see Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11, 25 S.Ct. 358, 49 L.Ed. 643, 3 Ann.Cas. 765, food inspection regulations, see Shapiro v. Lyle, D.C., 30 F.2d 971, the obligation to bear arms, see Hamilton v. Regents, 293 U.S. 245, 267, 55 S.Ct. 197, 206, 79 L.Ed. 343, testimonial duties, see Stansbury v. Marks, 2 Dall. 213, 1 L.Ed. 353, compulsory medical treatment, see People v. Vogelgesang, 221 N.Y. 290, 116 N.E. 977-these are but illustrations of conduct that has ofteen been compelled in the enforcement of legislation of general applicability even though the religious consciences of particular individuals rebelled at the exaction.

Law is concerned with external behavior and not with the inner life of man. It rests in large measure upon compulsion. Socreates lives in history partly because he gave his life for the conviction that duty of obedience to secular law does not presuppose consent to its enactment or belief in its virtue. The consent upon which free government rests is the consent that comes from sharing in the process of making and unmaking laws. The state is not shut out from a domain because the individual conscience may deny the state's claim. The individual conscience656 may profess what faith it chooses. It may affirm and promote that faith-in the language of the Constitution, it may 'exercise' it freely-but it cannot thereby restrict community action through political organs in matters of community concern, so long as the action is not asserted in a discriminatory way either openly or by stealth. One may have the right to practice one's religion and at the same time owe the duty of formal obedience to laws that run counter to one's beliefs. Compelling belief implies denial of opportunity to combat it and to assert dissident views. Such compulsion is one thing. Quite another matter is submission to conformity of action while denying its wisdom or virtue and with ample opportunity for seeking its change or abrogation.

In Hamilton v. Regents, 293 U.S. 245, 55 S.Ct. 197, 79 L.Ed. 343, this Court unanimously held that one attending a state-maintained university cannot refuse attendance on courses that offend his religious scruples. That decision is not overruled today, but is distinguished on the ground that attendance at the institution for higher education was voluntary and therefore a student could not refuse compliance with its conditions and yet take advantage of its opportunities. But West Virginia does not compel the attendance at its public schools of the children here concerned. West Virginia does not so compel, for it cannot. This Court denied the right of a state to require its children to attend public schools. Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 45 S.Ct. 571, 69 L.Ed. 1070, 39 A.L.R. 468. As to its public schools, West Virginia imposes conditions*1194 which it deems necessary in the development of future citizens precisely as California deemed necessary the requirements that offended the student's conscience in the Hamilton case. The need for higher education and the duty of the state to provide it as part of a public educational system, are part of the democratic faith of most of our states. The right to secure such education in institutions not maintained by public funds is unquestioned. 657 But the practical opportunities for obtaining what is becoming in increasing measure the conventional equipment of American youth may be no less burdensome than that which parents are increasingly called upon to bear in sending their children to parochial schools because the education provided by public schools, though supported by their taxes, does not satisfy their ethical and educational necessities. I find it impossible, so far as constitutional power is concerned, to differentiate what was sanctioned in the Hamilton case from what is nullified in this case. And for me it still remains to be explained why the grounds of Mr. Justice Cardozo's opinion in Hamilton v. Regents, supra, are not sufficient to sustain the flag salute requirement. Such a requirement, like the requirement in the Hamilton case, 'is not an interference by the state with the free exercise of religion when the liberties of the Constitution are read in the light of a century and a half of history during days of peace and war.' 293 U.S. 245, 266, 55 S.Ct. 197, 206, 79 L.Ed. 343. The religious worshiper, 'if his liberties were to be thus extended, might refuse to contribute taxes * * * in furtherance of any other and condemned by his conscience as irreligious or immoral. The right of private judgment has never yet been so exalted above the powers and the compulsion of the agencies of government.' Id., 293 U.S. at page 268, 55 S.Ct. at page 206, 79 L.Ed. 343.

Parents have the privilege of choosing which schools they wish their children to attend. And the question here is whether the state may make certain requirements that seem to it desirable or important for the proper education of those future citizens who go to schools maintained by the states, or whether the pupils in those schools may be relieved from those requirements if they run counter to the consciences of their parents. Not only have parents the right to send children to schools of their own choosing but the state has no right to bring such schools 'under a strict governmental control' or give 'affirmative direction 658 concerning the intimate and essential details of such schools, intrust their control to public officers, and deny both owners and patrons reasonable choice and discretion in respect of teachers, curriculum and textbooks'. Farrington v. Tokushige, 273 U.S. 284, 298, 47 S.Ct. 406, 408, 409, 71 L.Ed. 646. Why should not the state likewise have constitutional power to make reasonable provisions for the proper instruction of children in schools maintained by it?

When dealing with religious scruples we are dealing with an almost numberless variety of doctrines and beliefs entertained with equal sincerity by the particular groups for which they satisfy man's needs in his relation to the mysteries of the universe. There are in the United States more than 250 distinctive established religious denominations. In the state of Pennsylvania there are 120 of these, and in West Virginia as many as 65. But if religious scruples afford immunity from civic obedience to laws, they may be invoked by the religious beliefs of any individual even though he holds no membership in any sect or organized denomination. Certainly this Court cannot be called upon to determine what claims of conscience should be recognized and what should be rejected as satisfying the 'religion' which the Constitution protects. That would indeed resurrect the very discriminatory treatment of religion which the Constitution sought forever to forbid. And so, when confronted with the task of considering the claims of immunity from obedience to a law dealing with civil affairs because of religious scruples, we cannot conceive religion more narrowly than in the terms in which Judge Augustus N. Hand recently characterized it:

'It is unnecessary to attempt a definition of religion; the content of the term is found in the history of the human race and is incapable of compression into a few words. Religious belief arises from a sense of the inadequacy of reason659 as a means of relating the individual to his fellow-men *1195 and to his universe. * * * (It) may justly be regarded as a response of the individual to an inward mentor, call it conscience or God, that is for many persons at the present time the equivalent of what has always been thought a religious impulse.' United States v. Kauten, 2 Cir., 133 F.2d 703, 708.

Consider the controversial issue of compulsory Bible-reading in public schools. The educational policies of the states are in great conflict over this, and the state courts are divided in their decisions on the issue whether the requirement of Bible-reading offends constitutional provisions dealing with religious freedom. The requirement of Bible-reading has been justified by various state courts as an appropriate means of inculcating ethical precepts and familiarizing pupils with the most lasting expression of great English literature. Is this Court to overthrow such variant state educational policies by denying states the right to entertain such convictions in regard to their school systems because of a belief that the King James version is in fact a sectarian text to which parents of the Catholic and Jewish faiths and of some Protestant persuasions may rightly object to having their children exposed? On the other hand the religious consciences of some parents may rebel at the absence of any Bible-reading in the schools. See State of Washington ex rel. Clithero v. Showalter, 284 U.S. 573, 52 S.Ct. 15, 76 L.Ed. 498. Or is this Court to enter the old controversy between science and religion by unduly defining the limits within which a state may experiment with its school curricula? The religious consciences of some parents may be offended by subjecting their children to the Biblical account of creation, while another state may offend parents by prohibiting a teaching of biology that contradicts such Biblical account. Compare Scopes v. State, 154 Tenn. 105, 289 S.W. 363, 53 A.L.R. 821. What of conscientious660 objections to what is devoutly felt by parents to be the poisoning of impressionable minds of children by chauvinistic teaching of history? This is very far from a fanciful suggestion for in the belief of many thoughtful people nationalism is the seed-bed of war.

There are other issues in the offing which admonish us of the difficulties and complexities that confront states in the duty of administering their local school systems. All citizens are taxed for the support of public schools although this Court has denied the right of a state to compel all children to go to such schools and has recognized the right of parents to send children to privately maintained schools. Parents who are dissatisfied with the public schools thus carry a double educational burden. Children who go to public school enjoy in many states derivative advantages such as free text books, free lunch, and free transportation in going to and from school. What of the claims for equity of treatment of those parents who, because of religious scruples, cannot send their children to public schools? What of the claim that if the right to send children to privately maintained schools is partly an exercise of religious conviction, to render effective this right it should be accompanied by a quality of treatment by the state in supplying free textbooks, free lunch, and free transportation to children who go to private schools? What of the claim that such grants are offensive to the cardinal constitutional doctrine of separation of church and state?

These questions assume increasing importance in view of the steady growth of parochial schools both in number and in population. I am not borrowing trouble by adumbrating these issues nor am I parading horrible examples of the consequences of today's decision. I am aware that we must decide the case before us and not some other case. But that does not mean that a case is dissociated from the past and unrelated to the future. We must decide this 661 case with due regard for what went before and no less regard for what may come after. Is it really a fair construction of such a fundamental concept as the right freely to exercise one's religion that a state cannot choose to require all children who attend public school to make the same gesture of allegiance to the symbol of our national life because it may offend the conscience of some children, but that it may compel all children to attend public school to listen to the King James version although it may offend the consciences of their parents? And what of the larger issue of claiming immunity from obedience to a general civil regulation that has a reasonable*1196 relation to a public purpose within the general competence of the state? See Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 535, 45 S.Ct. 571, 573, 69 L.Ed. 1070, 39 A.L.R. 468. Another member of the sect now before us insisted that in forbidding her two little girls, aged nine and twelve, to distribute pamphlets Oregon infringed her and their freedom of religion in that the children were engaged in 'preaching the gospel of God's Kingdom'. A procedural technicality led to the dismissal of the case, but the problem remains. McSparran v. City of Portland, 318 U.S. 768, 63 S.Ct. 759, 87 L.Ed. 1139.

These questions are not lightly stirred. They touch the most delicate issues and their solution challenges the best wisdom of political and religious statesmen. But it presents awful possibilities to try to encase the solution of these problems within the rigid prohibitions of unconstitutionality.

We are told that a flag salute is a doubtful substitute for adequate understanding of our institutions. The states that require such a school exercise do not have to justify it as the only means for promoting good citizenship in children, but merely as one of diverse means for accomplishing a worthy end. We may deem it a foolish measure, but the point is that this Court is not the organ of government to resolve doubts as to whether it will fulfill its purpose. Only if there be no doubt that any reasonable662 mind could entertain can we deny to the states the right to resolve doubts their way and not ours.

That which to the majority may seem essential for the welfare of the state may offend the consciences of a minority. But, so long as no inroads are made upon the actual exercise of religion by the minority, to deny the political power of the majority to enact laws concerned with civil matters, simply because they may offend the consciences of a minority, really means that the consciences of a minority are more sacred and more enshrined in the Constitution than the consciences of a majority.

We are told that symbolism is a dramatic but primitive way of communicating ideas. Symbolism is inescapable. Even the most sophisticated live by symbols. But it is not for this Court to make psychological judgments as to the effectiveness of a particular symbol in inculcating concededly indispensable feelings, particularly if the state happens to see fit to utilize the symbol that represents our heritage and our hopes. And surely only flippancy could be responsible for the suggestion that constitutional validity of a requirement to salute our flag implies equal validity of a requirement to salute a dictator. The significance of a symbol lies in what it represents. To reject the swastika does not imply rejection of the Cross. And so it bears repetition to say that it mocks reason and denies our whole history to find in the allowance of a requirement to salute our flag on fitting occasions the seeds of sanction for obeisance to a leader. To deny the power to employ educational symbols is to say that the state's educational system may not stimulate the imagination because this may lead to unwise stimulation.

The right of West Virginia to utilize the flag salute as part of its educational process is denied because, so it is argued, it cannot be justified as a means of meeting a 'clear and present danger' to national unity. In passing it deserves to be noted that the four cases which unanimously663 sustained the power of states to utilize such an educational measure arose and were all decided before the present World War. But to measure the state's power to make such regulations as are here resisted by the imminence of national danger is wholly to misconceive the origin and purpose of the concept of 'clear and present danger'. To apply such a test is for the Court to assume, however unwittingly, a legislative responsibility that does not belong to it. To talk about 'clear and present danger' as the touchstone of allowable educational policy by the states whenever school curricula may impinge upon the boundaries of individual conscience, is to take a felicitous phrase out of the context of the particular situation where it arose and for which it was adapted. Mr. Justice Holmes used the phrase 'clear and present danger' in a case involving mere speech as a means by which alone to accomplish sedition in time of war. By that phrase he meant merely to indicate that, in view of the protection given to utterance by the First Amendment, in order that mere utterance may *1197 not be proscribed, 'the words used are used in such circumstances and are of such a nature as to create a clear and present danger that they will bring about the substantive evils that Congress has a right to prevent.' Schenck v. United States, 249 U.S. 47, 52, 39 S.Ct. 247, 249, 63 L.Ed. 470. The 'substantive evils' about which he was speaking were inducement of insubordination in the military and naval forces of the United States and obstruction of enlistment while the country was at war. He was not enunciating a formal rule that there can be no restriction upon speech and, still less, no compulsion where conscience balks, unless imminent danger would thereby be wrought 'to our institutions or our government'.

The flag salute exercise has no kinship whatever to the oath tests so odious in history. For the oath test was one of the instruments for suppressing heretical beliefs. 664 Saluting the flag suppresses no belief nor curbs it. Children and their parents may believe what they please, avow their belief and practice it. It is not even remotely suggested that the requirement for saluting the flag involves the slightest restriction against the fullest opportunity on the part both of the children and of their parents to disavow as publicly as they choose to do so the meaning that others attach to the gesture of salute. All channels of affirmative free expression are open to both children and parents. Had we before us any act of the state putting the slightest curbs upon such free expression, I should not lag behind any member of this Court in striking down such an invasion of the right to freedom of thought and freedom of speech protected by the Constitution.

I am fortified in my view of this case by the history of the flag salute controversy in this Court. Five times has the precise question now before us been adjudicated. Four times the Court unanimously found that the requirement of such a school exercise was not beyond the powers of the states. Indeed in the first three cases to come before the Court the constitutional claim now sustained was deemed so clearly unmeritorious that this Court dismissed the appeals for want of a substantial federal question. Leoles v. Landers, 302 U.S. 656, 58 S.Ct. 364, 82 L.Ed. 507; Hering v. State Board of Education, 303 U.S. 624, 58 S.Ct. 752, 82 L.Ed. 1087; Gabrielli v. Knickerbocker, 306 U.S. 621, 59 S.Ct. 786, 83 L.Ed. 1026. In the fourth case the judgment of the district court upholding the state law was summarily affirmed on the authority of the earlier cases. Johnson v. Deerfield, 306 U.S. 621, 59 S.Ct. 791, 83 L.Ed. 1027. The fifth case, Minersville District v. Gobitis, 310 U.S. 586, 60 S.Ct. 1010, 84 L.Ed. 1375, 127 A.L.R. 1493, was brought here because the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit ran counter to our rulings. They were reaffirmed after full consideration, with one Justice dissenting.

What may be even more significant than this uniform recognition of state authority is the fact that every Justice665 -thirteen in all-who has hitherto participated in judging this matter has at one or more times found no constitutional infirmity in what is now condemned. Only the two Justices sitting for the first time on this matter have not heretofore found this legislation inoffensive to the 'liberty' guaranteed by the Constitution. And among the Justice who sustained this measure were outstanding judicial leaders in the zealous enforcement of constitutional safeguards of civil liberties-men like Chief Justice Hughes, Mr. Justice Brandeis, and Mr. Justice Cardozo, to mention only those no longer on the Court.

One's conception of the Constitution cannot be severed from one's conception of a judge's function in applying it. The Court has no reason for existence if it merely reflects the pressures of the day. Our system is built on the faith that men set apart for this special function, freed from the influences of immediacy and form the deflections of worldly ambition, will become able to take a view of longer range than the period of responsibility entrusted to Congress and legislatures. We are dealing with matters as to which legislators and voters have conflicting views. Are we as judges to impose our strong convictions on where wisdom lies? That which three years ago had seemed to five successive Courts to lie within permissible areas of legislation is now outlawed by the deciding shift of opinion of two Justice. What reason is there to believe that they or their successors may not have another view a few years hence? Is that which was *1198 deemed to be of so fundamental a nature as to be written into the Constitution to endure for all times to be the sport of shifting winds of doctrine? Of course, judicial opinions, even as to questions of constitutionality, are not immuntable. As has been true in the past, the Court will from time to time reverse its position. But I believe that never before these Jehovah's Witnesses 666 cases (except for minor deviations subsequently retraced) has this Court overruled decisions so as to restrict the powers of democratic government. Always heretofore, it has withdrawn narrow views of legislative authority so as to authorize what formerly it had denied.

In view of this history it must be plain that what thirteen Justices found to be within the constitutional authority of a state, legislators can not be deemed unreasonable in enacting. Therefore, in denying to the states what heretofore has received such impressive judicial sanction, some other tests of unconstitutionality must surely be guiding the Court than the absence of a rational justification for the legislation. But I know of no other test which this Court is authorized to apply in nullifying legislation.

In the past this Court has from time to time set its views of policy against that embodied in legislation by finding laws in conflict with what was called the 'spirit of the Constitution'. Such undefined destructive power was not conferred on this Court by the Constitution. Before a duly enacted law can be judicially nullified, it must be forbidden by some explicit restriction upon political authority in the Constitution. Equally inadmissible is the claim to strike down legislation because to us as individuals it seems opposed to the 'plan and purpose' of the Constitution. That is too tempting a basis for finding in one's personal views the purposes of the Founders.

The uncontrollable power wielded by this Court brings it very close to the most sensitive areas of public affairs. As appeal from legislation to adjudication becomes more frequent, and its consequences more far-reaching, judicial self-restraint becomes more and not less important, lest we unwarrantably enter social and political domains wholly outside our concern. I think I appreciate fully the objections to the law before us. But to deny that it presents a question upon which men might reasonably 667 differ appears to me to be intolerance. And since men may so reasonably differ, I deem it beyond my constitutional power to assert my view of the wisdom of this law against the view of the State of West Virginia.

Jefferson's opposition to judicial review has not been accepted by history, but it still serves as an admonition against confusion between judicial and political functions. As a rule of judicial self-restraint, it is still as valid as Lincoln's admonition. For those who pass laws not only are under duty to pass laws. They are also under duty to observe the Constitution. And even though legislation relates to civil liberties, our duty of deference to those who have the responsibility for making the laws is no less relevant or less exacting. And this is so especially when we consider the accidental contingencies by which one man may determine constitutionality and thereby confine the political power of the Congress of the United States and the legislatures of forty-eight states. The attitude of judicial humility which thse considerations enjoin is not an abdication of the judicial function. It is a due observance of its limits. Moreover, it is to be borne in mind that in a question like this we are not passing on the proper distribution of political power as between the states and the central government. We are not discharging the basic function of this Court as the mediator of powers within the federal system. To strike down a law like this is to deny a power to all government.

The whole Court is conscious that this case reaches ultimate questions of judicial power and its relation to our scheme of government. It is appropriate, therefore, to recall an utterance as wise as any that I knew in analyzing what is really involved when the theory of this Court's function is put to the test of practice. The analysis is that of James Bradley Thayer:

'* * * there has developed a vast and growing increase of judicial interference with legislation. This is a very different668 state of things from what our fathers contemplated, a century and more ago, in framing the new system. Seldom, indeed, as they imagined, under our system, *1199 would this great, novel, tremendous power of the courts be exerted,-would this sacred ark of the covenant be taken from within the veil. Marshall himself expressed truly one aspect of the matter, when he said in one of the later years of his life: 'No questions can be brought before a judicial tribunal of greater delicacy than those which involve the constitutionality of legislative acts. If they become indispensably necessary to the case, the court must meet and decide them; but if the case may be determined on other grounds, a just respect for the legislature requires that the obligation of its laws should not be unnecessarily and wantonly assailed.' And again, a little earlier than this, he laid down the one true rule of duty for the courts. When he went to Philadelphia at the end of September, in 1831, on that painful errand of which I have spoken, in answering a cordial tribute from the bar of that city he remarked that if he might be permitted to claim for himself and his associates any part of the kind things they had said, it would be this, that they had 'never sought to enlarge the judicial power beyond its proper bounds, nor feared to carry it to the fullest extent that duty required.'

'That is the safe twofold rule; nor is the first part of it any whit less important than the second; nay, more; to-day it is the part which most requires to be emphasized. For just here comes in a consideration of very great weight. Great and, indeed, inestimable as are the advantages in a popular government of this conservative influence,-the power of the judiciary to disregard unconstitutional legislation,-it should be remembered that the exercise of it, even when unavoidable, is always attended with a serious evil, namely, that the correction of legislative mistakes comes from the outside, and the people thus lose the political experience, and the moral education and stimulus that come from fighting the question out in the ordinary way, and correcting their own errors. If the decision in Munn v. Illinois and the 'Granger Cases,' twenty-five years ago, and in the 'Legal Tender Cases,' nearly thirty years 669 ago, had been different; and the legislation there in question, thought by many to be unconstitutional and by many more to be ill-advised, had been set aside, we should have been saved some trouble and some harm. But I venture to think that the good which came to the country and its people from the vigorous thinking that had to be done in the political debates that followed, from the infiltration through every part of the population of sound ideas and sentiments, from the rousing into activity of opposite elements, the enlargement of ideas, the strengthening of moral fibre, and the growth of political experience that came out of it all,-that all this far more than outweighed any evil which ever flowed from the refusal of the court to interfere with the work of the legislature.

'The tendency of a common and easy resort to this great function, now lamentably too common, is to dwarf the political capacity of the people, and to deaden its sense of moral responsibility. It is no light thing to do that.

'What can be done? It is the courts that can do most to cure the evil; and the opportunity is a very great one. Let them resolutely adhere to first principles. Let them consider how narrow is the function which the constitutions have conferred on them,-the office merely of deciding litigated cases; how large, therefore, is the duty intrusted to others, and above all to the legislature. It is that body which is charged, primarily, with the duty of judging of the constitutionality of its work. The constitutions generally give them no authority to call upon a court for advice; they must decide for themselves, and the courts may never be able to say a word. Such a body, charged, in every State, with almost all the legislative power of the people, is entitled to the most entire and real respect; is entitled, as among all rationally permissible opinions as to what the constitution allows, to its own choice. Courts, as has often been said, are not to think of the legislators, but of the legislature,-the great, continuous body itself, abstracted from all the transitory individuals who may happen to hold its power. It is this majestic representative of the people whose action is in question, a coo rdinate department of the government 670 charged with the greatest functions, and invested, in contemplation of law, with whatsoever wisdom, virtue, and knowledge the exercise of such functions requires.

*1200 'To set aside the acts of such a body, representing in its own field, which is the very highest of all, the ultimate sovereign, should be a solemn, unusual, and painful act. Something is wrong when it can ever be other than that. And if it be true that the holders of legislative power are careless or evil, yet the constitutional duty of the court remains untouched; it cannot rightly attempt to protect the people, by undertaking a function not its own. On the other hand, by adhering rigidly to its own duty, the court will help, as nothing else can, to fix the spot where responsibility lies, and to bring down on that precise locality the thunderbolt of popular condemnation. The judiciary, to-day, in dealing with the acts of their coo rdinate legislators, owe to the country no greater or clearer duty than that of keeping their hands off these acts wherever it is possible to do it. For that course-the true course of judicial duty always-will powerfully help to bring the people and their representatives to a sense of their own responsibility. There will still remain to the judiciary an ample field for the determinations of this remarkable jurisdiction, of which our American law has so much reason to be proud; a jurisdiction which has had some of its chief illustrations and its greatest triumphs as in Marshall's time, so in ours, while the courts were refusing to exercise it.' J. B. Thayer, John Marshall, (1901) 104-10.

Of course patriotism cannot be enforced by the flag salute. But neither can the liberal spirit be enforced by judicial invalidation of illiberal legislation. Our constant preoccupation with the constitutionality of legislation rather than with its wisdom tends to preoccupation of the American mind with a false value. The tendency of focusing attention on constitutionality is to make constitutionality synonymous with wisdom, to regard a law as all right if it is constitutional. Such an attitude is a great enemy of liberalism. Particularly in legislation affecting freedom of thought and freedom of speech much which should offend a free-spirited society is constitutional. Reliance671 for the most precious interests of civilization, therefore, must be found outside of their vindication in courts of law. Only a persistent positive translation of the faith of a free society into the convictions and habits and actions of a community is the ultimate reliance against unabated temptations to fetter the human spirit.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

In this action, plaintiff Jane Doe seeks damages against the local and national entities of the Jehovah's Witnesses Church for the consequences of childhood sexual abuse committed by Jonathan Kendrick in the mid-1990s. Plaintiff noticed and took the deposition of Gary Abrahamson, an Elder of her former North Fremont Congregation. Relevant excerpts of the deposition, attached as Exhibit "1" to the Declaration of Richard Simons in Support of this Motion, elicited the following facts:

1. Gary Abrahamson is an elder of the North Congregation of Fremont, where the abuse occurred. (Depo. 11:2-5);

2. Mr. Abrahamson has been an Elder in Fremont since 1986 (Depo. 13:15-18);

3. Elders have the primary administrative responsibilities within the Congregation (14:15-24);

4. Elders serve together with other Elders in a Body of Elders (15:9-13);

5. Elders are selected by the local Body of Elders, but must be approved by the "Branch Office", a separate entity located at the Corporate Headquarters of Jehovah's Witnesses in New York (17:17-18:8);

6. Jehovah's Witnesses also have "Ministerial Servants", who hold positions of administrative responsibility within the Congregation (26:2-27:2);

7. The appointment of a Ministerial Servant requires Corporate approval by the Watchtower New York Corporation Service Branch (22:2-13; 27:3-10);

8. A Ministerial Servant can be Removed by recommendation by the Body of Elders, and approval of the Service Branch (56:12-25);

9. The Board of Elders recommends Removal of a Ministerial Servant in a narrative letter communicated to the Service Branch (57:1-13);

10. Jonathan Kendrick was a Ministerial Servant of the Jehovah's Witnesses North Fremont Congregation (54:5-13);

11. Jonathan Kendrick was removed as a Ministerial Servant from the Fremont North Congregation, which means he was determined to be no longer qualified to serve (56:16-20);

12. The Body of Elders determines that a Ministerial Servant is no longer qualified to serve, but the determination must be approved by the Corporate Service Branch of Watchtower New York (56:18-25);

13. The recommendation of the Body of Elders that a Ministerial Servant be Removed is communicated to the Service Branch in New York by a narrative letter, and that process was followed in the removal of Mr. Kendrick (56:1-7);

14. The Jehovah's Witnesses has a Judicial Investigating Committee (Depo. 58:15-59:1);

15. The existence of the Judicial Investigating Committee is contained in Jehovah's Witnesses publications. (59:24:60:5);

16. Jehovah's Witnesses members expect the Judicial Investigating Committee to investigate allegations of serious wrongdoing, including sexual abuse of a child (60:6-18);

17. Mr. Kendrick married Evelyn Kendrick in approximately 1988 (54:23-55:14);

18. Evelyn Kendrick had a daughter, Andrea, from a prior marriage (56:2-11).

During Mr. Abrahamson's deposition, he was asked questions about Administrative actions and information involving Mr. Kendrick.

The questions all were objected to on the grounds of Clergy-Penitent privilege and Mr. Abrahamson instructed not to answer. Seven questions are before the Court in this Motion. They were directed to Mr. Kendrick's Administrative record, Administrative Communications, and actions involving Mr. Kendrick, his Judicial Investigation history, to reports from members of sexual abuse of children, and to specific reports of sexual abuse of children by Mr. Kendrick.

As shown below, the statutory Clergy-Penitent privilege does not apply to any of the questions. The Motion to Compel should be granted, and the questions answers, together with responses to reasonable follow-up questions.

I. THE COURT HAS THE AUTHORITY TO COMPEL FURTHER ANSWERS TO DEPOSITION QUESTIONS.

If a deponent fails to answer any question at deposition, the party seeking discovery may move the Court for an Order compelling an answer. (C.C.P. §2025.480(a)). Such a Motion must be accompanied by a Meet and Confer Declaration and this Motion is accompanied by such a Declaration from plaintiff's counsel. (2025.480(b)). Plaintiff is required to file a Separate Statement by California Rule of Court 3.1345, and the Separate Statement is filed with this Motion.

A party or attorney who unsuccessfully opposes a Motion to Compel an answer, without substantial justification, shall be sanctioned. (2025.480(f)).

In this matter, plaintiff has lodged an advance copy of the transcript of the deposition. Plaintiff will, not less than five days prior to the hearing on this Motion, lodge with the Court a Certified Copy of the stenographic transcript and of the video recording, as required by §2025.480(d).

II. GOOD CAUSE EXISTS FOR DISCOVERY OF THE INFORMATION SOUGHT IN THE RELEVANT DEPOSITION QUESTIONS.

The deposition questions concern issues arising from the notice to Jehovah's Witness administrative management, both at the local and national level, of sexual misconduct with minors by Jonathan Kendrick. The subject questions also address specific managerial actions taken with regard to Mr. Kendrick, including his removal as a "Ministerial Servant" in 1993, prior to the sexual abuse of plaintiff. The information contained in the questions at issue also are relevant to the policies, practices, and procedures of the Jehovah's Witnesses Corporations with regard to the protection of minors, including plaintiff, from sexual abuse, and the apparent corporate policy of maintaining complete secrecy from its members of reports and findings concerning perpetrators of childhood sexual abuse. While the information specifically addressing Mr. Kendrick prior to his sexual abuse of plaintiff is relevant on the issue of notice, information obtained subsequently is also relevant to establish the corporate policies, procedures, and practices of defendants, both as to issues of negligence, and as to possible amendment of the pleadings to claim punitive damages, which in actions against religious corporations requires a specific Motion. (C.C.P. §425.14). Section 425.14 specifically states "nothing in this section is intended to affect the plaintiff's right to discover evidence on the issue of punitive or exemplary damages."

III. THE SCOPE OF CLERGY COMMUNICATION PRIVILEGE IS LIMITED BY STATUTE.

A penitential communication "means a communication made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who, in the course of the discipline or practice of the clergy member's church, denomination, organization, is authorized or accustomed to hear those communications and, under the discipline or tenants of his or her church, denomination, or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret." (Evid. Code 1032).

The key elements of a penitential communication are that no third person is aware of the communication, and the clergy member has a duty to keep those communications secret. The party claiming a privilege normally has the burden of showing that the evidence it seeks to suppress is within the terms of the statute (Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court, (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 417, at 441).

Not every statement made to a clergy member is within the definition of "Confidential Communications" of Evidence Code Section 1032. The statements must be intended to be made in confidence, and made to one who has a duty to keep them secret. (Roman Catholic Archbishop, supra., 131 Cal. App. 4th at 443-4). The knowledge or expectation that the communication will be shared with a third party- including other clergy or church administrators- defeats the claim of privilege because such communications are not meant to be kept secret, and are expected to be shared with third persons. (Roman Catholic Archbishop, supra, 131 Cal.App.4th at 444-5).

In this case, the only communications from members asked about were reports of sexual abuse of minors by Jonathan Kendrick or others generally. Mr. Abrahamson specifically testified that such communications would be expected by members to be passed on to third persons in a Judicial Committee for investigation, (Depo. 57:15-58:1; 58:24-59:18), and are therefore not "kept secret" from any and all third persons. The balance of the questions involved Administrative matters, not communications to clergy at all.

IV. NONE OF THE QUESTIONS AT ISSUE INVADE ANY CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNCIATIONS.

The questions sought do not invade any confidential communication privilege. The questions call for information about administrative actions (or non-confidential reports) regarding Mr. Kendrick. Question I asks the reason for his removal as a Ministerial Servant. Question II asks the reason for a judicial investigation of Mr. Kendrick. Question III inquired about specific reports of sexual abuse made against Mr. Kendrick which a member would expect to be followed-up on by a Judicial Investigation Committee. Question IV asks about the existence of a Judicial Investigation. Question V asks about all reports of sexual abuse of children at North Fremont which is relevant to the policies, procedures, information, and prior reports of sexual abuse, without disclosure of individual identities, of the Congregation. Question VI asks about communications between Congregations about Mr. Kendrick. Question VII asks about the individuals serving on the Judicial Committee.

V. SANCTIONS ARE APPROPRIATE IN THIS CASE.

The Court "shall impose a monetary sanction" against any party who unsuccessfully opposes a Motion to Compel, unless it finds that one subject of the sanction acted with substantial justification or other circumstances making the imposition of the sanction unjust (2031.310(h)). In this case, communications which are clearly not between a clergy and penitent are objected to as clergy penitent privilege. Questions which do not call for any communication content were objected to under the privilege. Administrative matters regarding Jonathan Kendrick which did not ask for any communications at all between members and administration were objected to under the privilege. Previous court rulings on this subject have advised the defendants that their position is not well taken or supported in law. (Simons Dec., Ex. 2). Plaintiff's counsel has been required to expend both time and filing fees to obtain discovery to which plaintiff is legitimately entitled (See Simons Dec.¶). Sanctions in the amount of $1441 are appropriate.

MEET AND CONFER DECLARATION OF COUNSEL RICHARD SIMONS IN SUPPORT OF MOTION OF PLAINTIFF JANE DOE TO COMPEL ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS AT DEPOSITION OF GARY ABRAHAMSON AND FOR SANCTIONS [C.C.P. §2025.480]

Date:	9/29/11
Time:	3:00 p.m.
Dept:	22
Reservation No:	1212207

I, Richard J. Simons, hereby declare:

1. That I am an attorney at law licensed to practice before all Courts of the State of California and am the attorney for the plaintiff in the above-entitled action.

2. That the Complaint in this matter alleges that plaintiff Jane Doe, now an adult under the age of 26, was sexually molested and abused during the time that she was a child by defendant Jonathan Kendrick. Mr. Kendrick is alleged to have been a volunteer leader, and member of the Jehovah's Witnesses North Congregation in Fremont. In the course of discovery, I noticed and took the deposition of Gary Abrahamson on August 23, 2011. Mr. Abrahamson had been identified as, and confirmed when he testified that he was, an Elder at the North Congregation in Fremont during all of the relevant time periods, including to the present time. Elders are the individuals entrusted with the administration of the congregation. A true and correct copy of the preliminary transcript of the deposition of Mr. Abrahamson, as to those portions at issue in this Motion, is attached as Exhibit "1" to this Declaration. A Certified Copy of the transcript will be lodged at or prior to the time of hearing, but has not yet been prepared by the CSR.

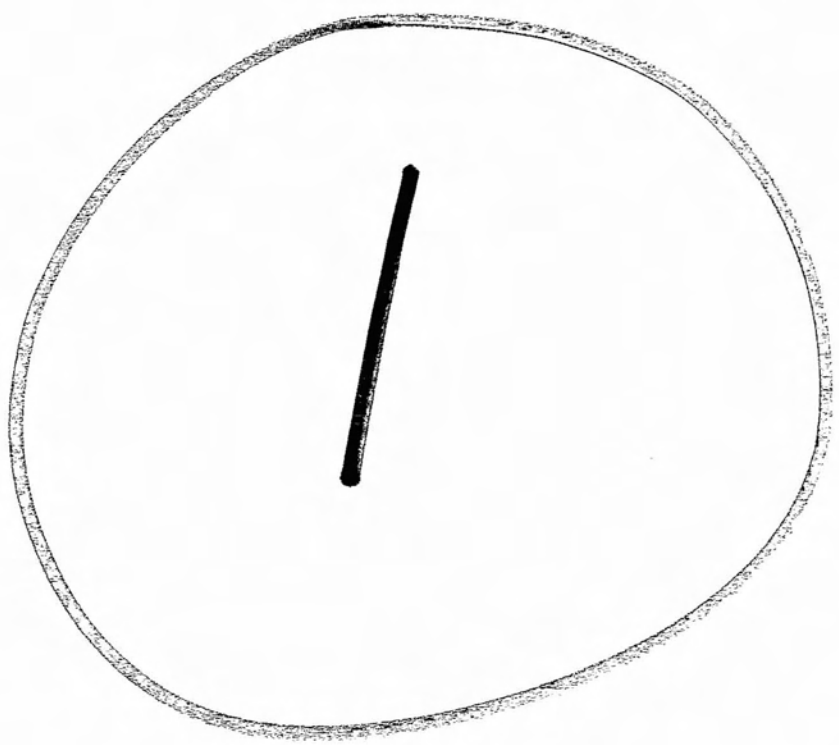
3. This Motion concerns issues of the knowledge of sexual abuse of minors by Jonathan Kendrick on the part of the administrators and persons in responsibility at both the local Jehovah's Witness Congregation in Fremont, and at the National Corporate Offices of the defendant Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York. Good cause exists for the discovery of information concerning the notice and knowledge of individuals in positions of responsibility at both the local congregation and the Watchtower New York Corporation as to Mr. Kendrick's history of sexual abuse of other minor girls, prior to plaintiff, as it directly affects the issue of "notice" and defendants' negligent supervision of Mr. Kendrick, as well as a violation of the duty to protect minors, including plaintiff Jane Doe, from sexual abuse by adults, including Mr. Kendrick. The existence of information communicated to these persons of responsibility, the actions taken, and the affect on the failure of Jane Doe to be protected from the sexual abuse she received from Mr. Kendrick, are all relevant issues on liability. Additionally, although no punitive damage claim is pled at this time, as such a pleading requires a subsequent Motion to Amend the Complaint where religious corporations are defendants, the information sought with regard to the policies and practices followed with Mr. Kendrick, both before and after the sexual abuse of Jane Doe, is relevant information to the issue of whether the defendant religious corporations, through their corporate policy and managing agents, demonstrated a conscious disregard for the safety of minors through a policy of secrecy for, and protection of, known childhood sexual abusers within their ranks and leadership.

4. I have had extensive discussions, both written and oral, with Mr. McCabe, counsel for defendants. All such discussions have been civil, courteous, and gracious. These discussions have centered on whether or not the statutory clergy-penitent privilege is applicable to the internal administrative proceedings involving childhood sexual abusers within the Jehovah's Witnesses

Church. Mr. McCabe has repeatedly advised me that he is not authorized to waive the claim of privilege. Mr. McCabe has also advised that he is not authorized to disclose any information regarding the communication and information sought in the deposition of Mr. Abrahamson absent a Court Order, as a matter of church policy. There is no further room for negotiation on this issue, and the information plaintiff believes is fully discoverable can only be obtained with a Court Order. In addition, the deposition of Mr. Abrahamson was attended by Francis McNamara, Associate General Counsel of the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. Mr. McNamara was present for all of the discussions on and off the record concerning the issue of privilege and provided no authorization to Mr. McCabe to allow for disclosure of the information sought in the questioning of witness Abrahamson.



5. This issue has previously arisen and been litigated within the First District Court of Appeal of California by the Jehovah's Witnesses. A prior Napa County Superior Court ruling held the statutory privilege of Evidence Code §1032 was not applicable to communications regarding sexual abuse of a minor in a civil case. The ruling specifically addresses privilege, and the First District Court of Appeal summarily denied a Petition for Writ. A copy of a prior ruling in the Napa County Superior Court and Petition for Writ of Mandate Denial from the First District Court of Appeal, for which Judicial Notice is requested, is attached as Exhibit "2" to this Declaration.

6. Based upon the refusal of defendants, without legal authority, and with prior knowledge of rulings holding the statutory privilege of Evidence Code §1032 inapplicable, sanctions are appropriate in this case. I have personally spent three hours in negotiation, in the preparation of this Motion, including the review of the deposition transcript, the preparation of this Meet and Confer Declaration, and the Separate Statement, and the other documents, and will spend an additional one hour for oral argument in this case. In addition, the filing fee for this Motion is $40.00. Based upon a reasonable rate of attorney's fees of $350.00 per hour, sanctions in the amount of $1,490.00 is requested.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct and that I am competent to testify as to the facts set forth herein.

Executed this 7th day of September, 2011, at Hayward, California.

DEPOSITION OF GARY A. ABRAHAMSON

Tuesday, August 23, 2011

Taken Before Karen Scott
Certified Shorthand Reporter
State of California
C.S.R. No. 4027

A Sure.

Q First of all, I understand that you are an elder in the Jehovah's Witnesses Congregation in Fremont; is that correct?

A That is correct.

Q And I am going to be asking you some questions today related to both the events involving the people involved in this case and some organizational questions to help me understand the structure of your religious institution; all right?

A Okay. Fine.

Q If I ask you any question that you don't understand, either because I used words that aren't familiar to you or I garbled the question or you didn't hear it, or if for any reason you are unsure of the question, please ask me to rephrase it or repeat it so that it's clear to you; okay?

A Uh-huh.

Q In a normal conversation we would say uh-huh --

A Yeah. Okay.

Q -- and huh-uh and make those kinds of affirmative or negative sounds and understand each other. In a deposition, because the court reporter on my right is taking down all of our words, we have to Unit.

Do you know whether or not that is the official title of the corporation that you call the Fremont North?

A Yes. We used to use that term "unit," probably back when these bylaws were established, so it probably would be very accurate back then.

Q All right. Do you know what the official name of the corporation is now if it's different?

A I would think it's the same.

Q The corporation was incorporated in 1975, according to the documents that I have received. Does that sound correct to your knowledge?

A That sounds correct.

Q How long have you been an elder in the -- in this congregation?

A Since I moved into the congregation, and I believe it was 1986.

Q Before that time, 1986, did you serve as an elder in any other congregation?

A Yes. Before that time I served in the congregation -- I believe it would be called the Mountain View Congregation and perhaps Central, Central Mountain View.

Q Can you tell me approximately the year in which you first became an elder?

A Approximately 1978.

Q And have you been an elder continuously up to the present time?

A Yes, I have.

Q Is there a general description you can provide me as to the role of the elders in the Jehovah's Witnesses Congregations?

A Yes. I would probably refer you to some Scriptures; for example, Second Peter, Chapter 5, Verse 2, that we would shepherd the flock and we would do it willingly, not grudgingly, not for love of dishonest gain, but eagerly, and neither lording it over those who are God's inheritance.

Q Do you have administrative responsibilities as an elder?

A Could you please explain what you mean by "administrative responsibilities"?

Q Yes. Do you have to perform various jobs or functions that have to do with either keeping records involving dispute resolution between members, other kinds of tasks involving the status or role of members in the congregation?

A By that term, I think I would say yes.

Q Can you give me a description of what responsibilities you have in that general area?

A In that general area the responsibilities I have are as what we call a service overseer. So I would be concerned with the literature that comes into the congregation and its distribution as well as the coverage of our territory in the preaching work, also be concerned about the different Bible studies that are being conducted in the congregation.

Q Are there other elders in the Fremont North Congregation at present?

A Yes.

Q Approximately how many?

A I would say 12.

Q And what is the approximate size of the congregation today?

A About 110.

Q If we were to go back in time to the mid-1990s, do you have an estimate then as to the number of elders, approximately?

A I would estimate eight, but it's just an estimation.

Q And the size of the congregation at that time, approximately 15 to 20 years ago.

A I'm sure those records might be available, but I would hesitate to guess.

Q Do you have a general impression as to whether the membership has grown larger in that specific congregation since the mid-1990s, smaller or is about the same?

A There have certainly been a lot of new ones that have come in but others have moved away, so it might be fair to say that it was around the same.

Q You mentioned the term "service overseer." What is a service overseer?

A A service overseer is a -- an appointment as an -- he must be an elder, and it's an appointment to oversee the departments that I mentioned to you, literature, and we call our -- preaching work is our service to God. So anything that involves the preaching work would be something that I would be quite interested in.

Q To become an elder, is there a process of, I'll call it like a ladder, steps in a ladder that one must go through in preparation for assuming that title and position?

A Well, what we use are the Bible requirements. All of Jehovah's Witnesses, before they're baptized, must take a knowledge, repent, act upon the knowledge, obey what they find from the Scriptures. But in addition to that, elders would be those that reach out for additional responsibilities, and these are outlined -- these qualifications for elders are outlined in First Timothy, Chapter 3.

Q Can you tell me what they are?

A Some of them are, sure.

Qualifications are that they would, first of all, be desirous of a fine work, so it is work-involved. We're not paid for the effort that we put forth, but we do it freely and willingly. And we would not be irreprehensible -- or we would need to be irreprehensible. We would need to be a husband and one wife. We would need to be orderly. We would need to be not given to a lot of wine, not -- and if I had the Bible I could do a little bit more justice to the -- but they're found there in First Timothy, Chapter 3, Verses 1 through, say, 10.

Q Who selects elders?

A The local Body of Elders observes individuals and then we will discuss them as a body, and ultimately we will send a recommendation into the branch office and the traveling brother that assists us at this time would be the circuit overseer, and so we would submit a request for this recommendation to be approved.

Q All right. You used the word "branch office," and I'm not sure what that refers to. Please tell me.

A Okay. Yes. It's -- the worldwide organization of Jehovah's Witnesses has a headquarters which is in New York, and there is where the United States branch happens to be, but also they oversee the entire work, the global work of Jehovah's Witnesses.

Q Is that organization The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York?

Actually let me -- I see you are puzzled. Let me withdraw the question and ask you, back in the mid-1990s, was that organization The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York?

A I -- it might be New York or it might be Pennsylvania. I think it was -- I'm not sure.

Q Fair enough.

A Yeah.

Q Do you as an elder -- strike that. Let me start over.

Have you as an elder recommended other persons to be nominated to the position of elder during your years of service?

A Yes. I have been on the body that has recommended others.

Q And to whom is such a recommendation directed?

A To the branch office.

Q And is the branch office located somewhere other than New York or is it in New York to your understanding?

A It's in New York.

Q Has that process changed during the many years that you have been an elder?

A No.

Q You mentioned the term "circuit overseer," and can you describe for me what a circuit overseer is?

A Yes. He is a traveling elder. He visits -- generally he has a circuit of 20 congregations, and so he would like to visit these twice a year, and we look forward to these visits, and during this time he gives counsel from the branch to the elders, to the ministerial servants, and this counsel is appreciated.

He -- he agrees to travel to the various congregations, and in some cases they house him in maybe a room that they have, and if he has a wife, he and his wife. And in some cases they may have an apartment attached to a Kingdom Hall that they could use, and he does not get any reimburse -- well, he in the branch office.

Q When you use that term "service department," can you tell me what you are referring to?

A Well, just as you asked me service overseer, so I would be concerned about the field service, the ministry in our local congregation. So the branch office would be concerned with the field ministry in the branch that they're overseeing, and in this case it would be the United States branch.

Q Do you understand that the service department back in the mid-1990s was administered by the Watchtower New York corporation?

A That sounds accurate.

Q What do you understand to be the role of the Watchtower Pennsylvania corporation?

A Yeah, that's -- I believe that would be more of the legal corporation of Jehovah's Witnesses. It would be a worldwide organization, different from New York, which would be the branch office that oversees the United States branch.

Q Are there some organizational documents, which would be anything from charts to letters, which explain to elders such as yourself the organizational structure of the various components of the Jehovah's Witnesses in the United States and the world?

A Yes. And they're available basically to the public because we have had articles in our Watchtower magazine that outlines that which are available.

Q One of the services that you perform, as I understand it, is the distribution of various religious literature and tracts; is that correct?

A Yeah, that we produce. Yeah.

Q When you say "we produce," are those produced and supplied to the congregation from some other source than the congregation itself, or are they produced within the congregation?

A By "congregation," do you mean the local congregation?

Q Yes, I do. I'm sorry. Yes. Thank you.

A Yes. We do no printing locally.

Q Who supplies the local congregation with the literature that is distributed in service?

A It would be the branch office.

Q There is an organization that I have received some documents from, through your counsel, called the Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, also located in New York State.

Are you familiar with that organization?

A Yes.

Q Is it correct that that organization was formed after you already had become an elder?

A Yes.

Q What do you understand to be the purpose of the Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses organization?

A I think that term denotes more of an accurate description than The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society for those that are looking out -- looking over Jehovah's people throughout the United States branch.

Q Is it the same organization as The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society with a different name, to your understanding, or is it a separate organization, corporation?

A To my understanding, it replaces the name of The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York.

Q To your understanding, do both organizations, The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York and the Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, continue to exist at present?

A What was the first one? Watchtower --

Q Of New York.

A Of New York.

Q Bible and Tract Society of New York and Christian Congregation.

A I don't know.

Q Fair enough. Thank you. We talked about the branch office. As you understand it, is the branch office now administered by the Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses or by The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York?

A Could you rephrase that question?

Q Yes. As you understand it, is the branch office that we talked about --

A The Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses you're referring to?

Q Yes.

A Okay.

Q Does -- is the branch office a function administered by the Christian Congregation or by Watchtower Bible and Tract of New York at present?

A I -- it seems like you're ask -- not asking the question correctly.

Q All right. Explain, then, how the -- the interplay of these corporations as regards to the branch office works for me.

A Yes. It's my understanding that The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania would be the worldwide oversight of the branch office, which is the Christian Congregation of Jehovah's

Witnesses New York.

Q Are you familiar with the term ministerial servant?

A Yes.

Q Did you act as a ministerial servant before you were an elder?

A Yes.

Q Is it customary for an individual before becoming an elder to serve as a ministerial servant?

A Yes.

Q How do the responsibilities of ministerial servant differ from those of elder?

A The duties of a ministerial servant would be more nonteaching, non -- they would be more of a service -- not field service but of a -- a service-oriented, such as maybe bookkeeping, keeping track of the inventory of literature that comes in and goes out, the maps that we have to work our territory locally. They would assist in helping make sure that the coverage was done systematically and in an orderly fashion.

They also may be used as attendants in the congregation to seat different ones or maybe sometimes we have like microphones that in some congregations we use, which is the case in ours, so they'd be used to pass the microphones and other nonteaching, non-shepherding duties in the congregation.

Q Are ministerial servants appointed?

A They are.

Q By whom?

A The recommendation for their appointment is sent in by the local Body of Elders, and they explain why they feel this man qualifies for such a position, and then it is approved by the branch office service department.

Q Pardon me for asking what might seem like a very obvious question, but are women allowed to serve as elders?

A No.

Q Are women allowed to serve as ministerial servants?

A No. Well, can I qualify that?

Q Please.

A Let's say there were no qualified males to serve in that position. Then a sister could do the duties of that, but she would wear a head covering as a sign that she is doing something that normally would be done by a brother, but they're not appointed as ministerial servants or elders.

Q Are there other administrative or service

A We moved into the Kingdom Hall in 1986, and I would estimate two years from that point Jonathan Kendrick came to the Kingdom Hall. I am just guessing.

Q Did Mr. Kendrick ever serve as a ministerial servant?

A Yes, he did.

Q And do you recall whether or not you were involved in the decision to have Mr. Kendrick appointed as a ministerial servant?

A At that time I was on the Body of Elders. We reviewed it as a body, and I was part of the body that sent in a recommendation that he serve.

Q Do you recall, again, the approximate time frame?

A No, I don't -- I don't know.

Q Had Mr. Kendrick been a member of the congregation for a year or two before he became a ministerial servant, or something in that neighborhood?

A Yes. It seems longer than that even. It should be.

Q Do you recall, when Mr. Kendrick first became a member of the congregation, whether or not he was married?

A When he was first studying the Bible, he was not married. He was living with a woman.

Q All right. Did he become married during the time that he was a member of the Fremont North Congregation?

A No. He got married and cleaned up his life before he was baptized.

Q And when you say "cleaned up his life," what are you referring to?

A To the fact that he was living immorally with a woman and then he legalized that by getting married.

Q Was the woman that he married Evelyn?

A Yes.

Q And do you recall the approximate year that they would have been married?

A Well, I would think, if my years -- I'd say '88, '89, something around there.

Q Am I correct that Mr. Kendrick would have had to have been married to Evelyn before he was eligible to become a ministerial servant?

A Or break off the relationship with her. And even be baptized. Even before he could be baptized, he had to do that.

Q Okay.

A Yeah.

Q Did Evelyn have any children to your knowledge?

A Yes. She had a daughter.

Q Do you remember the daughter's name?

A Andrea.

Q Do you recall Andrea's approximate age during the time that Mr. Kendrick and Evelyn were married, or the range of ages?

A It would be a guess, but I would say in her early teens to probably high school.

Q Did Mr. Kendrick continue to serve as a ministerial servant during the remainder of the time that he was a member of the Fremont North Congregation?

A I believe he was removed as a ministerial servant from the Fremont North Congregation.

Q And what does it mean to be removed as a ministerial servant?

A No longer qualified to serve.

Q Who makes that determination?

A The Body of Elders.

Q And is that a determination that must be approved by the service branch?

A Yes.

Q How is the recommendation of the Body of Elders that a ministerial servant be removed communicated to the service branch?

A Generally by letter.

Q Do you know whether or not that was the case involving Mr. Kendrick?

A I believe it was, yes.

Q Did you participate in the drafting of that letter?

A No.

Q Is the letter a form letter or is it a narrative, if you will?

A Narrative.

Q Why was Mr. Kendrick removed?

MR. McCABE: Object to that. Calls for privileged information. I'll instruct the witness not to answer the question.

MR. SIMONS: What specific privilege?

MR. McCABE: The clergy-communicant privilege.

MR. SIMONS: Any others?

MR. McCABE: Well, that whole section. Confidentiality of the clergy-penitent privilege.

MR. SIMONS: All right.

Q I'm going to ask you a series of some additional questions related to the removal of Mr. Kendrick as a ministerial servant, and it may very well be that counsel has some objections to some or all of these questions, so pause before answering to give him an opportunity to make any objections he might have; all right?

A Uh-huh.

Q Was the decision to remove Mr. Kendrick -- I'm sorry -- to recommend the removal of Mr. Kendrick as a ministerial servant made by more than one individual?

MR. McCABE: I'm going to object to that question. Same grounds.

MR. SIMONS: All right.

Q Is there a process within the Jehovah's Witnesses in which there is an investigatory or judicial type of committee?

A Yes.

Q Does that committee have a name or that process have a name?

A It has a name. Let's say it would be an investigating committee of two brothers.

Q And has that been part of the procedural practices of the congregations during the entire time that you have been an elder?

A Yes.

Q And during your years of service in Fremont, has such an investigation committee existed?

A The investigative committee is developed based on the circumstances. So maybe an individual felt comfortable coming to me and confessing a sin, or that they were party to a sin or that they heard of a sin. So it might be good for me to be on that investigating committee because they spoke to me. I would be a natural choice, but I wouldn't do it by myself. There would be another brother with me.

Q All right. Is the existence of such an investigation committee something that is communicated to all the members of the congregation?

A No.

Q And let me make my question clear. I don't think it was.

Without regard to a specific investigation, is generally the ability of the elders to have an investigation committee under certain circumstances something that is taught to all of the members or explained to the members?

A Could you rephrase that question, please?

Q Yes. Were members customarily told that the Body of Elders can under certain circumstances convene an investigation committee? In other words, was the process known to the members that a judicial committee could be or investigation committee could be convened if circumstances so required?

A I believe that's in our publications.

Q So would I be correct in saying that an individual member who brought to an elder's attention a specific situation that would be of such a serious nature that an investigation would follow would customarily be aware of the power of the elders to convene an investigation?

A I believe I understand your question, so to answer that question, the congregation would expect the elders to investigate an allegation of serious wrongdoing.

Q And certainly sexual abuse of a child would fall under that category of serious wrongdoing?

A Yes.

Q Hold on one second for the --

A Okay.

Q -- siren there. All right.

It's not meant to be a hint on any specific question or answer.

THE VIDEOGRAPHER: I need to repair a microphone real quick.

MR. SIMONS: There is a technical issue here.

THE VIDEOGRAPHER: We're good. You're still on.

BY MR. SIMONS:

Q What was it that led to the judicial investigation of Mr. Kendrick during the time that he was a ministerial servant?

MR. McCABE: I'm going to object to that question on the same basis.

MR. SIMONS: Can we stipulate that any questions that I might pose to Mr. Abrahamson regarding the subject of communications involving Mr. Kendrick related to the judicial investigation or related to the action to remove him would draw the same objection that you have posed to the first few questions?

MR. McCABE: Yes.

MR. SIMONS: May we further stipulate that pending some judicial determination of the propriety of those questions that I can reserve that subject matter for further proceedings?

MR. McCABE: Yes.

BY MR. SIMONS:

Q Again, these may fall under that same category, so give your counsel time to object.

Did you speak to Evelyn Kendrick concerning any allegations involving sexual abuse of her daughter Andrea by Mr. Kendrick, Jonathan Kendrick?

MR. McCABE: Objection. Instruct the witness not to answer on the same basis.

MR. SIMONS: Again, can we agree that any questions involving reports or communications from Evelyn Kendrick would fall under the umbrella of your objections?

MR. McCABE: Yes.

BY MR. SIMONS:

Q Did you at any time notify any secular law enforcement agency of any information concerning possible sexual abuse of children by Mr. Kendrick?

A I did not.

Q Do you know whether anyone within the congregation Body of Elders did so?

A I am not aware of anybody doing so, no.

Q What was the policy that was in place in the mid-1990s regarding reporting possible sexual abuse of a child by an adult to secular law enforcement agencies?

A I'm -- I don't know for sure. I would have to look it up. I know currently we are to call the communications -- but was there any communication between yourself and anyone from the legal department back in the 1990s concerning Mr. Jonathan Kendrick?

MR. McCABE: I'm going to object to that. Same basis. I'm going to object to all communications from him to New York.

MR. SIMONS: Okay. My question specifically excludes any content of any communications. I want to only ask the very specific question of whether or not there were any communications at that time concerning Mr. Kendrick.

MR. McCABE: Well, normally I wouldn't have an objection to that, but in this case I do have an objection to that because then it assumes that there was some investigatory committee involving Mr. Kendrick and that communication was a result of that, and I don't think that we have got that into evidence at this point in time, so I'm going to object.

MR. SIMONS: All right. Let me ask about the foundational matter.

Q Was a judicial investigation committee convened with regard to Mr. Jonathan Kendrick prior to his removal as a ministerial servant?

MR. McCABE: I'm going to object on the same basis of communicant-clergy privilege and instruct the witness not to answer.

BY MR. SIMONS:

Q Without providing me any names or other identifying information as to individuals, has there been, during the time that you have served as an elder in the congregation in Fremont, any report received by the Body of Elders or any member thereof, to your knowledge, concerning sexual abuse of a child by an adult?

MR. McCABE: I'm going to object to that too on the basis of the clergy-communicant privilege.

MR. SIMONS: Okay. I have a number of additional follow-up questions regarding Mr. Kendrick during the time that he was a member of the North Congregation, Fremont North Congregation, that are related in varying degrees to this underlying subject matter that is the subject of your objection. I'd like to reserve that questioning, if you will so agree, until the determination of the issues that you have raised objection to.

Is that acceptable?

MR. McCABE: Yes. Can we take just a short break?

MR. SIMONS: We can.

congregation that he is reproved, he's been reproved by the congregation committee.

Q And what does the term "reproved" refer to as you are using it there?

A Disciplined.

Q When a person is removed from an office, such as ministerial servant, is the congregation advised that that individual -- and again, I'm talking about the membership advised -- that that individual no longer is serving as a ministerial servant?

A Yes.

Q Is the congregation told -- again, the members told -- why that individual is no longer serving as a ministerial servant?

A No.

Q During your many years of service as an elder, has there been any change in any of those processes that we have just discussed, the notification of disfellowship or reproval or of removal from an office and the fact that the reason for such action is not disclosed? Has that been the standard practice during all your years of service?

A Yes.

Q Was there any inquiry from a congregation in Oakley to the Fremont North Congregation concerning

Mr. Kendrick of which you are aware?

MR. McCABE: I'm going to object. It's going to call for or elicit testimony which could violate the patient -- I mean clergy-penitent privilege.

MR. SIMONS: Let me follow up on that objection, which I assume is accompanied by an instruction not to answer --

MR. McCABE: Yes.

MR. SIMONS: -- is it? All right.

Q Are the communications that one congregation receives concerning a new member from that member's former congregation considered to be confidential as you understand it? In other words, is it information that is available to the members or elders of both congregations?

A It would be considered confidential.

Q And such a communication, if it came from an elder of another congregation, would the information that is permitted to be disclosed to that new congregation, would that information include the reason for a disfellowshipping?

A It likely would.

Q Have you learned that Mr. Kendrick was convicted of felony child abuse and sent to a prison earlier. This refers to chairman of the judicial committee. Is that a different role than coordinator of the Body of Elders?

A Yes.

Q Who is the chairman of a judicial committee?

A Once a judicial committee is formed by the Body of Elders, the Body of Elders will choose the chairman.

Q Might that chairman be a different individual for a different judicial committee?

A Absolutely. Yeah.

Q In other words, it's not a permanent role?

A No.

Q It's a role limited only to that individual judicial committee?

A Exactly.

Q Who do you recall being members of any judicial committee that may have heard any issues revolving around or related to Jonathan Kendrick?

A That would be confidential.

MR. McCABE: I'll object to that.

MR. SIMONS: And the objection is?

MR. McCABE: Clergy-penitent privilege.

MR. SIMONS: Okay. Is there an instruction not to answer?

MR. McCABE: Yes.

(Document referred to herein marked for identification Exhibit No. 5)

BY MR. SIMONS:

Q Let's take a look at Exhibit 5. Do you recall receiving this letter?

A I can't honestly say that I remember receiving this exact letter, but the reminder being confidential, I'm sure I read over the letter.

Q Was there some discussion within the Body of Elders in the North Fremont Congregation of this letter when it was received?

A That I would not know -- remember.

Q Do you remember any such discussion about avoiding lawsuits that may result from, as the correspondence states on page 2, paragraph 1, misuse of the tongue?

A Okay. So I thought this letter was regarding confidentiality. So I haven't had an opportunity to look through the letter, so some of my answers would maybe be erroneous.

Q Okay. Why don't we take a second and allow you to review the letter.

A Fine.

Q And let's first of all see if it causes a

CHARISSA W., et al.,

Plaintiffs,

v.

WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, et al.

Defendants.

Case No.: 26-22191
JCCP No. 4374

RULING ON SUBMITTED MOTION TO COMPEL PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS

Plaintiffs' Motion To Compel Production Of Documents came on for hearing on August 31, 2005. The court, having read and considered the papers and heard oral argument, took the matter under submission and now rules as follows:

Plaintiff's motion to compel production of documents is GRANTED in part and continued in part to allow for the production of an attorney-client privilege log.

Although defendants raised a number of objections when responding to plaintiffs' request for production of documents, they address only two of those objections in opposing plaintiffs' motion to compel: the penitential communication privilege and the attorney-client privilege, which the court will discuss in more detail below. As to the other objections not discussed by defendants, the court finds the objections are not well taken. The requested discovery requests are not overbroad, are relevant, and are not barred by Serbian East Orthodox Diocese v. Milivojevich (1976) 426 U.S. 696.

1. Penitential Privilege

Evidence Code section 1032 provides:

> As used in this article, "penitential communication" means a communication made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who, in the course of the discipline or practice of the clergy member's church, denomination, or organization, is authorized or accustomed to hear those communications and, under the discipline or tenets of his or her church, denomination, or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret.

Defendants object to the production of a number of documents requested by plaintiffs on the ground that they are protected by the penitential communication privilege contained in Evidence Code section 1032. This court finds that the privilege does not apply to communications between the alleged abusers and the Judicial Committee. The evidence presented by both sides establishes that communications with the Judicial Committee do not fall within the scope of the privilege. First, it is clear that the Judicial Committee's purpose is to investigate sins for which disfellowship is a potential penalty. This is established not only by the deposition excerpts provided by plaintiffs, but by the Watchtower publication provided by defendants in connection with the objections to plaintiffs' evidence ("Judicial action is necessary only if a gross sin has been committed that could lead to disfellowshipping" p. 18.) Second, the privilege does not apply because the Judicial Committee was under no duty to keep the communications private. In fact, the evidence establishes that the Judicial Committee was required to communicate information it obtained regarding potential cases of child molestation to the Watchtower Society Headquarters.

Because the penitential communication privilege does not apply, within 20 days defendants shall produce all documents for which it previously asserted this privilege.

2. Attorney-client privilege

Defendants have not produced a privilege log for those few documents they apparently claim are protected by the attorney client privilege. Neither the plaintiffs nor the court can adequately address the objection without a privilege log. Defendants shall serve a privilege log on plaintiffs within 10 days. Plaintiffs may thereafter file and a supplemental brief addressing the log within 10 days. The court will then issue a written ruling on the matter.

SEPARATE STATEMENT IN SUPPORT OF MOTION OF PLAINTIFF JANE DOE TO COMPEL ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS AT DEPOSITION OF GARY ABRAHAMSON AND FOR SANCTIONS [C.C.P. §2025.480]

Date:	9/29/11
Time:	3:00 p.m.
Dept:	22
Reservation No:	1212207

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff Jane Doe presents the following specific questions as the subject of the Motion to Compel answers from witness Gary Abrahamson:

I. THE REMOVAL OF JONATHAN KENDRICK AS A MINISTERIAL SERVANT.

QUESTION:

Q. Why was Mr. Kendrick removed?

OBJECTION:

A. MR. McCABE: Object to that. Calls for privileged information. I'll instruct the witness not to answer the question.
Q. MR. SIMONS: What specific privilege?
A. MR: McCABE: The clergy-communicant privilege.
Q. MR. SIMONS: Any others?

A. MR. McCABE: Well, that whole section. Confidentiality of the clergy-penitent privilege.

(Deposition 57:14-23).

ARGUMENT:

The privileges contained in the Evidence Code are exclusive and Courts are not free to create new privileges as a matter of judicial policy. (Scottsdale Insurance Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal.App.4th 263, at 272; Evidence Code §911). The Clergy-Penitent Privilege covers only "a penitential communication". (Evidence Code §§1030, 1031, and 1032). A "penitential communication" applies only to communications "made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who,... under the disciplines or tenets of his or her church, denomination, or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret" (§1032). Any communication which is known in advance as "likely to be shared with more than one person, is not subject to the criteria of §1032 (Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 417, 444-5). The Clergy-Penitent Privilege is waived if a holder of the privilege discloses a significant part of the communication to a third party or consents to such disclosure. (Evidence Code §912(a); Roman Catholic Archbishop, supra, 131 Cal.App.4th at 445, Fn.14). "Third parties" include other administrators within the Institution of which the Clergy is a member. (Roman Catholic Archbishop, supra, 131 Cal.App.4th 445-6). A Clergy-Penitent communication which the parties are aware is likely to be transmitted to third persons is not "confidential" and is outside the privilege of §1032. (Id, 131 Cal.App.4th 445-6).

The Removal of Mr. Kendrick as a Ministerial Servant is an administrative decision, made by corporate agents. (Depo. 56:1-7; 16-25). The process does not involve "confidential communications" as defined by Evidence Code §1032 as multiple third persons at both the Congregation and New York corporate level are involved in the entire process. (Roman Catholic Archbishop, supra, at 445-6). The decision making that is the subject of the question does not call for any content or 1032 communications, but rather on administrative decision making.

II. THE JUDICIAL INVESTIGATION OF JONATHAN KENDRICK.

QUESTION:

Q. What was it that led to the judicial investigation of Mr. Kendrick during the time that he was a ministerial servant?

OBJECTION:

A. MR. McCABE: I'm going to object to that question on the same basis.

(Deposition 61:6-10).

ARGUMENT:

The privileges contained in the Evidence Code are exclusive and Courts are not free to create new privileges as a matter of judicial policy. (Scottsdale Insurance Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal.App.4th 263, at 272; Evidence Code §911). The Clergy-Penitent Privilege covers only "a penitential communication". (Evidence Code §§1030, 1031, and 1032). A "penitential communication" applies only to communications "made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who,... under the disciplines or tenets of his or her church, denomination, or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret" (§1032). Any communication which is known in advance as "likely to be shared with more than one person, is not subject to the criteria of §1032 (Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 417, 444-5). The Clergy-Penitent Privilege is waived if a holder of the privilege discloses a significant part of the communication or consents to such disclosure. (Evidence Code §912(a); Roman Catholic Archbishop, supra, 131 Cal.App.4th at 445, Fn.14). "Third parties" include other administrators within the Institution of which the Clergy is a member. (Roman Catholic Archbishop, supra, 131 Cal.App.4th 445-6). A Clergy-Penitent communication which the parties are aware is likely to be transmitted to third persons is not "confidential" and is outside the privilege of §1032. (Id, 131 Cal.App.4th 445-6).

This question does not call for any "confidential communications" as defined in §1032. Mr. Abrahamson agreed that members reporting "serious wrongdoing", including a sexual abuse of a child, expected an investigation which involved third parties. (Depo. 58:15-59:1; 59:24-60:5; and 60:6-18). Such communications are not "confidential". (Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court, supra, at 444-5).

III. THE EVELYN KENDRICK REPORT.

QUESTION:

Q. Did you speak to Evelyn Kendrick concerning any allegations involving sexual abuse of her daughter Andrea by Mr. Kendrick, Jonathan Kendrick?

OBJECTION:

A. MR. McCABE: Objection. Instruct the witness not to answer on the same basis.

(Deposition 62:2-6).

ARGUMENT:

The privileges contained in the Evidence Code are exclusive and Courts are not free to create new privileges as a matter of judicial policy. (Scottsdale Insurance Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal.App.4th 263, at 272; Evidence Code §911). The Clergy-Penitent Privilege covers only "a penitential communication". (Evidence Code §§1030, 1031, and 1032). A "penitential communication" applies only to communications "made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who,... under the disciplines or tenets of his or her church, denomination, or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret" (§1032). Any communication which is known in advance as "likely to be shared with more than one person, is not subject to the criteria of §1032 (Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 417, 444-5). The Clergy-Penitent Privilege is waived if a holder of the privilege discloses a significant part of the communication or consents to such disclosure. (Evidence Code §912(a); Roman Catholic Archbishop, supra, 131 Cal.App.4th at 445, Fn.14). "Third parties" include other administrators within the Institution of which the Clergy is a member. (Roman Catholic Archbishop, supra, 131 Cal.App.4th 445-6). A Clergy-Penitent communication which the parties are aware is likely to be transmitted to third persons is not "confidential" and is outside the privilege of §1032. (Id, 131 Cal.App.4th 445-6).

This question does not call for any "confidential communications" as defined in §1032. Mr. Abrahamson agreed that members reporting "serious wrongdoing", including sexual abuse of a child, expected an investigation which involved third parties. (Depo. 58-15-59:1; 59:24-60:5; and 60:6-18). Such communications are not "confidential". (Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court, supra, at 444-5).

IV. JUDICIAL INVESTIGATION COMMITTEE RE KENDRICK REMOVAL.

QUESTION:

Q. Was a judicial investigation committee convened with regard to Mr. Jonathan Kendrick prior to his removal as a ministerial servant?

OBJECTION:

A. MR. McCABE: I'm going to object on the same basis of communicant-clergy privilege and instruct the witness not to answer.

(Deposition 64:22-65:2)

ARGUMENT:

The privileges contained in the Evidence Code are exclusive and Courts are not free to create new privileges as a matter of judicial policy. (Scottsdale Insurance Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal.App.4th 263, at 272; Evidence Code §911). The Clergy-Penitent Privilege covers only "a penitential communication". (Evidence Code §§1030, 1031, and 1032). A "penitential communication" applies only to communications "made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who,... under the disciplines or tenets of his or her church, denomination, or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret" (§1032). The removal of Mr. Kendrick as a Ministerial Servant is an administrative decision, made by corporate agents. (56:1-7; 16-25). The process does not involve "confidential communications" as defined by Evidence Code §1032 as multiple third persons at both the Congregation and New York corporate level are involved in the entire process. (Roman Catholic Archbishop supra, at 445-6). The decision making that is the subject of the question does not call for any content or 1032 communications, but rather on administrative decision making.

V. REPORTS OF SEXUAL ABUSE.

QUESTION:

Q. Without providing me any names or other identifying information as to individuals, has there been, during the time that you have served as an elder in the congregation in Fremont, any report received by the Body of Elders or any member thereof, to your knowledge, concerning sexual abuse of a child by an adult?

OBJECTION:

A. MR. McCABE: I'm going to object to that too on the basis of the clergy-communicant privilege.

(Deposition 65:4-12)

ARGUMENT:

The privileges contained in the Evidence Code are exclusive and Courts are not free to create new privileges as a matter of judicial policy. (Scottsdale Insurance Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal.App.4th 263, at 272; Evidence Code §911). The Clergy-Penitent Privilege covers only "a penitential communication". (Evidence Code §§1030, 1031, and 1032). A "penitential communication" applies only to communications "made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who,... under the disciplines or tenets of his or her church, denomination, or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret" (§1032). Any communication which is known in advance as "likely to be shared with more than one person, is not subject to the criteria of §1032 (Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 417, 444-5). The Clergy-Penitent Privilege is waived if a holder of the privilege discloses a significant part of the communication or consents to such disclosure. (Evidence Code §912(a); Roman Catholic Archbishop, supra, 131 Cal.App.4th at 445, Fn.14). "Third parties" include other administrators within the Institution of which the Clergy is a member. (Roman Catholic Archbishop, supra, 131 Cal.App.4th 445-6). A Clergy-Penitent communication which the parties are aware is likely to be transmitted to third persons is not "confidential" and is outside the privilege of §1032. (Id, 131 Cal.App.4th 445-6).

It is the doctrine of Jehovah's Witnesses, and the expectation of members, that reports of serious wrongdoing, including sexual abuse of a child will be investigated by a Judicial Committee, involving third persons. (Depo. 58-15-59:1; 59:24-60:5; and 60:6-18). Such conversations are not "confidential". (Roman Catholic Archbishop, supra, at 444-5).

VI. COMMUNICATIONS WITH OAKLEY RE JONATHAN KENDRICK.

QUESTION:

Q. Was there any inquiry from a congregation in Oakley to the Fremont North Congregation concerning Mr. Kendrick of which you are aware?

OBJECTION:

A. MR. McCABE: I'm going to object. It's going to call for or elicit testimony which could violate the patient – I mean clergy-penitent privilege.

(Deposition 85:24-86:5)

ARGUMENT:

The privileges contained in the Evidence Code are exclusive and Courts are not free to create new privileges as a matter of judicial policy. (Scottsdale Insurance Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal.App.4th 263, at 272; Evidence Code §911). The Clergy-Penitent Privilege covers only "a penitential communication". (Evidence Code §§1030, 1031, and 1032). A "penitential communication" applies only to communications "made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who,... under the disciplines or tenets of his or her church, denomination, or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret" (§1032).

The communications sought in this question are between congregations. No "confidential communication" between a penitent and clergy are included, as all the responsive answers would address third party administrative communications only.

VII. JUDICIAL COMMITTEE MAKEUP.

QUESTION:

Q. Who do you recall being members of any judicial committee that may have heard any issues revolving around or related to Jonathan Kendrick?

OBJECTION:

A. That would be confidential.
MR. McCABE: I'll object to that.
MR. SIMONS: And the objection is?
MR. McCABE: Clergy-penitent privilege.
MR. SIMONS: Okay. Is there an instruction not to answer?
MR. McCABE: Yes.

(Deposition 93:17-94:1)

ARGUMENT:

The privileges contained in the Evidence Code are exclusive and Courts are not free to create new privileges as a matter of judicial policy. (Scottsdale Insurance Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal.App.4th 263, at 272; Evidence Code §911). The Clergy-Penitent Privilege covers only "a penitential communication". (Evidence Code §§1030, 1031, and 1032). A "penitential communication" applies only to communications "made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who,... under the disciplines or tenets of his or her church, denomination, or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret" (§1032).

This question seeks identity of defendant's administrative personnel, not the content of any communications. Section 1032 does not apply to the identities of Administrative Persons.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

In this action, plaintiff Jane Doe seeks damages against the local and national entities of the Jehovah's Witnesses Church for the consequences of childhood sexual abuse committed by Jonathan Kendrick in the mid-1990s. Plaintiff noticed and took the deposition of Gary Abrahamson, an Elder of her former North Fremont Congregation. Relevant excerpts of the deposition, attached as Exhibit "1" to the Declaration of Richard Simons in Support of this Motion, elicited the following facts:

1. Gary Abrahamson is an elder of the North Congregation of Fremont, where the abuse occurred. (Depo. 11:2-5);

2. Mr. Abrahamson has been an Elder in Fremont since 1986 (Depo. 13:15-18);

3. Elders have the primary administrative responsibilities within the Congregation (14:15-24);

4. Elders serve together with other Elders in a Body of Elders (15:9-13);

5. Elders are selected by the local Body of Elders, but must be approved by the "Branch Office", a separate entity located at the Corporate Headquarters of Jehovah's Witnesses in New York (17:17-18:8);

6. Jehovah's Witnesses also have "Ministerial Servants", who hold positions of administrative responsibility within the Congregation (26:2-27:2);

7. The appointment of a Ministerial Servant requires Corporate approval by the Watchtower New York Corporation Service Branch (22:2-13; 27:3-10);

8. A Ministerial Servant can be Removed by recommendation by the Body of Elders, and approval of the Service Branch (56:12-25);

9. The Board of Elders recommends Removal of a Ministerial Servant in a narrative letter communicated to the Service Branch (57:1-13);

10. Jonathan Kendrick was a Ministerial Servant of the Jehovah's Witnesses North Fremont Congregation (54:5-13);

11. Jonathan Kendrick was removed as a Ministerial Servant from the Fremont North Congregation, which means he was determined to be no longer qualified to serve (56:16-20);

12. The Body of Elders determines that a Ministerial Servant is no longer qualified to serve, but the determination must be approved by the Corporate Service Branch of Watchtower New York (56:18-25);

13. The recommendation of the Body of Elders that a Ministerial Servant be Removed is communicated to the Service Branch in New York by a narrative letter, and that process was followed in the removal of Mr. Kendrick (56:1-7);

14. The Jehovah's Witnesses has a Judicial Investigating Committee (Depo. 58:15-59:1);

15. The existence of the Judicial Investigating Committee is contained in Jehovah's Witnesses publications. (59:24:60:5);

16. Jehovah's Witnesses members expect the Judicial Investigating Committee to investigate allegations of serious wrongdoing, including sexual abuse of a child (60:6-18);

17. Mr. Kendrick married Evelyn Kendrick in approximately 1988 (54:23-55:14);

18. Evelyn Kendrick had a daughter, Andrea, from a prior marriage (56:2-11).

During Mr. Abrahamson's deposition, he was asked questions about Administrative actions and information involving Mr. Kendrick.

The questions all were objected to on the grounds of Clergy-Penitent privilege and Mr. Abrahamson instructed not to answer. Seven questions are before the Court in this Motion. They were directed to Mr. Kendrick's Administrative record, Administrative Communications, and actions involving Mr. Kendrick, his Judicial Investigation history, to reports from members of sexual abuse of children, and to specific reports of sexual abuse of children by Mr. Kendrick.

As shown below, the statutory Clergy-Penitent privilege does not apply to any of the questions. The Motion to Compel should be granted, and the questions answers, together with responses to reasonable follow-up questions.

I. THE COURT HAS THE AUTHORITY TO COMPEL FURTHER ANSWERS TO DEPOSITION QUESTIONS.

If a deponent fails to answer any question at deposition, the party seeking discovery may move the Court for an Order compelling an answer. (C.C.P. §2025.480(a)). Such a Motion must be accompanied by a Meet and Confer Declaration and this Motion is accompanied by such a Declaration from plaintiff's counsel. (2025.480(b)). Plaintiff is required to file a Separate Statement by California Rule of Court 3.1345, and the Separate Statement is filed with this Motion.

A party or attorney who unsuccessfully opposes a Motion to Compel an answer, without substantial justification, shall be sanctioned. (2025.480(f)).

In this matter, plaintiff has lodged an advance copy of the transcript of the deposition. Plaintiff will, not less than five days prior to the hearing on this Motion, lodge with the Court a Certified Copy of the stenographic transcript and of the video recording, as required by §2025.480(d).

II. GOOD CAUSE EXISTS FOR DISCOVERY OF THE INFORMATION SOUGHT IN THE RELEVANT DEPOSITION QUESTIONS.

The deposition questions concern issues arising from the notice to Jehovah's Witness administrative management, both at the local and national level, of sexual misconduct with minors by Jonathan Kendrick. The subject questions also address specific managerial actions taken with regard to Mr. Kendrick, including his removal as a "Ministerial Servant" in 1993, prior to the sexual abuse of plaintiff. The information contained in the questions at issue also are relevant to the policies, practices, and procedures of the Jehovah's Witnesses Corporations with regard to the protection of minors, including plaintiff, from sexual abuse, and the apparent corporate policy of maintaining complete secrecy from its members of reports and findings concerning perpetrators of childhood sexual abuse. While the information specifically addressing Mr. Kendrick prior to his sexual abuse of plaintiff is relevant on the issue of notice, information obtained subsequently is also relevant to establish the corporate policies, procedures, and practices of defendants, both as to issues of negligence, and as to possible amendment of the pleadings to claim punitive damages, which in actions against religious corporations requires a specific Motion. (C.C.P. §425.14). Section 425.14 specifically states "nothing in this section is intended to affect the plaintiff's right to discover evidence on the issue of punitive or exemplary damages."

III. THE SCOPE OF CLERGY COMMUNICATION PRIVILEGE IS LIMITED BY STATUTE.

A penitential communication "means a communication made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who, in the course of the discipline or practice of the clergy member's church, denomination, organization, is authorized or accustomed to hear those communications and, under the discipline or tenants of his or her church, denomination, or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret." (Evid. Code 1032).

The key elements of a penitential communication are that no third person is aware of the communication, and the clergy member has a duty to keep those communications secret. The party claiming a privilege normally has the burden of showing that the evidence it seeks to suppress is within the terms of the statute (Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court, (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 417, at 441).

Not every statement made to a clergy member is within the definition of "Confidential Communications" of Evidence Code Section 1032. The statements must be intended to be made in confidence, and made to one who has a duty to keep them secret. (Roman Catholic Archbishop, supra., 131 Cal. App. 4th at 443-4). The knowledge or expectation that the communication will be shared with a third party- including other clergy or church administrators- defeats the claim of privilege because such communications are not meant to be kept secret, and are expected to be shared with third persons. (Roman Catholic Archbishop, supra, 131 Cal.App.4th at 444-5).

In this case, the only communications from members asked about were reports of sexual abuse of minors by Jonathan Kendrick or others generally. Mr. Abrahamson specifically testified that such communications would be expected by members to be passed on to third persons in a Judicial Committee for investigation, (Depo. 57:15-58:1; 58:24-59:18), and are therefore not "kept secret" from any and all third persons. The balance of the questions involved Administrative matters, not communications to clergy at all.

IV. NONE OF THE QUESTIONS AT ISSUE INVADE ANY CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNCIATIONS.

The questions sought do not invade any confidential communication privilege. The questions call for information about administrative actions (or non-confidential reports) regarding Mr. Kendrick. Question I asks the reason for his removal as a Ministerial Servant. Question II asks the reason for a judicial investigation of Mr. Kendrick. Question III inquired about specific reports of sexual abuse made against Mr. Kendrick which a member would expect to be followed-up on by a Judicial Investigation Committee. Question IV asks about the existence of a Judicial Investigation. Question V asks about all reports of sexual abuse of children at North Fremont which is relevant to the policies, procedures, information, and prior reports of sexual abuse, without disclosure of individual identities, of the Congregation. Question VI asks about communications between Congregations about Mr. Kendrick. Question VII asks about the individuals serving on the Judicial Committee.

V. SANCTIONS ARE APPROPRIATE IN THIS CASE.

The Court "shall impose a monetary sanction" against any party who unsuccessfully opposes a Motion to Compel, unless it finds that one subject of the sanction acted with substantial justification or other circumstances making the imposition of the sanction unjust (2031.310(h)). In this case, communications which are clearly not between a clergy and penitent are objected to as clergy penitent privilege. Questions which do not call for any communication content were objected to under the privilege. Administrative matters regarding Jonathan Kendrick which did not ask for any communications at all between members and administration were objected to under the privilege. Previous court rulings on this subject have advised the defendants that their position is not well taken or supported in law. (Simons Dec., Ex. 2). Plaintiff's counsel has been required to expend both time and filing fees to obtain discovery to which plaintiff is legitimately entitled (See Simons Dec.¶). Sanctions in the amount of $1441 are appropriate.

ASSIGNED FOR ALL PURPOSES TO JUDGE ROBERT McGUINESS, DEPARTMENT 22

MEET AND CONFER DECLARATION OF COUNSEL RICHARD SIMONS IN SUPPORT OF MOTION OF PLAINTIFF JANE DOE TO COMPEL ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS AT DEPOSITION OF GARY ABRAHAMSON AND FOR SANCTIONS [C.C.P. §2025.480]

Date:	9/29/11
Time:	3:00 p.m.
Dept:	22
Reservation No:	1212207

I, Richard J. Simons, hereby declare:

1. That I am an attorney at law licensed to practice before all Courts of the State of California and am the attorney for the plaintiff in the above-entitled action.

2. That the Complaint in this matter alleges that plaintiff Jane Doe, now an adult under the age of 26, was sexually molested and abused during the time that she was a child by defendant Jonathan Kendrick. Mr. Kendrick is alleged to have been a volunteer leader, and member of the Jehovah's Witnesses North Congregation in Fremont. In the course of discovery, I noticed and took the deposition of Gary Abrahamson on August 23, 2011. Mr. Abrahamson had been identified as, and confirmed when he testified that he was, an Elder at the North Congregation in Fremont during all of the relevant time periods, including to the present time. Elders are the individuals entrusted with the administration of the congregation. A true and correct copy of the preliminary transcript of the deposition of Mr. Abrahamson, as to those portions at issue in this Motion, is attached as Exhibit "1" to this Declaration. A Certified Copy of the transcript will be lodged at or prior to the time of hearing, but has not yet been prepared by the CSR.

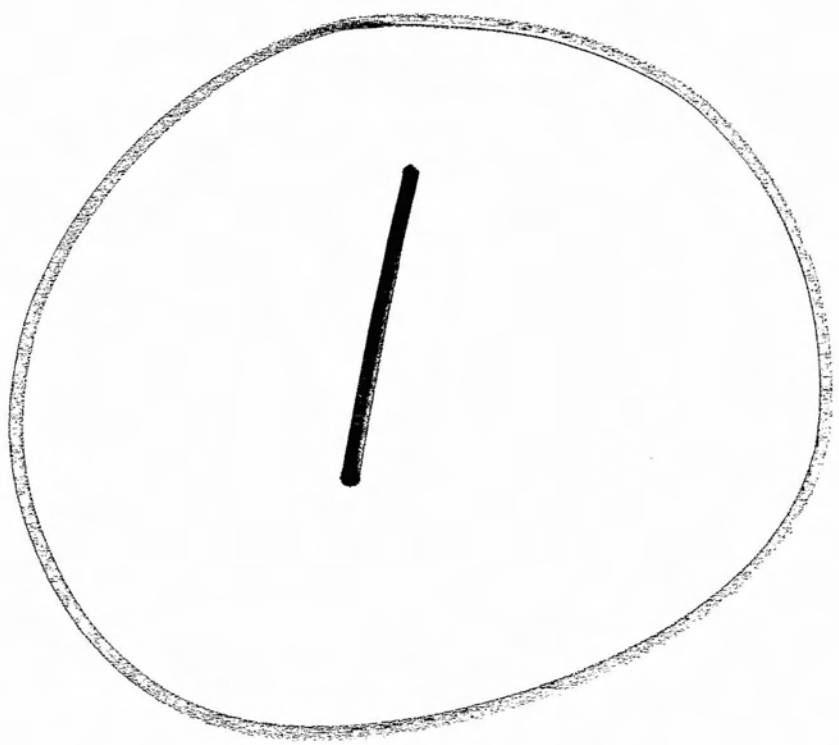
3. This Motion concerns issues of the knowledge of sexual abuse of minors by Jonathan Kendrick on the part of the administrators and persons in responsibility at both the local Jehovah's Witness Congregation in Fremont, and at the National Corporate Offices of the defendant Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York. Good cause exists for the discovery of information concerning the notice and knowledge of individuals in positions of responsibility at both the local congregation and the Watchtower New York Corporation as to Mr. Kendrick's history of sexual abuse of other minor girls, prior to plaintiff, as it directly affects the issue of "notice" and defendants' negligent supervision of Mr. Kendrick, as well as a violation of the duty to protect minors, including plaintiff Jane Doe, from sexual abuse by adults, including Mr. Kendrick. The existence of information communicated to these persons of responsibility, the actions taken, and the affect on the failure of Jane Doe to be protected from the sexual abuse she received from Mr. Kendrick, are all relevant issues on liability. Additionally, although no punitive damage claim is pled at this time, as such a pleading requires a subsequent Motion to Amend the Complaint where religious corporations are defendants, the information sought with regard to the policies and practices followed with Mr. Kendrick, both before and after the sexual abuse of Jane Doe, is relevant information to the issue of whether the defendant religious corporations, through their corporate policy and managing agents, demonstrated a conscious disregard for the safety of minors through a policy of secrecy for, and protection of, known childhood sexual abusers within their ranks and leadership.

4. I have had extensive discussions, both written and oral, with Mr. McCabe, counsel for defendants. All such discussions have been civil, courteous, and gracious. These discussions have centered on whether or not the statutory clergy-penitent privilege is applicable to the internal administrative proceedings involving childhood sexual abusers within the Jehovah's Witnesses

Church. Mr. McCabe has repeatedly advised me that he is not authorized to waive the claim of privilege. Mr. McCabe has also advised that he is not authorized to disclose any information regarding the communication and information sought in the deposition of Mr. Abrahamson absent a Court Order, as a matter of church policy. There is no further room for negotiation on this issue, and the information plaintiff believes is fully discoverable can only be obtained with a Court Order. In addition, the deposition of Mr. Abrahamson was attended by Francis McNamara, Associate General Counsel of the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. Mr. McNamara was present for all of the discussions on and off the record concerning the issue of privilege and provided no authorization to Mr. McCabe to allow for disclosure of the information sought in the questioning of witness Abrahamson.



5. This issue has previously arisen and been litigated within the First District Court of Appeal of California by the Jehovah's Witnesses. A prior Napa County Superior Court ruling held the statutory privilege of Evidence Code §1032 was not applicable to communications regarding sexual abuse of a minor in a civil case. The ruling specifically addresses privilege, and the First District Court of Appeal summarily denied a Petition for Writ. A copy of a prior ruling in the Napa County Superior Court and Petition for Writ of Mandate Denial from the First District Court of Appeal, for which Judicial Notice is requested, is attached as Exhibit "2" to this Declaration.

6. Based upon the refusal of defendants, without legal authority, and with prior knowledge of rulings holding the statutory privilege of Evidence Code §1032 inapplicable, sanctions are appropriate in this case. I have personally spent three hours in negotiation, in the preparation of this Motion, including the review of the deposition transcript, the preparation of this Meet and Confer Declaration, and the Separate Statement, and the other documents, and will spend an additional one hour for oral argument in this case. In addition, the filing fee for this Motion is $40.00. Based upon a reasonable rate of attorney's fees of $350.00 per hour, sanctions in the amount of $1,490.00 is requested.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct and that I am competent to testify as to the facts set forth herein.

Executed this 7th day of September, 2011, at Hayward, California.

DEPOSITION OF GARY A. ABRAHAMSON

Tuesday, August 23, 2011

Taken Before Karen Scott
Certified Shorthand Reporter
State of California
C.S.R. No. 4027

A Sure.

Q First of all, I understand that you are an elder in the Jehovah's Witnesses Congregation in Fremont; is that correct?

A That is correct.

Q And I am going to be asking you some questions today related to both the events involving the people involved in this case and some organizational questions to help me understand the structure of your religious institution; all right?

A Okay. Fine.

Q If I ask you any question that you don't understand, either because I used words that aren't familiar to you or I garbled the question or you didn't hear it, or if for any reason you are unsure of the question, please ask me to rephrase it or repeat it so that it's clear to you; okay?

A Uh-huh.

Q In a normal conversation we would say uh-huh --

A Yeah. Okay.

Q -- and huh-uh and make those kinds of affirmative or negative sounds and understand each other. In a deposition, because the court reporter on my right is taking down all of our words, we have to Unit.

Do you know whether or not that is the official title of the corporation that you call the Fremont North?

A Yes. We used to use that term "unit," probably back when these bylaws were established, so it probably would be very accurate back then.

Q All right. Do you know what the official name of the corporation is now if it's different?

A I would think it's the same.

Q The corporation was incorporated in 1975, according to the documents that I have received. Does that sound correct to your knowledge?

A That sounds correct.

Q How long have you been an elder in the -- in this congregation?

A Since I moved into the congregation, and I believe it was 1986.

Q Before that time, 1986, did you serve as an elder in any other congregation?

A Yes. Before that time I served in the congregation -- I believe it would be called the Mountain View Congregation and perhaps Central, Central Mountain View.

Q Can you tell me approximately the year in which you first became an elder?

A Approximately 1978.

Q And have you been an elder continuously up to the present time?

A Yes, I have.

Q Is there a general description you can provide me as to the role of the elders in the Jehovah's Witnesses Congregations?

A Yes. I would probably refer you to some Scriptures; for example, Second Peter, Chapter 5, Verse 2, that we would shepherd the flock and we would do it willingly, not grudgingly, not for love of dishonest gain, but eagerly, and neither lording it over those who are God's inheritance.

Q Do you have administrative responsibilities as an elder?

A Could you please explain what you mean by "administrative responsibilities"?

Q Yes. Do you have to perform various jobs or functions that have to do with either keeping records involving dispute resolution between members, other kinds of tasks involving the status or role of members in the congregation?

A By that term, I think I would say yes.

Q Can you give me a description of what responsibilities you have in that general area?

A In that general area the responsibilities I have are as what we call a service overseer. So I would be concerned with the literature that comes into the congregation and its distribution as well as the coverage of our territory in the preaching work, also be concerned about the different Bible studies that are being conducted in the congregation.

Q Are there other elders in the Fremont North Congregation at present?

A Yes.

Q Approximately how many?

A I would say 12.

Q And what is the approximate size of the congregation today?

A About 110.

Q If we were to go back in time to the mid-1990s, do you have an estimate then as to the number of elders, approximately?

A I would estimate eight, but it's just an estimation.

Q And the size of the congregation at that time, approximately 15 to 20 years ago.

A I'm sure those records might be available, but I would hesitate to guess.

Q Do you have a general impression as to whether the membership has grown larger in that specific congregation since the mid-1990s, smaller or is about the same?

A There have certainly been a lot of new ones that have come in but others have moved away, so it might be fair to say that it was around the same.

Q You mentioned the term "service overseer." What is a service overseer?

A A service overseer is a -- an appointment as an -- he must be an elder, and it's an appointment to oversee the departments that I mentioned to you, literature, and we call our -- preaching work is our service to God. So anything that involves the preaching work would be something that I would be quite interested in.

Q To become an elder, is there a process of, I'll call it like a ladder, steps in a ladder that one must go through in preparation for assuming that title and position?

A Well, what we use are the Bible requirements. All of Jehovah's Witnesses, before they're baptized, must take a knowledge, repent, act upon the knowledge, obey what they find from the Scriptures. But in addition to that, elders would be those that reach out for additional responsibilities, and these are outlined -- these qualifications for elders are outlined in First Timothy, Chapter 3.

Q Can you tell me what they are?

A Some of them are, sure.

Qualifications are that they would, first of all, be desirous of a fine work, so it is work-involved. We're not paid for the effort that we put forth, but we do it freely and willingly. And we would not be irreprehensible -- or we would need to be irreprehensible. We would need to be a husband and one wife. We would need to be orderly. We would need to be not given to a lot of wine, not -- and if I had the Bible I could do a little bit more justice to the -- but they're found there in First Timothy, Chapter 3, Verses 1 through, say, 10.

Q Who selects elders?

A The local Body of Elders observes individuals and then we will discuss them as a body, and ultimately we will send a recommendation into the branch office and the traveling brother that assists us at this time would be the circuit overseer, and so we would submit a request for this recommendation to be approved.

Q All right. You used the word "branch office," and I'm not sure what that refers to. Please tell me.

A Okay. Yes. It's -- the worldwide organization of Jehovah's Witnesses has a headquarters which is in New York, and there is where the United States branch happens to be, but also they oversee the entire work, the global work of Jehovah's Witnesses.

Q Is that organization The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York?

Actually let me -- I see you are puzzled. Let me withdraw the question and ask you, back in the mid-1990s, was that organization The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York?

A I -- it might be New York or it might be Pennsylvania. I think it was -- I'm not sure.

Q Fair enough.

A Yeah.

Q Do you as an elder -- strike that. Let me start over.

Have you as an elder recommended other persons to be nominated to the position of elder during your years of service?

A Yes. I have been on the body that has recommended others.

Q And to whom is such a recommendation directed?

A To the branch office.

Q And is the branch office located somewhere other than New York or is it in New York to your understanding?

A It's in New York.

Q Has that process changed during the many years that you have been an elder?

A No.

Q You mentioned the term "circuit overseer," and can you describe for me what a circuit overseer is?

A Yes. He is a traveling elder. He visits -- generally he has a circuit of 20 congregations, and so he would like to visit these twice a year, and we look forward to these visits, and during this time he gives counsel from the branch to the elders, to the ministerial servants, and this counsel is appreciated.

He -- he agrees to travel to the various congregations, and in some cases they house him in maybe a room that they have, and if he has a wife, he and his wife. And in some cases they may have an apartment attached to a Kingdom Hall that they could use, and he does not get any reimburse -- well, he

in the branch office.

Q When you use that term "service department," can you tell me what you are referring to?

A Well, just as you asked me service overseer, so I would be concerned about the field service, the ministry in our local congregation. So the branch office would be concerned with the field ministry in the branch that they're overseeing, and in this case it would be the United States branch.

Q Do you understand that the service department back in the mid-1990s was administered by the Watchtower New York corporation?

A That sounds accurate.

Q What do you understand to be the role of the Watchtower Pennsylvania corporation?

A Yeah, that's -- I believe that would be more of the legal corporation of Jehovah's Witnesses. It would be a worldwide organization, different from New York, which would be the branch office that oversees the United States branch.

Q Are there some organizational documents, which would be anything from charts to letters, which explain to elders such as yourself the organizational structure of the various components of the Jehovah's Witnesses in the United States and the world?

A Yes. And they're available basically to the public because we have had articles in our Watchtower magazine that outlines that which are available.

Q One of the services that you perform, as I understand it, is the distribution of various religious literature and tracts; is that correct?

A Yeah, that we produce. Yeah.

Q When you say "we produce," are those produced and supplied to the congregation from some other source than the congregation itself, or are they produced within the congregation?

A By "congregation," do you mean the local congregation?

Q Yes, I do. I'm sorry. Yes. Thank you.

A Yes. We do no printing locally.

Q Who supplies the local congregation with the literature that is distributed in service?

A It would be the branch office.

Q There is an organization that I have received some documents from, through your counsel, called the Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, also located in New York State.

Are you familiar with that organization?

A Yes.

Q Is it correct that that organization was formed after you already had become an elder?

A Yes.

Q What do you understand to be the purpose of the Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses organization?

A I think that term denotes more of an accurate description than The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society for those that are looking out -- looking over Jehovah's people throughout the United States branch.

Q Is it the same organization as The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society with a different name, to your understanding, or is it a separate organization, corporation?

A To my understanding, it replaces the name of The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York.

Q To your understanding, do both organizations, The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York and the Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, continue to exist at present?

A What was the first one? Watchtower --

Q Of New York.

A Of New York.

Q Bible and Tract Society of New York and Christian Congregation.

A I don't know.

Q Fair enough. Thank you. We talked about the branch office. As you understand it, is the branch office now administered by the Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses or by The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York?

A Could you rephrase that question?

Q Yes. As you understand it, is the branch office that we talked about --

A The Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses you're referring to?

Q Yes.

A Okay.

Q Does -- is the branch office a function administered by the Christian Congregation or by Watchtower Bible and Tract of New York at present?

A I -- it seems like you're ask -- not asking the question correctly.

Q All right. Explain, then, how the -- the interplay of these corporations as regards to the branch office works for me.

A Yes. It's my understanding that The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania would be the worldwide oversight of the branch office, which is the Christian Congregation of Jehovah's

Witnesses New York.

Q Are you familiar with the term ministerial servant?

A Yes.

Q Did you act as a ministerial servant before you were an elder?

A Yes.

Q Is it customary for an individual before becoming an elder to serve as a ministerial servant?

A Yes.

Q How do the responsibilities of ministerial servant differ from those of elder?

A The duties of a ministerial servant would be more nonteaching, non -- they would be more of a service -- not field service but of a -- a service-oriented, such as maybe bookkeeping, keeping track of the inventory of literature that comes in and goes out, the maps that we have to work our territory locally. They would assist in helping make sure that the coverage was done systematically and in an orderly fashion.

They also may be used as attendants in the congregation to seat different ones or maybe sometimes we have like microphones that in some congregations we use, which is the case in ours, so they'd be used to pass the microphones and other nonteaching, non-shepherding duties in the congregation.

Q Are ministerial servants appointed?

A They are.

Q By whom?

A The recommendation for their appointment is sent in by the local Body of Elders, and they explain why they feel this man qualifies for such a position, and then it is approved by the branch office service department.

Q Pardon me for asking what might seem like a very obvious question, but are women allowed to serve as elders?

A No.

Q Are women allowed to serve as ministerial servants?

A No. Well, can I qualify that?

Q Please.

A Let's say there were no qualified males to serve in that position. Then a sister could do the duties of that, but she would wear a head covering as a sign that she is doing something that normally would be done by a brother, but they're not appointed as ministerial servants or elders.

Q Are there other administrative or service

A We moved into the Kingdom Hall in 1986, and I would estimate two years from that point Jonathan Kendrick came to the Kingdom Hall. I am just guessing.

Q Did Mr. Kendrick ever serve as a ministerial servant?

A Yes, he did.

Q And do you recall whether or not you were involved in the decision to have Mr. Kendrick appointed as a ministerial servant?

A At that time I was on the Body of Elders. We reviewed it as a body, and I was part of the body that sent in a recommendation that he serve.

Q Do you recall, again, the approximate time frame?

A No, I don't -- I don't know.

Q Had Mr. Kendrick been a member of the congregation for a year or two before he became a ministerial servant, or something in that neighborhood?

A Yes. It seems longer than that even. It should be.

Q Do you recall, when Mr. Kendrick first became a member of the congregation, whether or not he was married?

A When he was first studying the Bible, he was not married. He was living with a woman.

Q All right. Did he become married during the time that he was a member of the Fremont North Congregation?

A No. He got married and cleaned up his life before he was baptized.

Q And when you say "cleaned up his life," what are you referring to?

A To the fact that he was living immorally with a woman and then he legalized that by getting married.

Q Was the woman that he married Evelyn?

A Yes.

Q And do you recall the approximate year that they would have been married?

A Well, I would think, if my years -- I'd say '88, '89, something around there.

Q Am I correct that Mr. Kendrick would have had to have been married to Evelyn before he was eligible to become a ministerial servant?

A Or break off the relationship with her. And even be baptized. Even before he could be baptized, he had to do that.

Q Okay.

A Yeah.

Q Did Evelyn have any children to your knowledge?

A Yes. She had a daughter.

Q Do you remember the daughter's name?

A Andrea.

Q Do you recall Andrea's approximate age during the time that Mr. Kendrick and Evelyn were married, or the range of ages?

A It would be a guess, but I would say in her early teens to probably high school.

Q Did Mr. Kendrick continue to serve as a ministerial servant during the remainder of the time that he was a member of the Fremont North Congregation?

A I believe he was removed as a ministerial servant from the Fremont North Congregation.

Q And what does it mean to be removed as a ministerial servant?

A No longer qualified to serve.

Q Who makes that determination?

A The Body of Elders.

Q And is that a determination that must be approved by the service branch?

A Yes.

Q How is the recommendation of the Body of Elders that a ministerial servant be removed communicated to the service branch?

A Generally by letter.

Q Do you know whether or not that was the case involving Mr. Kendrick?

A I believe it was, yes.

Q Did you participate in the drafting of that letter?

A No.

Q Is the letter a form letter or is it a narrative, if you will?

A Narrative.

Q Why was Mr. Kendrick removed?

MR. McCABE: Object to that. Calls for privileged information. I'll instruct the witness not to answer the question.

MR. SIMONS: What specific privilege?

MR. McCABE: The clergy-communicant privilege.

MR. SIMONS: Any others?

MR. McCABE: Well, that whole section. Confidentiality of the clergy-penitent privilege.

MR. SIMONS: All right.

Q I'm going to ask you a series of some additional questions related to the removal of Mr. Kendrick as a ministerial servant, and it may very well be that counsel has some objections to some or all of these questions, so pause before answering to give him an opportunity to make any objections he might have; all right?

A Uh-huh.

Q Was the decision to remove Mr. Kendrick -- I'm sorry -- to recommend the removal of Mr. Kendrick as a ministerial servant made by more than one individual?

MR. McCABE: I'm going to object to that question. Same grounds.

MR. SIMONS: All right.

Q Is there a process within the Jehovah's Witnesses in which there is an investigatory or judicial type of committee?

A Yes.

Q Does that committee have a name or that process have a name?

A It has a name. Let's say it would be an investigating committee of two brothers.

Q And has that been part of the procedural practices of the congregations during the entire time that you have been an elder?

A Yes.

Q And during your years of service in Fremont, has such an investigation committee existed?

A The investigative committee is developed based on the circumstances. So maybe an individual felt comfortable coming to me and confessing a sin, or that they were party to a sin or that they heard of a sin. So it might be good for me to be on that investigating committee because they spoke to me. I would be a natural choice, but I wouldn't do it by myself. There would be another brother with me.

Q All right. Is the existence of such an investigation committee something that is communicated to all the members of the congregation?

A No.

Q And let me make my question clear. I don't think it was.

Without regard to a specific investigation, is generally the ability of the elders to have an investigation committee under certain circumstances something that is taught to all of the members or explained to the members?

A Could you rephrase that question, please?

Q Yes. Were members customarily told that the Body of Elders can under certain circumstances convene an investigation committee? In other words, was the process known to the members that a judicial committee could be or investigation committee could be convened if circumstances so required?

A I believe that's in our publications.

Q So would I be correct in saying that an individual member who brought to an elder's attention a specific situation that would be of such a serious nature that an investigation would follow would customarily be aware of the power of the elders to convene an investigation?

A I believe I understand your question, so to answer that question, the congregation would expect the elders to investigate an allegation of serious wrongdoing.

Q And certainly sexual abuse of a child would fall under that category of serious wrongdoing?

A Yes.

Q Hold on one second for the --

A Okay.

Q -- siren there. All right.

It's not meant to be a hint on any specific question or answer.

THE VIDEOGRAPHER: I need to repair a microphone real quick.

MR. SIMONS: There is a technical issue here.

THE VIDEOGRAPHER: We're good. You're still on.

BY MR. SIMONS:

Q What was it that led to the judicial investigation of Mr. Kendrick during the time that he was a ministerial servant?

MR. McCABE: I'm going to object to that question on the same basis.

MR. SIMONS: Can we stipulate that any questions that I might pose to Mr. Abrahamson regarding the subject of communications involving Mr. Kendrick related to the judicial investigation or related to the action to remove him would draw the same objection that you have posed to the first few questions?

MR. McCABE: Yes.

MR. SIMONS: May we further stipulate that pending some judicial determination of the propriety of those questions that I can reserve that subject matter for further proceedings?

MR. McCABE: Yes.

BY MR. SIMONS:

Q Again, these may fall under that same category, so give your counsel time to object.

Did you speak to Evelyn Kendrick concerning any allegations involving sexual abuse of her daughter Andrea by Mr. Kendrick, Jonathan Kendrick?

MR. McCABE: Objection. Instruct the witness not to answer on the same basis.

MR. SIMONS: Again, can we agree that any questions involving reports or communications from Evelyn Kendrick would fall under the umbrella of your objections?

MR. McCABE: Yes.

BY MR. SIMONS:

Q Did you at any time notify any secular law enforcement agency of any information concerning possible sexual abuse of children by Mr. Kendrick?

A I did not.

Q Do you know whether anyone within the congregation Body of Elders did so?

A I am not aware of anybody doing so, no.

Q What was the policy that was in place in the mid-1990s regarding reporting possible sexual abuse of a child by an adult to secular law enforcement agencies?

A I'm -- I don't know for sure. I would have to look it up. I know currently we are to call the communications -- but was there any communication between yourself and anyone from the legal department back in the 1990s concerning Mr. Jonathan Kendrick?

MR. McCABE: I'm going to object to that. Same basis. I'm going to object to all communications from him to New York.

MR. SIMONS: Okay. My question specifically excludes any content of any communications. I want to only ask the very specific question of whether or not there were any communications at that time concerning Mr. Kendrick.

MR. McCABE: Well, normally I wouldn't have an objection to that, but in this case I do have an objection to that because then it assumes that there was some investigatory committee involving Mr. Kendrick and that communication was a result of that, and I don't think that we have got that into evidence at this point in time, so I'm going to object.

MR. SIMONS: All right. Let me ask about the foundational matter.

Q Was a judicial investigation committee convened with regard to Mr. Jonathan Kendrick prior to his removal as a ministerial servant?

MR. McCABE: I'm going to object on the same basis of communicant-clergy privilege and instruct the witness not to answer.

BY MR. SIMONS:

Q Without providing me any names or other identifying information as to individuals, has there been, during the time that you have served as an elder in the congregation in Fremont, any report received by the Body of Elders or any member thereof, to your knowledge, concerning sexual abuse of a child by an adult?

MR. McCABE: I'm going to object to that too on the basis of the clergy-communicant privilege.

MR. SIMONS: Okay. I have a number of additional follow-up questions regarding Mr. Kendrick during the time that he was a member of the North Congregation, Fremont North Congregation, that are related in varying degrees to this underlying subject matter that is the subject of your objection. I'd like to reserve that questioning, if you will so agree, until the determination of the issues that you have raised objection to.

Is that acceptable?

MR. McCABE: Yes. Can we take just a short break?

MR. SIMONS: We can.

congregation that he is reproved, he's been reproved by the congregation committee.

Q And what does the term "reproved" refer to as you are using it there?

A Disciplined.

Q When a person is removed from an office, such as ministerial servant, is the congregation advised that that individual -- and again, I'm talking about the membership advised -- that that individual no longer is serving as a ministerial servant?

A Yes.

Q Is the congregation told -- again, the members told -- why that individual is no longer serving as a ministerial servant?

A No.

Q During your many years of service as an elder, has there been any change in any of those processes that we have just discussed, the notification of disfellowship or reproval or of removal from an office and the fact that the reason for such action is not disclosed? Has that been the standard practice during all your years of service?

A Yes.

Q Was there any inquiry from a congregation in Oakley to the Fremont North Congregation concerning

Mr. Kendrick of which you are aware?

MR. McCABE: I'm going to object. It's going to call for or elicit testimony which could violate the patient -- I mean clergy-penitent privilege.

MR. SIMONS: Let me follow up on that objection, which I assume is accompanied by an instruction not to answer --

MR. McCABE: Yes.

MR. SIMONS: -- is it? All right.

Q Are the communications that one congregation receives concerning a new member from that member's former congregation considered to be confidential as you understand it? In other words, is it information that is available to the members or elders of both congregations?

A It would be considered confidential.

Q And such a communication, if it came from an elder of another congregation, would the information that is permitted to be disclosed to that new congregation, would that information include the reason for a disfellowshipping?

A It likely would.

Q Have you learned that Mr. Kendrick was convicted of felony child abuse and sent to a prison earlier. This refers to chairman of the judicial committee. Is that a different role than coordinator of the Body of Elders?

A Yes.

Q Who is the chairman of a judicial committee?

A Once a judicial committee is formed by the Body of Elders, the Body of Elders will choose the chairman.

Q Might that chairman be a different individual for a different judicial committee?

A Absolutely. Yeah.

Q In other words, it's not a permanent role?

A No.

Q It's a role limited only to that individual judicial committee?

A Exactly.

Q Who do you recall being members of any judicial committee that may have heard any issues revolving around or related to Jonathan Kendrick?

A That would be confidential.

MR. McCABE: I'll object to that.

MR. SIMONS: And the objection is?

MR. McCABE: Clergy-penitent privilege.

MR. SIMONS: Okay. Is there an instruction not to answer?

MR. McCABE: Yes.

(Document referred to herein marked for identification Exhibit No. 5)

BY MR. SIMONS:

Q Let's take a look at Exhibit 5. Do you recall receiving this letter?

A I can't honestly say that I remember receiving this exact letter, but the reminder being confidential, I'm sure I read over the letter.

Q Was there some discussion within the Body of Elders in the North Fremont Congregation of this letter when it was received?

A That I would not know -- remember.

Q Do you remember any such discussion about avoiding lawsuits that may result from, as the correspondence states on page 2, paragraph 1, misuse of the tongue?

Plaintiffs,

v.

WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, et al.

Defendants.

Case No.: 26-22191
JCCP No. 4374

RULING ON SUBMITTED MOTION TO COMPEL PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS

Plaintiffs' Motion To Compel Production Of Documents came on for hearing on August 31, 2005. The court, having read and considered the papers and heard oral argument, took the matter under submission and now rules as follows:

Plaintiff's motion to compel production of documents is GRANTED in part and continued in part to allow for the production of an attorney-client privilege log.

Although defendants raised a number of objections when responding to plaintiffs' request for production of documents, they address only two of those objections in opposing plaintiffs' motion to compel: the penitential communication privilege and the attorney-client privilege, which the court will discuss in more detail below. As to the other objections not discussed by defendants, the court finds the objections are not well taken. The requested discovery requests are not overbroad, are relevant, and are not barred by Serbian East Orthodox Diocese v. Milivojevich (1976) 426 U.S. 696.

1. Penitential Privilege

Evidence Code section 1032 provides:

> As used in this article, "penitential communication" means a communication made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who, in the course of the discipline or practice of the clergy member's church, denomination, or organization, is authorized or accustomed to hear those communications and, under the discipline or tenets of his or her church, denomination, or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret.

Defendants object to the production of a number of documents requested by plaintiffs on the ground that they are protected by the penitential communication privilege contained in Evidence Code section 1032. This court finds that the privilege does not apply to communications between the alleged abusers and the Judicial Committee. The evidence presented by both sides establishes that communications with the Judicial Committee do not fall within the scope of the privilege. First, it is clear that the Judicial Committee's purpose is to investigate sins for which disfellowship is a potential penalty. This is established not only by the deposition excerpts provided by plaintiffs, but by the Watchtower publication provided by defendants in connection with the objections to plaintiffs' evidence ("Judicial action is necessary only if a gross sin has been committed that could lead to disfellowshipping" p. 18.) Second, the privilege does not apply because the Judicial Committee was under no duty to keep the communications private. In fact, the evidence establishes that the Judicial Committee was required to communicate information it obtained regarding potential cases of child molestation to the Watchtower Society Headquarters.

Because the penitential communication privilege does not apply, within 20 days defendants shall produce all documents for which it previously asserted this privilege.

2. Attorney-client privilege

Defendants have not produced a privilege log for those few documents they apparently claim are protected by the attorney client privilege. Neither the plaintiffs nor the court can adequately address the objection without a privilege log. Defendants shall serve a privilege log on plaintiffs within 10 days. Plaintiffs may thereafter file and a supplemental brief addressing the log within 10 days. The court will then issue a written ruling on the matter.

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff Jane Doe presents the following specific questions as the subject of the Motion to Compel answers from witness Gary Abrahamson:

I. THE REMOVAL OF JONATHAN KENDRICK AS A MINISTERIAL SERVANT.

QUESTION:

Q. Why was Mr. Kendrick removed?

OBJECTION:

A. MR. McCABE: Object to that. Calls for privileged information. I'll instruct the witness not to answer the question.
Q. MR. SIMONS: What specific privilege?
A. MR: McCABE: The clergy-communicant privilege.
Q. MR. SIMONS: Any others?

A. MR. McCABE: Well, that whole section. Confidentiality of the clergy-penitent privilege.

(Deposition 57:14-23).

ARGUMENT:

The privileges contained in the Evidence Code are exclusive and Courts are not free to create new privileges as a matter of judicial policy. (Scottsdale Insurance Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal.App.4th 263, at 272; Evidence Code §911). The Clergy-Penitent Privilege covers only "a penitential communication". (Evidence Code §§1030, 1031, and 1032). A "penitential communication" applies only to communications "made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who,... under the disciplines or tenets of his or her church, denomination, or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret" (§1032). Any communication which is known in advance as "likely to be shared with more than one person, is not subject to the criteria of §1032 (Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 417, 444-5). The Clergy-Penitent Privilege is waived if a holder of the privilege discloses a significant part of the communication to a third party or consents to such disclosure. (Evidence Code §912(a); Roman Catholic Archbishop, supra, 131 Cal.App.4th at 445, Fn.14). "Third parties" include other administrators within the Institution of which the Clergy is a member. (Roman Catholic Archbishop, supra, 131 Cal.App.4th 445-6). A Clergy-Penitent communication which the parties are aware is likely to be transmitted to third persons is not "confidential" and is outside the privilege of §1032. (Id, 131 Cal.App.4th 445-6).

The Removal of Mr. Kendrick as a Ministerial Servant is an administrative decision, made by corporate agents. (Depo. 56:1-7; 16-25). The process does not involve "confidential communications" as defined by Evidence Code §1032 as multiple third persons at both the Congregation and New York corporate level are involved in the entire process. (Roman Catholic Archbishop, supra, at 445-6). The decision making that is the subject of the question does not call for any content or 1032 communications, but rather on administrative decision making.

II. THE JUDICIAL INVESTIGATION OF JONATHAN KENDRICK.

QUESTION:

Q. What was it that led to the judicial investigation of Mr. Kendrick during the time that he was a ministerial servant?

OBJECTION:

A. MR. McCABE: I'm going to object to that question on the same basis.

(Deposition 61:6-10).

ARGUMENT:

The privileges contained in the Evidence Code are exclusive and Courts are not free to create new privileges as a matter of judicial policy. (Scottsdale Insurance Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal.App.4th 263, at 272; Evidence Code §911). The Clergy-Penitent Privilege covers only "a penitential communication". (Evidence Code §§1030, 1031, and 1032). A "penitential communication" applies only to communications "made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who,... under the disciplines or tenets of his or her church, denomination, or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret" (§1032). Any communication which is known in advance as "likely to be shared with more than one person, is not subject to the criteria of §1032 (Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 417, 444-5). The Clergy-Penitent Privilege is waived if a holder of the privilege discloses a significant part of the communication or consents to such disclosure. (Evidence Code §912(a); Roman Catholic Archbishop, supra, 131 Cal.App.4th at 445, Fn.14). "Third parties" include other administrators within the Institution of which the Clergy is a member. (Roman Catholic Archbishop, supra, 131 Cal.App.4th 445-6). A Clergy-Penitent communication which the parties are aware is likely to be transmitted to third persons is not "confidential" and is outside the privilege of §1032. (Id, 131 Cal.App.4th 445-6).

This question does not call for any "confidential communications" as defined in §1032. Mr. Abrahamson agreed that members reporting "serious wrongdoing", including a sexual abuse of a child, expected an investigation which involved third parties. (Depo. 58:15-59:1; 59:24-60:5; and 60:6-18). Such communications are not "confidential". (Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court, supra, at 444-5).

III. THE EVELYN KENDRICK REPORT.

QUESTION:

Q. Did you speak to Evelyn Kendrick concerning any allegations involving sexual abuse of her daughter Andrea by Mr. Kendrick, Jonathan Kendrick?

OBJECTION:

A. MR. McCABE: Objection. Instruct the witness not to answer on the same basis.

(Deposition 62:2-6).

ARGUMENT:

The privileges contained in the Evidence Code are exclusive and Courts are not free to create new privileges as a matter of judicial policy. (Scottsdale Insurance Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal.App.4th 263, at 272; Evidence Code §911). The Clergy-Penitent Privilege covers only "a penitential communication". (Evidence Code §§1030, 1031, and 1032). Any communication which is known in advance as "likely to be shared with more than one person, is not subject to the criteria of §1032 (*Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. (Depo. 58-15-59:1; 59:24-60:5; and 60:6-18). Such communications are not "confidential". (Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court, supra, at 444-5).

IV. JUDICIAL INVESTIGATION COMMITTEE RE KENDRICK REMOVAL.

QUESTION:

Q. Was a judicial investigation committee convened with regard to Mr. Jonathan Kendrick prior to his removal as a ministerial servant?

OBJECTION:

A. MR. McCABE: I'm going to object on the same basis of communicant-clergy privilege and instruct the witness not to answer.

(Deposition 64:22-65:2)

ARGUMENT:

The privileges contained in the Evidence Code are exclusive and Courts are not free to create new privileges as a matter of judicial policy. (Scottsdale Insurance Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal.App.4th 263, at 272; Evidence Code §911). The Clergy-Penitent Privilege covers only "a penitential communication". (Evidence Code §§1030, 1031, and 1032). A "penitential communication" applies only to communications "made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who,... under the disciplines or tenets of his or her church, denomination, or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret" (§1032). (Roman Catholic Archbishop supra, at 445-6). The decision making that is the subject of the question does not call for any content or 1032 communications, but rather on administrative decision making.

V. REPORTS OF SEXUAL ABUSE.

QUESTION:

Q. Without providing me any names or other identifying information as to individuals, has there been, during the time that you have served as an elder in the congregation in Fremont, any report received by the Body of Elders or any member thereof, to your knowledge, concerning sexual abuse of a child by an adult?

OBJECTION:

A. MR. McCABE: I'm going to object to that too on the basis of the clergy-communicant privilege.

(Deposition 65:4-12)

ARGUMENT:

The privileges contained in the Evidence Code are exclusive and Courts are not free to create new privileges as a matter of judicial policy. (Scottsdale Insurance Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal.App.4th 263, at 272; Evidence Code §911). The Clergy-Penitent Privilege covers only "a penitential communication". (Evidence Code §§1030, 1031, and 1032). A "penitential communication" applies only to communications "made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who,... under the disciplines or tenets of his or her church, denomination, or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret" (§1032). Any communication which is known in advance as "likely to be shared with more than one person, is not subject to the criteria of §1032 (Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 417, 444-5). The Clergy-Penitent Privilege is waived if a holder of the privilege discloses a significant part of the communication or consents to such disclosure. (Evidence Code §912(a); Roman Catholic Archbishop, supra, 131 Cal.App.4th at 445, Fn.14). "Third parties" include other administrators within the Institution of which the Clergy is a member. (Roman Catholic Archbishop, supra, 131 Cal.App.4th 445-6). A Clergy-Penitent communication which the parties are aware is likely to be transmitted to third persons is not "confidential" and is outside the privilege of §1032. (Id, 131 Cal.App.4th 445-6).

It is the doctrine of Jehovah's Witnesses, and the expectation of members, that reports of serious wrongdoing, including sexual abuse of a child will be investigated by a Judicial Committee, involving third persons. (Depo. 58-15-59:1; 59:24-60:5; and 60:6-18). Such conversations are not "confidential". (Roman Catholic Archbishop, supra, at 444-5).

VI. COMMUNICATIONS WITH OAKLEY RE JONATHAN KENDRICK.

QUESTION:

Q. Was there any inquiry from a congregation in Oakley to the Fremont North Congregation concerning Mr. Kendrick of which you are aware?

OBJECTION:

A. MR. McCABE: I'm going to object. It's going to call for or elicit testimony which could violate the patient – I mean clergy-penitent privilege.

(Deposition 85:24-86:5)

ARGUMENT:

The privileges contained in the Evidence Code are exclusive and Courts are not free to create new privileges as a matter of judicial policy. (Scottsdale Insurance Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal.App.4th 263, at 272; Evidence Code §911). The Clergy-Penitent Privilege covers only "a penitential communication". (Evidence Code §§1030, 1031, and 1032). A "penitential communication" applies only to communications "made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who,... under the disciplines or tenets of his or her church, denomination, or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret" (§1032).

The communications sought in this question are between congregations. No "confidential communication" between a penitent and clergy are included, as all the responsive answers would address third party administrative communications only.

VII. JUDICIAL COMMITTEE MAKEUP.

QUESTION:

Q. Who do you recall being members of any judicial committee that may have heard any issues revolving around or related to Jonathan Kendrick?

OBJECTION:

A. That would be confidential.
MR. McCABE: I'll object to that.
MR. SIMONS: And the objection is?
MR. McCABE: Clergy-penitent privilege.
MR. SIMONS: Okay. Is there an instruction not to answer?
MR. McCABE: Yes.

(Deposition 93:17-94:1)

ARGUMENT:

The privileges contained in the Evidence Code are exclusive and Courts are not free to create new privileges as a matter of judicial policy. (Scottsdale Insurance Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal.App.4th 263, at 272; Evidence Code §911). The Clergy-Penitent Privilege covers only "a penitential communication". (Evidence Code §§1030, 1031, and 1032). A "penitential communication" applies only to communications "made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who,... under the disciplines or tenets of his or her church, denomination, or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret" (§1032).

This question seeks identity of defendant's administrative personnel, not the content of any communications. Section 1032 does not apply to the identities of Administrative Persons.

I. INTRODUCTION

This lawsuit arises from the alleged conduct of co-defendant Jonathan Kendrick that occurred in 1996/1997. (See Plaintiffs' Complaint at ¶¶ 6-8) Currently, there is a tentative ruling and a scheduled hearing for September 29, 2011 on Plaintiff's Motion to Compel Production of five documents. Counsel for Plaintiff and Counsel for the Church Defendants are graciously and civilly working together to resolve that dispute. As of this writing the parties have agreed to a stipulation that will obviate the need for production of what has been describer as Document #4 (November 5, 1996, form S-77 regarding the disfellowshipping of a family member of plaintiff) and Document #5 (November 6, 2002, form S-77 from local body of elders to Service Department elders regarding the disfellowshipping of a family member of plaintiff). As to the disputed documents described as Document #1 through #3, it is the parties' intention to submit these documents to the Court under seal for a review in camera to determine whether or not the privilege claimed applies.

The testimony that is the subject of this motion is oral history surrounding the reasons for and the creation and transmission of the documents sought to be compelled in the previous motion to compel production of documents.

II. STATEMENT OF FACTS

All of the testimony sought by Plaintiffs involves spiritual communications with ordained elders and appointed congregation elders (hereinafter referred to as "elders") which are private and confidential communications pursuant to the religious practices, beliefs, tenets and teachings of Jehovah's Witnesses based upon Scripture and tradition. See Exhibit '1' Affidavit of Allen Shuster[1] ¶¶ 8-10, 12-13, 18-22; Exhibit '2' Affidavit of Michael L. Clarke[2] ¶¶ 7-13 (both of which were filed in the Opposition to the Motion to Compel Production of Documents and are attached hereto and incorporated by reference herein).

---

[1] Hereinafter "Exhibit '1' Shuster Affidavit."

[2] Hereinafter "Exhibit '2' Clarke Affidavit."

As mentioned in the previous opposition, each congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses is provided with spiritual oversight on a local level by a small group of appointed elders who form the congregation's body of elders. Before elders are appointed, they must meet the strict Scriptural qualifications outlined in the Bible and be recommended and approved by current body of elders, a circuit overseer (i.e. traveling elder), and elders who serve in the Service Department at the Branch Office of Jehovah's Witnesses in New York. Once an individual is approved and appointed to serve as a congregation elder, a letter from the Branch Office is read to the congregation and the individual is officially vested with ministerial authority as an ordained minister and appointed as an elder. All elders of the North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Fremont California (hereinafter "North Congregation") are and were at all times relevant to this case ordained ministers and spiritual leaders of the congregation. See Exhibit '1' Shuster Affidavit ¶¶ 5-7, 11; Exhibit '2' Clarke Affidavit ¶ 5.

Congregation elders are responsible for the spiritual development and spiritual teaching of the members of the congregation, as well as for pastoral care. Elders frequently provide spiritual counsel and advice to members of the congregation concerning highly confidential personal and spiritual matters. For example, congregation elders are authorized to hear confessions and other private, confidential communications and to provide spiritual guidance and spiritual counsel by virtue of the Holy Scriptures and the Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses. According to the religious beliefs and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses, congregation elders are expected to maintain the confidentiality of confessions and other confidential spiritual communications. See Exhibit '1' Shuster Affidavit ¶¶ 8-10, 12; Exhibit '2' Clarke Affidavit ¶¶ 5-10.

From time to time, congregation elders, including those in the North Congregation, communicated with elders in the Branch Office in order to receive spiritual counsel and advice as to how to apply the religious doctrine and procedures of Jehovah's Witnesses to issues concerning the congregation and its members. All such spiritual communications between congregation elders and Branch Office elders must be kept strictly confidential under the religious tenets and teachings of Jehovah's Witnesses. See Exhibit '1' Shuster Affidavit ¶¶ 13, 19.

Congregation elders are also responsible for conducting "judicial investigations" or "judicial committees" where a member of the congregation confesses to serious wrongdoing or sin or is accused of serious wrongdoing or a sin. The goal of a judicial investigation or judicial committee is to ensure that the congregation remains spiritually and morally clean. In addition, the elders endeavor to provide spiritual counseling and assistance to those who may have erred, with the hope of helping them to regain their spirituality and relationship with God. When the elders on a judicial committee confirm that a congregant has in fact committed a serious sin for which spiritual discipline is required based on Jehovah's Witnesses' understanding of the Bible, the judicial committee will decide what that spiritual discipline should be. Based on the religious beliefs, practices, and procedures of Jehovah's Witnesses, at least two elders are required to conduct a judicial investigation and at least three elders are required for a judicial committee involving a congregant who is alleged to have committed a serious sin. Jehovah's Witnesses believe that men are imperfect and, therefore, three elders can provide more full and complete spiritual counsel and advice based on a broader range of experience and knowledge than can a single elder alone. Pursuant to the beliefs, practices, and procedures of Jehovah's Witnesses, all spiritual communications taking place during a "judicial investigation" or "judicial committee," are considered extremely private and strictly confidential by all present, including the accused congregant and elders. See Exhibit '1' Shuster Affidavit ¶¶ 14-16, 19-21.

Where a serious sin is confirmed by the elders on the judicial committee, the judicial committee may give private or public reproof or disfellowship that congregant, depending on whether the individual is repentant. When a member is subject to public reproof or disfellowshipping, an announcement is made during a congregation meeting simply to the effect that "[name] has been reproved" or "[name] is no longer one of Jehovah's Witnesses." If a congregation member is disfellowshipped, the judicial committee elders forward a notice of disfellowshipping to Branch Office elders for their spiritual review to ensure that their decision was spiritually-based and well-founded. The notice of disfellowshipping has the name of the disfellowshipped person, the date of disfellowshipping, and the Scriptural basis for disfellowshipping. See Exhibit '1' Shuster Affidavit ¶¶ 16, 19.

The confidentiality of spiritual communication between congregation members and elders is a foundational element of the religious beliefs and teachings of Jehovah's Witnesses. Jehovah's Witnesses recognize the Bible's admonition to confess one's sins to God and believe that there is a great benefit from speaking to congregation elders regarding such confidential spiritual matters. As such, Jehovah's Witnesses encourage those who need spiritual assistance to approach the congregation elders and convey to them whatever information may be necessary to provide such spiritual assistance. See Exhibit '1' Shuster Affidavit ¶¶ 17-21; Exhibit '2' Clarke Affidavit ¶¶ 6-11.

Since open and free communication between congregation members and elders is required to provide spiritual counsel and advice under the religious beliefs and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses, emphasis is placed on privacy and strict confidentiality. The confidentiality requirements with respect to such spiritual communications are explained in official literature and publications of Jehovah's Witnesses. Congregants expect that all spiritual communications with congregation elders will remain strictly confidential. Further, revealing confidential spiritual communications would call into question an elder's qualifications and could result in his removal as an elder in the congregation. Moreover, if an elder was compelled to disclose confidential information, his credibility and effectiveness as an elder, as well as the credibility and effectiveness of other elders in the congregation, would be adversely affected and compromised, since congregants would not trust and rely upon their belief that personal problems and information they disclose would not be revealed and used against them in a court action. See Exhibit '1' Shuster Affidavit ¶¶ 10, 18-21; Exhibit '2' Clarke Affidavit ¶¶ 7-11.

Jehovah's Witnesses do not believe that the confidentiality of spiritual communications they may have with congregation elders is limited to confessions. This is in harmony with California Evidence Code Section 1032 as discussed below. Such confidentiality extends to all confidential communications of a spiritual nature, including those that take place in the course of judicial investigations or committees, or while seeking and providing spiritual counsel and advice. Additionally, based upon Scripture and church tradition, such confidentiality requirements also extend to congregation files, notes, papers, reports, minutes or other documents prepared in conjunction with, or as a result of, confidential spiritual communications. Should the disclosure of such documents be compelled, the credibility and effectiveness of those in charge of the spiritual well being of entire congregations will be compromised. See Exhibit '1' Shuster Affidavit ¶¶ 19-22; Exhibit '2' Clarke Affidavit ¶¶ 7, 11-13.

III. Penitential Privilege

A. The penitential privilege should apply to all of the testimony sought in this matter.

1. The first line of questioning objected to is the reasons why Mr. Kendrick was removed as a ministerial servant called for the witness to reveal confidential communication that he had received in confidence as an elder from a penitent.

2. The second line of questioning objected to is regarding what led to the judicial investigation of Mr. Kendrick during the time that he was a ministerial servant assumes that there was a "judicial committee" which in itself is confidential unless according to the beliefs and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses there is a later announcement about the outcome of a judicial committee. All communications to the elders involved in the judicial committee, if there was one, qualify as penitential communications made to a member of the clergy and are privileged.

3. The third line of questioning objected to involved speaking to Evelyn Kendrick concerning allegations involving sexual abuse of her daughter Andrea by Mr. Kendrick likewise seeks testimony of conversations between members of the congregation and their clergy made in confidence to obtain spiritual guidance and direction.

4. The fourth line of questioning objected to sought testimony regarding any reports received by the Body of Elders or any member thereof, to your knowledge, concerning sexual abuse of a child by an adult likewise seeks the revelation of communications made to elders as ministers for the purpose of obtaining spiritual guidance and direction.

5. The fifth line of questioning that was objected to had to do with communications between two congregations concerning Mr. Kendrick and sought testimony from the witness about confidential communications between ministers of the Oakley Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses and ministers of the North Freemont Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses that in themselves were seeking spiritual guidance and direction.

6. The final line of questions that were objected to involved supplying the names of any members of judicial committee that heard any issues relating to Mr. Kendrick.

B. California's Penitential Privilege.

In each instance related above, Plaintiff seeks to compel the witness to disclose information that is protected by the penitential privilege set forth in California Evidence Code section 1030, et seq. California Evidence Code section 1033 provides: "Subject to section 912, a penitent, whether or not a party, has a privilege to refuse to, and to prevent another from disclosing, a penitential communication if he claims the privilege." California Evidence Code section 1034 further provides: "Subject to section 912, a clergyman, whether or not a party, has a privilege to refuse to disclose a penitential communication if he claims the privilege." Under California's statutory scheme, a "member of the clergy" is defined as a "priest, minister, religious practitioner, or similar functionary of a church or of a religious denomination or religious organization." California Evidence Code section 1031. Therefore, appointed elders of Jehovah's Witnesses are clearly within this definition of "clergyman." The testimony sought by Plaintiff seeks to invade confidential communications made to the witness by a penitent for which he claims the privilege.

It must be noted that a "penitent" is defined simply as "a person who has made a penitential communication to a clergyman." California Evidence Code section 1031. In turn, a "penitential communication" is not just a confession in the traditional sense of the word but in harmony with the separation of church and state embodied in the First Amendment to the United States Constitution and the First Amendment to the California Constitution broadly defines penitential as follows:

> As used in this article, 'penitential communication' means a communication made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a clergyman who, in the course of the discipline or practice of his church, denomination, or organization, is authorized or accustomed to hear such communications and, under the discipline or tenants of his church, denomination or organization, has a duty to keep such communication secret.

Under Evidence Code section 1032, there is no requirement that the communication "have as its purpose the confession of a 'flawed act' to 'receive religious consolation and guidance in return' in order to be privileged." Doe 2 v. Superior Court (2005) 132 Cal.App.4th 1504, 1518. Rather, the privilege applies to any communication that fits the statutory description. See Cal. Law Revision Com. com., West's Ann. Evid. Code (2011) foll. § 1032 (statute extends protection of privilege beyond just "confessions"). Consequently, a "penitential communication" is not limited to just confessions in the stereotypical sense of the word. It is any communication that fits the statutory description.

California case law supports the foregoing analysis. The court in People v. Edwards (1988) 203 Cal.App.3d 1358, 1362-63,[3] defined the elements of the rule of privilege.

[3] "In order for a statement to be privileged, it must satisfy all of the conceptual requirements of a penitential communication: (1) it must be intended to be in confidence; (2) it must be made to a member of the clergy who in the course of his or her religious discipline or practice is authorized or accustomed to hear such communications; and (3) such member of the clergy has a duty under the discipline or tenants of the church, religious denomination or organization to keep such communications secret."

C. The Testimony Sought Constitutes Penitential Communications.

The communications at issue were made in a fashion that requires the rule of privilege to apply. The questions indicate that the communications were made by a "penitent" as defined by California Evidence Code section 1031 to an elder or elders of Jehovah's Witnesses (clergy) with a reasonable expectation of privacy under the religious beliefs and tenets of Jehovah's Witnesses. Additionally, the fifth and final lines of questioning pursued by counsel for Plaintiff sought communications between elders regarding internal organizational matters relating to the discipline of a congregation member. Those communications were intended to remain strictly confidential. Each was made to elders, members of the "clergy." (See Exhibit '1' Shuster Affidavit ¶¶ 13-22.) Each elder has a duty under the tenets of the Jehovah's Witness faith to keep such communications secret. As pointed out in the Affidavit of Allen Shuster, the sharing of this information between the elders in Mr. Kendrick's congregation and the elders in the Service Department (headquarters) or between elders in the Oakley Congregation are all part of the spiritual counsel and advice as to the proper application of religious doctrine and procedures. The sharing of that information does not affect the confidentiality of those communications, or destroy the privilege for such "penitential communications." Under these circumstances, Evidence Code section 917 provides that the confidential quality of the communications must be presumed. California Evidence Code section 917 provides that the opponent of the claim of privilege has the burden of proof to establish that the communication was not confidential.

1. There is No Evidence that Penitential Communications Were Made With the Knowledge that they Would be Revealed to Anyone Other than Qualified Elders.

From time to time, congregation elders communicate with other elders and elders serving in the Branch Office's Service Department, as well as with elders serving as circuit overseers, in order to receive spiritual guidance and advice as to how to apply the religious doctrine and procedures of Jehovah's Witnesses to issues concerning the congregation and its members. All such spiritual communications between congregation elders and the Branch Office Service Department or circuit overseer are not administrative communications but confidential communications that must be kept strictly confidential under the religious tenets and teachings of Jehovah's Witnesses. See Shuster Affidavit ¶¶ 13, 19.

Congregation elders are required by the tenets of their faith to keep confessions and other confidential spiritual communications (all of which are defined under the Evidence Code as "penitential") strictly confidential. Similarly, Jehovah's Witnesses doctrine requires that all confidential spiritual communications between congregation elders and elders serving in the Branch Office's Service Department, as well as with elders serving as circuit overseers, be kept in the strictest confidence. Additionally, confidential spiritual communications taking place during a 'judicial investigation" and during "judicial committee" meetings are considered to be extremely private and elders must keep such confidential spiritual communications strictly confidential. Plaintiff asserts in the Motion to Compel production of documents and by inference herein that the penitential privilege does not apply because the elders were required to communicate information it obtained regarding potential cases of child molestation to the Watchtower Society Headquarters. First, this argument does not apply to each line of questioning. Second, the elders' communications to the elders in the Service Department or to a Body of Elders in another congregations does not automatically result in a breach of their duty to keep penitential communications—whether made to an individual elder or a judicial committee—secret and confidential. Rather, the relevant inquiry is (1) what information was communicated in those settings (i.e. did the congregation elders reveal the penitent's actual communications?) and (2) did the penitent know or expect that his confidential communication would be disclosed to the Service Department elders or another Body of Elders.

With regard to the first question, it is unlikely that the congregation elders in this case revealed the contents of the actual communications they had with Jonathan Kendrick (penitent) or with other members of the congregation that communicated to the elders in a confidential manner

("penitents"). Thus, any such communication would not be a waiver under Section 912(a) (a waiver would occur only if the holder of a privilege "has disclosed a significant part of the communication or has consented to disclosure made by anyone"). If the Court finds any legal validity to Plaintiff's arguments, then after ruling on the disclosure of documents pending in the September 29, 2011, hearing it could be in a better position to rule on the claim of privilege to the testimony sought by this motion. The Church defendants urge the Court to make an in camera inspection of the documents in question that relate to Mr. Kendrick to determine whether any confidential communications that the elders may have made to elders serving in the Service Department disclosed "a significant part" of a communication resulting in a waiver.

With regard to the second question, in Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal. App 4th 417, 445, upon which plaintiff relies, a priest discussed his psychological and sexual problems with the cardinal and an appointed "vicar for clergy." The priest knew that his conversations, along with the documents that were created as a result of the conversations, were routinely shared with the archbishop, the cardinal, the vicar for clergy, as well as other employees of the archdiocese. Although the priest claimed that these communications were privileged under Section 1032, the court held that the privilege was waived because "both parties to the original communication knew it likely would be transmitted to a third person." Id. Importantly, it was noted by that court that disclosure of this confidential information to the bishop and vicar was not required by Catholic tenets or doctrine. Thus, any privilege was waived by the communicant, since he knew the information would not be kept in confidence. In this case, Plaintiff provides no evidence to refute the fact that Jonathan Kendrick or other members of the congregation expected their communications with their congregation elders to remain strictly confidential. Under the tenets and doctrines of the Jehovah's Witness faith, the communications between other members of the congregation and their congregation elders or between Mr. Kendrick and his congregation elders and between his congregation elders and the Branch Office elders were all confidential. In determining whether a penitent's communication to a clergy member qualifies as a penitential communication, courts look to whether the penitent had an expectation of confidentiality at the time of their communication. Doe 2, 132 Cal.App.4th at 1518.

2. A Disclosure That is Privileged Itself Does Not Waive the Privilege

Plaintiff asserts that the penitential privilege was waived when the elders sought the spiritual advice of the elders in the Service Department. Again, a plain reading of Section 912 of the Evidence Codes indicates that such a disclosure does not constitute a waiver.

First, and very importantly, it must be acknowledged that elders (i.e., clergy) may also be penitents under Evidence Code section 1031, when they engage in confidential spiritual communications with other elders. Therefore, any confidential spiritual communications between congregation elders, circuit overseers (i.e., traveling elders), and Branch Office elders in New York for the purpose of obtaining spiritual counsel and advice are also penitential communications as that term is defined under Evidence Code section 1032 and thus protected from disclosure by Evidence Code sections 1033 and 1034.

According to the provisions of Section 912(c), "[a]disclosure that is itself privileged is not a waiver of any privilege." Thus, California recognizes that there will be situations when a privilege holder will have the need to speak to others about matters relating to their privileged communications. And, as long as the privilege holder limits these communications to individuals with whom he also has a privilege, then the privilege is not waived.

Thus, an elder who sought spiritual advice and direction from another elder—no matter where he was physically situated—regarding a privileged communication he received from a penitent, will not be deemed to have been waived the privilege as long as the three requirements of Section 1032 are met. The three requirements are met in this case. See Shuster Affidavit ¶ 19.

IV. First Amendment

The establishment clause in the First Amendment to the federal constitution provides that, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion...." Among other things, the U.S. Supreme Court has held that this clause prohibits the government's excessive entanglement with religion. The same argument made in Opposition to Compel Production of documents in this case applies herein. Under the established clause, every religion is guaranteed the same rights and protections. The U.S. Supreme Court has decisively settled that these protections have been made wholly applicable to the states by the Fourteenth.

As explained above, the tenets and religious beliefs of Jehovah's Witnesses doctrine establish the requirement that three or more elders receive and investigate penitent communications regarding allegations of serious transgression or sin. They also require that the Branch Office elders be informed. However, all elders are obligated to keep the information confidential. If this court denies the penitential privilege on the basis of a distinction between Jehovah's Witnesses' pastoral procedures and those of other religions, it would essentially establish "acceptable" religious practices in violation of the federal and state constitutional prohibitions of excessive governmental entanglement with religion.

Additionally, if this Court refused to apply the penitential privilege to the religious practices and doctrines of Jehovah's Witnesses for confidential communications, it would inhibit the free exercise of religion of Jehovah's Witnesses and the Watchtower Defendants in violation of the free exercise clauses of the state and federal constitutions. Only a neutral law of general applicability may burden the right to free exercise of religion. California courts also apply the strict scrutiny standard when deciding matters under the free exercise clause of the California Constitution. Catholic Charities of Sacramento, Inc. v. Superior Court (2004) 32 Cal.4th 527, 562.

The decision in Roman Catholic Archbishop is inapplicable because it concerned testimony and evidence to be presented to a grand jury in a criminal proceeding. Disclosure was required in that instance, the court held, "because the government had a compelling interest in prosecuting child molesters." In contrast, this case involves civil actions and not the criminal prosecutions of child molesters.

Here, the government has no compelling interest for eroding the penitent-clergy privilege to religions that require a penitent confess to one minister but denying the same privilege to religions that require that a penitent confess to more than one minister. Because there is no compelling state interest for the court's non-neutral judicial interpretation of the rule of privilege, Plaintiffs' arguments must be rejected.

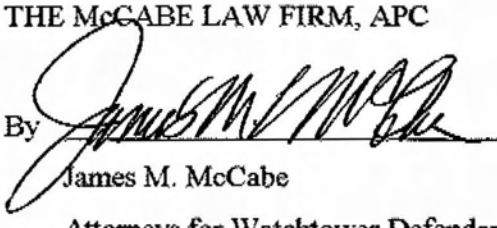
V. Trial Court Should Conduct an In Camera Inspection

Should this Court look favorably upon Plaintiff's Motion and the preceding Motion to Compel Production of documents, the Church Defendants alternatively request that this Court inspect each of the requested documents in camera before determining whether or not the privilege should apply as to each document in question. An in camera review by the trial court is appropriate to resolve a dispute as to whether requested documents, which contain privileged information, are discoverable. Lipton v. Superior Court (1996) 48 Cal.App.4th 1599, 1619-20.

VI. There is No Basis for Awarding Sanctions against the Church Defendants

Plaintiff admits that sanctions are only appropriate where the party seeking disclosure has shown good cause and that the objections to that disclosure are totally meritless. In this case, it seems clear that the Church Defendants have shown that there are valid legal arguments against the forced disclosure of each of the testimony sought by Plaintiff. Therefore, it is respectfully submitted that, regardless of the outcome of this motion, Plaintiff's application for sanctions against the Church Defendants should be denied.

VII. Conclusion



The Church Defendants have attempted in good faith to reasonably respond to all of Plaintiff's requests for information. In the face of Church doctrine and the protections of California Evidence Code, the Church Defendants asserted all appropriate objections and privileges. While Plaintiff is entitled to information reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence (i.e., "relevant" information), Plaintiff is not entitled to obtain testimony that is protected from disclosure by the penitential privilege.

Therefore, based on the foregoing, the Church Defendants respectfully request that Plaintiffs' application re production of withheld documents be denied.

AFFIDAVIT OF ALLEN SHUSTER

I, Allen Shuster, after being duly sworn, depose and state and if called to testify would do so as follows:

1. I am over 18 years of age, of sound mind, and competent to make this Affidavit. I have personal knowledge of the matters contained herein, and they are all true and correct.

2. I reside in Patterson, New York and have served as an elder in the faith of Jehovah's Witnesses since 1979.

3. Since February 1981, I have served in the Service Department at the U.S. Branch Offices of Jehovah's Witnesses in New York. I provide spiritual assistance to congregation elders who call or write the Service Department for help. Prior to March 2001, the spiritual assistance provided by the Service Department, along with the appointment of elders, was communicated to congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses through the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. Since March 2001, this has been communicated through the Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses.

4. My duties in the Service Department also include monitoring the functioning, organization, and staffing of congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses, including reviewing the qualifications for the appointment of elders to congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses in the United States.

QUALIFICATIONS OF ELDERS

5. Jehovah's Witnesses are not automatically appointed to serve as congregation elders. Rather, they must first meet certain qualifications that are outlined in the Bible, as follows: Before a male member of the congregation can be considered for appointment as a congregation elder, he must first be baptized as one of Jehovah's Witnesses. Next the individual must gain further knowledge of the Holy Scriptures and show a willingness to be used in a further way to assist others in the congregation. If he shows such a willingness, he must then meet Scriptural qualifications set out in 1 Timothy 3:8-13. Thereafter, he may qualify and be appointed as a ministerial servant. Although a ministerial servant would not provide spiritual supervision in the congregation, he could be assigned certain tasks to assist the congregation elders as they carry out their duties. After a period of time—perhaps many years—a ministerial servant who has faithfully carried out his assignments and has gained more experience may meet the qualifications of a congregation elder as outlined in 1 Timothy 3:1-7 and Titus 1:6-9.

When this occurs, the congregation body of elders will make this recommendation to the circuit overseer (a representative of the Branch office who is also an experienced elder). If the circuit overseer agrees with the recommendation, it will then be forwarded to the Branch office's Service Department. Approved elders in the Service Department will then review the recommendation in accord with the guidelines outlined in the Holy Scriptures, adopted by the Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses. The Branch office will then inform the local congregation's body of elders, in writing, of their determination with regards the recommendation.

6. If an individual is appointed to serve as a congregation elder, the letter of appointment from the Branch office is read to the congregation. It is at this time that he is officially vested with ministerial authority. In other words, he is appointed as a congregation elder.

7. Jehovah's Witnesses who serve as appointed elders are recognized as ordained ministers and congregation elders.

8. Like Jesus and his apostles, congregation elders do not receive a salary for their ministerial work. Nonetheless, as ordained ministers and congregation elders, they are responsible for providing spiritual supervision to the congregations, which includes hearing confessions and other confidential spiritual communications made to them by congregation members who are seeking spiritual counsel, advice or comfort.

9. Congregation elders are authorized to hear confessions and other confidential spiritual communications and to provide confidential spiritual counsel, advice, and comfort by virtue of the Holy Scriptures and the Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses.

10. According to the religious beliefs and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses, congregation elders are expected to keep confession and other confidential spiritual communications confidential. An elder who reveals such a confession or other confidential spiritual communication, without the express permission of the one making the confession or confidential spiritual communication may be disqualified from serving as an elder.

11. All elders of local congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses, including the North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses in Fremont, California (hereinafter "North Congregation"), are and were at all times relevant to this case ordained ministers and the spiritual leaders of their respective congregations.

DUTIES OF ELDERS

12. As with all congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses, the North Congregation elders frequently provide spiritual counsel, advice, and comfort to congregation members concerning highly confidential and personal matters of a spiritual nature.

13. In addition, at all times relevant to this case, the North Congregation elders occasionally communicated with elders serving in the Branch Office's Service Department, as well as with elders serving as circuit overseers, in order to receive spiritual counsel and advice as to how to apply the religious doctrine and procedures of Jehovah's Witnesses to issues concerning the congregation and its members. As discussed more fully below, the religious beliefs of these elders also require that any confidential spiritual communications between elders serving in the Branch Office's Service Department, elders serving as circuit overseers, and congregation elders must be kept strictly confidential. The spiritual counsel and advice given by the elders serving in the Branch Office's Service Department, elders serving as circuit overseers, and congregation elders is based on Jehovah's Witnesses' understanding of the Bible.

14. The elders of congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses are also responsible for conducting what is referred to as "judicial investigations" when a member of a congregation is accused of serious Scriptural wrongdoing. Judicial investigations are carried out by two elders selected by the congregation body of elders.

15. The goal of a judicial investigation is to make certain that the Christian congregation remains spiritually and morally clean. (James 1:26) In doing so, if the elders confirm that serious Scriptural wrongdoing has occurred, a judicial committee of at least three elders is selected by the congregation body of elders to endeavor to provide spiritual assistance to the congregant who may have sinned, with the hope of assisting them to regain their spirituality and relationship with God. (Galatians 6:1, 2) At times, a judicial committee will determine that an accused congregant should be spiritually disciplined internally, based on Jehovah's Witnesses' understanding of the Bible.

16. Spiritual discipline administered by elders of Jehovah's Witnesses serving on a judicial committee is based solely on Jehovah's Witnesses' understanding of the Bible as applied to the facts of the matter. Where a serious sin is involved and the accused person is repentant, the judicial committee may recommend private or public reproof. But if the person who committed a serious sin cannot be brought back to repentance, the individual will have to be disfellowshipped. When a member is subject to public reproof or disfellowshipping, an announcement is made during a congregation meeting simply to the effect that "[name] has been reproved" or "[name] is no longer one of Jehovah's Witnesses."

17. Jehovah's Witnesses recognize the Bible's admonition to confess ones sins to God. 1 John 1:8, 9 ("If we confess our sins, he is faithful and righteous so as to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.").

18. In addition Jehovah's Witnesses also believe that there can be much benefit from speaking to the congregation elders ("older men") regarding such confidential matters. James 5:13-16 ("Is there anyone suffering evil among YOU? Let him carry on prayer. Is there anyone in good spirits? Let him sing psalms. Is there anyone sick among YOU? Let him call the older men of the congregation to [him], and let them pray over him, greasing [him] with oil in the name of Jehovah. And the prayer of faith will make the indisposed one well, and Jehovah will raise him up. Also, if he has committed sins, it will be forgiven him. Therefore openly confess YOUR sins to one another and pray for one another, that YOU may get healed."). Jehovah's Witnesses view confessions and other confidential and private communications of a spiritual nature between congregation members and elders as communications that elders must keep confidential. Proverbs 25:9.

19. Jehovah's Witnesses do not believe that the confidentiality of spiritual communications they may have with the congregation elders is limited to confessions. Rather, as outlined in James 5:13-16, Jehovah's Witnesses are encouraged to seek the spiritual counsel and advice of the elders in a variety of life situations. Congregation elders are also encouraged to seek spiritual counsel and advice from elders serving in the Branch Office's Service Department, or from elders serving as circuit overseers, in order to receive spiritual counsel and advice as to how to apply the religious doctrine and procedures of Jehovah's Witnesses to issues concerning the congregation and its members, and on occasion congregation elders seek such spiritual counsel and advice. Such confidential spiritual communications from congregation elders are only handled by elders in the Branch Office Service Department. In addition, if a congregation member is disfellowshipped, the judicial committee elders forward a notice of disfellowshipping to Branch Office elders for their review to ensure that their decision was spiritually based and well founded. The notice of disfellowshipping has the name of the disfellowshipped person, the date of disfellowshipping, and the Scriptural basis for disfellowshipping. Jehovah's Witnesses view all such spiritual communications as confidential communications that must be kept strictly confidential.

20. Elders do not allow unnecessary third parties to be a party to a confidential communication. However, at times more than one elder may be a party to the conversation. For instance, it is Jehovah's Witnesses religious belief and practice to have at least two elders present during a judicial investigation and at least three elders present during a judicial committee. (Deuteronomy 17:6; Deuteronomy 19:15; Matthew 18:15-17; 2 Corinthians 13:1; 1 Timothy 5:19) Before one becomes one of Jehovah's Witnesses, he would be made aware of this provision. Your Word Is a Lamp To My Foot, pages 176-79; Organization for Kingdom-Preaching and Disciple-Making, pages 159-65; Organized to Accomplish Our Ministry, pages 145-47; Organized To Do Jehovah's Will, pages 151-2. In addition, there may be instances where a husband and wife, or a parent and child, may together seek or would be provided with spiritual counsel, advice or comfort from the elders. Jehovah's Witnesses believe that men are imperfect and, therefore, three elders serving on a judicial committee can provide more full and complete spiritual counsel and advice based on a broader range of experience and knowledge than can a single elder alone. The elders and participants to these confidential and private spiritual communications would view these communications as confidential and congregants would expect the elders to keep such communications strictly confidential.

21. In addition, the religious doctrine of Jehovah's Witnesses requires that all elders keep these confidential and private spiritual communications strictly confidential. The Watchtower, April 1, 1971, pages 222-224; Kingdom Ministry, July 1975; The Watchtower, December 15, 1975, pages 764-66; The Watchtower, September 1, 1983, pages 21-26; The Watchtower, September 15, 1989, pages 10-15; The Watchtower, September 1, 1991, pages 22-27; The Watchtower, November 15, 1991, pages 19-23. Indeed, an elder who reveals the contents of such a confidential communication may be subject to removal.

22. In this case, Withheld Documents one through five referenced in Plaintiff's Notice of Motion and Motion to Compel, were all received by or sent by elders serving in the Branch Office's Service Department and are the type of confidential communications and documents described in paragraphs 13-21 above, which must be kept strictly confidential. The undersigned therefore claims and does not waive the penitent privilege as to any of the Withheld Documents.

Case No.: HG11558324

AFFIDAVIT OF MICHAEL L. CLARKE

I, Michael L. Clarke, after being duly sworn, depose and state and if called to testify would do so as follows:

1. That I am over 21 years of age and reside in Fremont, California.

2. That I have been a member of the North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, in Fremont, California since 1989.

3. That from August 29, 1989, until the present I have served as a duly ordained minister and elder of the North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses in Fremont, California.

4. That I am thoroughly familiar with the religious beliefs, teachings, practices, and organization of Jehovah's Witnesses.

5. That Jehovah's Witnesses who are responsible for teaching and pastoral care of congregation members are called "elders."

6. That it is a religious belief and practice of Jehovah's Witnesses based on God's Word, the Bible, that an elder has a responsibility to provide spiritual counsel and advice to those who seek or need it, and that a person who seeks or needs spiritual counsel and advice conveys to the elders whatever information may be needed to provide this spiritual assistance.—Isaiah 32:2; James 5:14-16; Hebrews 13:17.

7. That it is the religious belief and practice of Jehovah's Witnesses, based upon Scripture and tradition, that elders must maintain in strict confidence any church communications connected with such spiritual counsel and advice and congregants expect that their communications to elders will remain confidential.—Proverbs 15:22; 25:9, 10.

8. That revealing such confidential communications would call into question an elder's qualifications and could result in his removal as an elder in the congregation.

9. That if Affiant or any other elder is compelled to disclose such confidential information, his credibility and effectiveness as an elder, as well as the credibility and effectiveness of the other elders in the congregation, would be adversely affected and compromised, since congregation members will no longer be able to trust and rely that problems and confidential information they disclose to elders will not be revealed through discovery and used against them in a court action or otherwise violate their expectation of privacy and confidentiality.

10. That the requirement of keeping the above-described confidential and spiritual communications to elders confidential is explained in the official publications of Jehovah's Witnesses as follows:

> In each congregation of Jehovah's witnesses there are mature ministers appointed to care for various assignments. (1 Tim. 3:2, 12) As they discharge their duties they often are told about confidential things, and it is essential that they respect this confidence. For instance, James 5:13-16 shows that a member of the congregation who has some spiritual problem, perhaps even having committed a sin, should go to the spiritually older men for help. Isaiah 32:2 prophetically pictured these men as places of comfort and protection. What a fine thing it is to be able to explain one's problem and get balanced spiritual help, and at the same time have full confidence that the matter will not become general knowledge in the congregation or community.
>
> Those mature ministers will not discuss even with their wives and close friends what they thus learn in confidence. They know that if they did so it would undermine respect for their positions; it would make individuals hesitant to come to them; yes, in time it might even make it impossible for them to fulfill their role as spiritual shepherds.

The Watchtower, April 1, 1971, p. 223.

11. That it is also the religious belief and practice of Jehovah's Witnesses, based upon Scripture and church tradition, to keep congregation files, papers, reports, minutes or other documents prepared in conjunction with, or as a result of, the above-described confidential communications, strictly confidential.

12. That Withheld Documents one through five referenced in Plaintiffs' Ex Parte Application Re Production of Withheld Documents, were all prepared, signed, and sent by Affiant or received by Affiant as an elder in the North Congregation, and are the type of confidential communications and documents described in paragraph 6-11 above, which must be kept strictly confidential. The undersigned Affiant therefore claims and does not waive the penitential privilege as to any of the Withheld Documents.

13. That if Affiant or any other elder is compelled to produce any papers, reports, minutes or other documents prepared in conjunction with or as a result of the above-described confidential communications, the credibility and effectiveness of Petitioner and other elders in the congregation, will be adversely affected and compromised, and the confidentiality of the oral communications will be rendered worthless.

SIGNED this the 11 day of August, 2011.

INTRODUCTION

The Jehovah's Witnesses defendants oppose the Motion to Compel further testimony from Gary Abrahamson, an Elder of the North Congregation, based upon an expanded interpretation of the Evidence Code Clergy/Penitent Privilege not supported by either statutory language or case law. Under the Jehovah's Witnesses' interpretation of the Evidence Code, all reports of sexual abuse of minors, internal proceedings to investigate such reports, and discipline imposed as a result of findings of childhood sexual abuse by an officer or member, are institutional secrets. The law does not support such secrecy.

I. COMMUNICATIONS REGARDING ADMINISTRATIVE DECISIONS ARE NOT CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNCIATIONS.

The communications at issue, which involve perpetrator Mr. Jonathan Kendrick, reports of sexual abuse concerning him, and his investigation and removal as a Ministerial Servant, are all viewed as issues of "spiritual guidance" by the Church defendants in their opposition. Their position runs contrary to both Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 417, and In Re The Clergy Cases I (2010) 188 Cal.App.4th 1224. In The Clergy Cases I, the Franciscan Order voluntarily permitted psychotherapists to disclose psychiatric reports "to make personnel decisions and to arrange for treatment". (188 Cal.App.4th at 1241). The use of the privileged psychotherapist communications for administrative personnel decisions was held to be a waiver of all privileges. The same ruling applies to the administrative matters in this case.

II. REPORTS OF SEXUAL ABUSE OF CHILDREN BY MEMBERS WERE NOT INTENDED TO BE CONFIDENTIAL BY THE ESTABLISHED TESTIMONY.

Neither of the two Declarations produced by defendants in opposition to the Motion to Compel addresses specific communications by a Church member that another member or officer was sexually abusing a child. The generic declarations of Mr. Shuster and Mr. Clark generally address issues of spiritual guidance and application of religious doctrine. However, sexual abuse of a child is a criminal act and felony (Penal Code §288), whether done in Church or elsewhere. There is no evidence produced that any communication to Mr. Abrahamson by Evelyn Kendrick, the former spouse of Jane Doe's perpetrator Jonathan Kendrick, was intended by her to be a request for her own "spiritual guidance." There is no evidence that the subsequent investigation and administrative conduct, including Mr. Kendrick's removal as a Ministerial Servant, involved any "spiritual communication" by Ms. Kendrick. On the contrary, Mr. Abrahamson's testimony clearly admits that a Congregation member who is reporting sexual abuse of a child is doing so with the expectation that there will be an investigation, and by inference, administrative action. (Abrahamson Depo. 60:6-18). The specific testimony of Mr. Abrahamson, a copy of which is attached as Exhibit "1" to this Reply brief, was as follows:

> Q. So would I be correct in saying that an individual member who brought to an elder's attention a specific situation that would be of such a serious nature that an investigation would follow would customarily be aware of the power of the elders to convene an investigation?

A. I believe I understand your question, so to answer that question, the congregation would expect the elders to investigate an allegation of serious wrongdoing.

Q. And certainly sexual abuse of a child would fall under that category of serious wrongdoing?

A. Yes.

The communications involved in the deposition questions at issue do not address spiritual requests for guidance. They address complaints and actions related to the secular crime of child abuse. Evidence Code §1032 has no application, as its express requirements as to the nature of a "Confidential Communication" are not present.

Counsel for the parties met and conferred telephonically on September 15, pursuant to the Court's Order. The session was recorded, and the audio recording is attached as Exhibit 1 to this Joint Statement.

During the session, Counsel stipulated that Plaintiff will drop the Motion to Compel as to Separate Statement categories II and IV, the records concerning plaintiff Jane Doe's family members, and further stipulated that the withdrawal of the Motion to Compel as to these items is based upon the agreement that the Church defendants will not provide any information included in such records, or the records themselves, to any expert on damages; that the defense will not cross examine any witness concerning such records or their content; and that evidence of and evaluation by experts of issues of causation and damages shall be made solely upon such other evidence as may be adduced during discovery or at trial, including the depositions, records of mental or other health care providers, and other documentation or evidence obtained independently of any of the records that are subject of the motion.

Because of the serious difference in the interpretation of the evidence Code privilege as it applies to this case, Counsel remain unable to resolve the issues in categories I and III, concerning records of the perpetrator of Plaintiff's sexual abuse, Mr. Kendrick. Counsel for Defendants has offered, and Plaintiff has no objection, to submit the documents to the Court for in camera review.

Doe Plaintiff/Petitioner(s) VS. The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, I Defendant/Respondent(s) (Abbreviated Title)	No. HG11558324 Order Motion to Compel Further Answers at Deposition Granted

The Motion to Compel Further Answers at Deposition was set for hearing on 09/29/2011 at 03:00 PM in Department 22 before the Honorable Robert McGuiness. The Tentative Ruling was published and has not been contested.

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED THAT:

The tentative ruling is affirmed as follows: The Motion of Plaintiff Jane Doe to Compel Answers to Questions at Deposition of Gary Abrahamson and for Sanctions is GRANTED. Plaintiff has established that the information sought is not precluded from disclosure under the penitent-clergy privilege, Evidence Code §1031-1034 because the questions do not appear to call for communications that were presumed to be kept confidential with only the clergy member to whom they were communication. Instead, the questions appear to call for information and communications of a kind that would be expected to be communicated beyond that clergy member to others within the religious organization, i.e. a judicial investigating committee, for purposes of taking responding to the communication within the church. (Cf. Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 417, 445-46.)

Defendant shall present Gary Abrahamson for further deposition and shall not instruct him not to answer the questions identified in the motion based upon clergy-penitent privilege.
The further deposition shall take place at a mutually-convenient time, but no later than 20 days after entry of this order.

The request for sanctions in connection with this motion is DENIED.

MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN SUPPORT

STATEMENT OF FACTS

On January 28, 2011, Plaintiff filed a complaint in the Alameda County Superior Court alleging childhood sexual abuse ("Complaint"). It is four pages in length and consists of only two causes of action, the second of which for "Willful and Intentional Acts" is the only one against Defendant Kendrick. As a result of the "acts" that are said to have occurred when Plaintiff was a minor, Plaintiff alleges she suffered physical and emotional damages including "medical and other expenses for care, treatment, and counseling; and has suffered loss of earnings and earning capacity" and will incur future damages in an unspecified amount.

Defendant Kendrick was not served with Plaintiff's Complaint until July 16, 2011, almost six months after Plaintiff filed her Complaint. (Kendrick Decl., Exh. A.) Plaintiff's only explanation for the extraordinary delay in service of process was given in her May 12, 2011 Case Management Statement in which she claims Defendant Kendrick was "not at address listed at Registered Sex Offender website." (Kendrick Decl., Exh. B.) From January 28, 2011 to July 16, 2011, litigation in the case was well underway. The remaining defendants ("Church Defendants") filed a Demurrer to the Complaint on March 28, 2011 (Docket entry #14), which was heard and ruled on by the Court on May 19, 2011. (Docket entries #18 and 19 respectively) On June 3, 2011, Church Defendants filed their answer to the Complaint. (Docket entry #22) The initial case management conference took place on June 14, 2011 (Docket entry #23) where the pre-trial settlement conference and trial date were set. (Docket entries #25 and #27 respectively) Furthermore, written discovery had already commenced to the extent that Church Defendants filed a motion to compel production of documents on July 19, 2011. (Docket entry #29) All of this took place without Defendant Kendrick's knowledge or participation.

Once Defendant Kendrick was finally served with the Complaint, he immediately began seeking legal representation, being unaware of the 30-day deadline for him to file a responsive pleading. When Defendant Kendrick's 30 days had passed, Plaintiff filed a Request for Entry of Default with the Court (Docket entry #40; Kendrick Decl., Exh. C.), which the clerk entered on August 26, 2011. (Docket entry #41) To date, Defendant Kendrick has not been able to secure representation but is eager to defend himself against Plaintiff's malicious allegations with the hope of clearing his name. Defendant Kendrick has attached to his declaration in support of this motion, filed concurrently herewith, a copy of his proposed answer to the Complaint (Kendrick Decl., Exh. E.), showing is good faith and readiness to respond should the Court graciously grant the relief sought.

STATEMENT OF THE LAW

The Court has broad discretion to vacate a clerk's entry of default should the moving party establish through proper procedure and within the statutory time limited, proper ground for relief. [Cruz v. Fagor America, Inc. (2006) 146 CA4th 488, 495, 52 CR3d 862, 866] Because Defendant Kendrick has yet to retain representation, the relief he seeks is discretionary and must be based on a showing of "mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect." [C.C.P. § 473(b); see also Lorenz v. Commercial Accept. Ins. Co. (1995) 40 CA4th 981, 989, 47 CR2d 362, 365-66 (citing text)] The moving party has six (6) months after entry of default to seek such discretionary relief through the filing of a motion request same. [C.C.P. § 473(b)]

ARGUMENT

I. DEFENDANT KENDRICK'S NOT FILING A RESPONSIVE PLEADING IS DUE TO EXCUSABLE NEGLECT AND THE DEFAULT ENTERED SHOULD BE SET ASIDE UNDER C.C.P. § 473(b)

The Court is empowered to relieve a party "upon such terms as may be just" from a clerk's entry of default against him through his "mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect." [C.C.P. § 473(b), emphasis added] The moving party has the burden of showing a reasonable excuse for the default. [Davis v. Thayer (1980) 113 CA3d 892, 905, 170 CR 328, 334] By showing that the acts which brought about the default must have been "the acts of a reasonably prudent person under the same circumstances." [Jackson v. Bank of America (1983) 141 CA3d 55, 58, 190 CR 78, 80]

Upon service of the Complaint, Defendant Kendrick knew he needed a lawyer because he has no knowledge of or experience in the civil legal arena. Defendant Kendrick contacted the attorneys for Church Defendant(s) asking for their help and representation. He was told they were unable to provide him with legal assistance in this matter. (Kendrick Decl., Exh. D – in the footnote on page one of Church Defendants' Demurrer, said defendants make it abundantly clear that they are not representing Defendant Kendrick and that appearance was not made on his behalf in any way.) Afterward, Defendant Kendrick began diligently searching for his own an attorney but was quoted on several occasions a retainer fee of more than $10,000.00, which he absolutely cannot afford. He continues to seek counsel but the factors working against him, primarily the inability to afford the attorney's fees involved, have made retaining an attorney to date impossible. Not knowing that he had only a short amount of time to act after receiving the Complaint before having a default entered against him, Defendant Kendrick spent his time seeking representation and did not understand he had to respond within 30 days. Evidence that the defendant is unable to understand the meaning behind being served with process is sufficient to justify discretionary relief under C.C.P. § 473(b). This shows excusable neglect in allowing the default to occur. [Kesselman v. Kesselman (1963) 212 CA3d 196, 207-208, 27 CR 769, 776-777] Further, evidence that the defendant was unable to retain a lawyer may also show excusable neglect. [Bernards v. Grey (1950) 97 CA3d 679, 683-686, 218 P2d 597, 599-601]

II. GRANTING THIS MOTION WILL NOT PREJUDICE PLAINTIFF, RATHER DENIAL OF THIS MOTION WILL CONTINUE TO PREJUDICE DEFENDANT

A. Pursuant to C.R.C. 3.110(b), Plaintiff Was Required To Serve The Complaint On All Named Defendants And Proofs Of Service On Those Defendants Must Be Filed With The Court Within 60 Days After The Filing Of The Complaint

Plaintiff filed her complaint with the Court on January 28, 2011. (Docket entry #1) The Court issued the summons on said complaint that same day. (Docket entry #3). However, in her Case Management Statement ("CMS") filed with the Court on May 12, 2011[1], Plaintiff admits that service of the summons and complaint had yet to be effected on Defendant Kendrick. (Docket entry #17; Kendrick Decl., Exh. B.)

[1] Plaintiff served this Case Management Statement by mail on counsel for the Church Defendants only, as per the document's attached proof of service.

Pursuant to C.R.C. 3.110(b), Plaintiff was required to serve all defendants, including Defendant Kendrick, with the summons and complaint within sixty (60) days of filing her complaint, or by March 29, 2011. Plaintiff managed to serve all of the other defendants prior to that date but for some reason did not serve Defendant Kendrick. Further, in her May 12, 2011 CMS – which was approximately 45 days over the 60-day deadline set by C.R.C. 3.110(b), Plaintiff's broad and unspecific reason for not having served Defendant Kendrick was "...not at address listed at Registered Sex Offender website." No testament or documentation is provided supporting her statement or proving Plaintiff had even made any diligent attempt at all to effect service. It was not until July 16, 2011, 109 days after the Court issued the summons in this matter, that Defendant Kendrick was finally served.[2] (Kendrick Decl., Exh. A.)

By the time Defendant Kendrick was served in mid-July 2011, the case was well into litigation. Among other things, the Court had already heard and ruled on Church defendants' demurrer to Plaintiff's complaint, the parties were well into the discovery process and a trial date had been set. From the date of service, Defendant Kendrick was already at a severe disadvantage.

B. Plaintiff Did Not Timely File Her Request For Entry Of Default Against Defendant Kendrick

Plaintiff is not allowed to submit a request for entry of default until the time allowed by law for the defendant to file a response to the Complaint has expired. This date is based on the proof of service of the summons and complaint because this document shows the manner and date upon which service was made. The defendant has thirty (30) days after service is complete within which to respond to the complaint. [C.C.P. § 412.20(a)(3)] Service is deemed complete depending on the manner of service. [C.C.P. §415.10] Here, Defendant Kendrick was personally served, thereby deeming service complete as of that date, i.e. July 16, 2011. (Kendrick Decl., Exh. A.)

---

[2] What is of particular interest is the fact that, the date the Complaint was filed to and through the date Defendant Kendrick filed this motion, he resided at the same address – the same location where service of process was finally effected (via personal service), and where he was served with Plaintiff's Request for Entry of Default (via mail service) without problem. Thus, Defendant Kendrick is curious as to the 6-months it took Plaintiff to serve him.

C.R.C. 3.110(g) states, "If a responsive pleading is not served within the time limits specified in this rule and no extension of time has been granted [by the Court], the plaintiff must file a request for entry of default within 10 days after the time for service has elapsed." (emphasis added) Based on a date of service of the summons and complaint as provided on the proof of personal service filed with the Court on July 26, 2011 (Kendrick Decl., Exh. A), Defendant Kendrick had thirty (30) days thereafter, or until August 15, 2011, to file a responsive pleading.

For reasons identified below, Defendant Kendrick inadvertently neglected to do so. Therefore, on August 15, 2011 Plaintiff had up to August 25, 2011 to file her request for default, which she did not do. According to the Alameda County Superior Court's online docket, Plaintiff did not submit a Request for Entry of Default as to Defendant Kendrick until August 26, 2011 (Docket entry #40) and the Court entered said request the same day. (Docket entry #41; Kendrick Decl., Exh. C.)

This default entry against Defendant Kendrick should be set aside on the ground that it was entered in violation of C.R.C. 3.110(b) and (g). In the alternative, the Court should give consideration to the facts that: (1) Plaintiff wholly violated C.R.C. 3.110(b) by waiting until almost six (6) months after the filing of the summons and complaint to serve Defendant Kendrick with said pleadings thereby placing him at an acute disadvantage and prejudicing his defense given the substantial litigation that had progressed among the other parties by that time all without Defendant Kendrick's knowledge or participation; and, (2) even though the time to do so had expired, Plaintiff [again] violated legal statute by having a clerk's default unlawfully entered against Defendant Kendrick despite the ten (10) day limit imposed by C.R.C. 3.110(g) having been run.

Further, Plaintiff's counsel of record in this matter, Richard J. Simons, did not bother to even attempt to warn Defendant Kendrick of Plaintiff's intent to file a request for entry of default despite knowing full well that Defendant Kendrick had not secured legal counsel.[3] Ethically, Mr. Simons should have given Defendant Kendrick some sort of advance notice either by telephone or by mail. Such notice is considered a professional courtesy, regardless if the defendant has retained a lawyer or not. The Courts do not condone such discourtesy between two legal professionals, making Defendant Kendrick's situation that much more distasteful. "The quiet speed of plaintiffs' attorney in seeking a default...without the knowledge of defendants' counsel is not to be commended." [Smith v. Los Angeles Bookbinders Union No. 63 (1955) 133 CA2d 486, 500, 284 P2d 194, 201 (disapproved on other grounds in MacLeod v. Tribune Pub. Co., Inc. (1959) 52 C2d 536, 551, 343 P2d 36, 44)] "Even legitimate tactics must sometimes yield to the only goal that justifies the very existence of our judicial system; i.e. the resolution of our citizens' disputes and the administration of justice ." [Brown v. Presley of So. Calif. (1989) 213 CA3d 612, 620, 261 CR 779, 784, fn. 3 – the notion that ours is a "dog-eat-dog business" governed by the "law of the jungle" should be curtailed, not rewarded] The absence of prior warning makes courts inclined to grant C.C.P. § 473(b) motions to set aside defaults. [See Smith v. Los Angeles Bookbinders Union No. 63, supra, 133 CA2d at 500, 284 P2d at 201 (disapproved on other grounds in MacLeod v. Tribune Pub. Co., Inc., supra; and Pearson v. Continental Airlines (1970) 11 CA3d 613, 619, 89 CR 852, 857]

Plaintiff would in no way be prejudiced if the Court grants Defendant Kendrick relief from the default entry. As such, "the original negligence in allowing the default to be taken will be excused..." [Aldrich v. San Fernando Valley Lumber Co. (1985) 170 CA3d 725, 740, 216 CR 300, 308] On the other hand, denial of Defendant Kendrick's request for relief would further the *in*justice he has received from the day Plaintiff filed her complaint on January 28, 2011. If anyone has been or would be further prejudiced by the outcome of this motion it is [3] Being an attorney license to practice law in the State of California, Mr. Simons knew, or should have known, that Defendant Kendrick was unrepresented based on Defendant Kendrick's lack of appearance (thus leading to the filing of Plaintiff's default request) and that all pleadings and/or correspondence as of the date of the filing and entry of Plaintiff' default request was being successfully received by Defendant Kendrick at his residential address.

Defendant Kendrick who has not yet been given any opportunity to prepare his case or properly defend himself due to Plaintiff's inability to abide by the rules and procedures established by the State of California.

III. DEFENDANT KENDRICK SHOWED DUE DILIGENCE IN THE FILING AND SERVICE OF THIS MOTION

The application for discretionary relief under C.C.P. § 473(b) must be made "within a reasonable time" and in no case "exceeding six months" after the entry of default. [C.C.P. §473(b); see Davis v. Thayer, supra, 113 CA3d at 901, 170 CR at 332] An application for relief under § 473(b) requires both filing a notice of motion and service on the adverse party within the 6-month period. [Arambula v. Union Carbide Corp. (2005) 128 CA4th 333, 345, 26 CR3d 854, 861] A motion for relief under § 473(b) must also be made within a "reasonable time" after discovery of the default; "In order to qualify for relief under section 473, the moving party must act diligently in seeking relief..." [Elston v. City of Turlock (1985) 38 C3d 227, 234, 211 CR 416, 420] In determining what constitutes a "reasonable" time, the Court may take into consideration the moving party's lack of funds to obtain counsel. [Carrasco v. Craft (1985) 164 CA3d 796, 805-806, 210 CR 599, 605-606]

In an effort to show due diligence to the Court, and not having found an attorney despite relentlessly searching since July 2011, Defendant Kendrick turned to hiring paralegal services in order to help him timely file this motion on his own. Defendant Kendrick filed and served this motion well under the 6-month deadline set by C.C.P. § 473(b) and has included with his declaration a proposed answer to the Complaint, both of which evidence due diligence and responding within a reasonable amount of time as required when seeking relief due to "mistake, surprise, inadvertence or excusable neglect." [Luz v. Lopes (1960) 55 C2d 54, 62, 10 CR 161, 165-166]

The Court usually resolves even tentative or dubious cases by granting relief because "the law strongly favors trial and disposition on the merits" and "any doubts in applying section 473 must be resolved in favor of the party seeking relief from default." [Elston v. City of Turlock, supra, 38 C3d at 233, 211 CR at 419] As well, where the defendant in default promptly moves to seek relief, and no prejudice to the plaintiff will result from the setting aside of the default and letting the case go to trial on the merits, only a "very slight evidence will be required to justify a court in setting aside the default." [Ibid; see also Miller v. City of Hermosa Beach (1993) 13 CA4th 1118, 1136, 17 CR2d 408, 419]

IV. DEFENDANT KENDRICK HAS COMPLIED TO STATUTE REQUIREMENTS TO THE BEST OF HIS ABILITY WITH THE INCLUSION OF HIS PROPOSED RESPONSIVE PLEADING

California Code of Civil Procedure section 473(b) specifies that an application for relief from a default entry taken against a defendant through "mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect" requires the application "be accompanied by a copy of the answer or other pleading proposed to be filed therein, otherwise the application shall not be granted..." Courts have upheld relief on the rationale that § 473(b) should be construed "liberally with a view to substantial compliance." [Job v. Farrington (1989) 209 CA3d 338, 340-341, 257 CR 210, 211; County of Stanislaus v. Johnson (1996) 43 CA4th 832, 836-838, 51 CR2d 73, 76-77] Exhibit E to the Defendant Kendrick's declaration in support of this motion is his proposed answer to the Complaint. By including a proposed answer, Defendant Kendrick has shown good faith, substantial compliance and a readiness to respond to the Complaint should the Court grant his motion.

CONCLUSION

When a defendant moves the Court for relief from default, any doubts in applying C.C.P. section 473 must be resolved in favor of the moving party. In this case, the grounds for granting Defendant Kendrick's motion are well established: (1) Defendant Kendrick did not realize the implications behind service of process but yet diligently attempted to secure legal representation; (2) both Plaintiff's request and the clerk's entry of default were entered in violation of the applicable statute; (3) Defendant Kendrick's motion for relief was filed and served promptly; (4) Plaintiff will not be prejudiced by the granting of relief from default; (5) Defendant Kendrick deserves the opportunity to property defend himself particularly since he has yet to have a fair shot at doing so; and, (6) Defendant Kendrick continues to show his desire for justice by being prepared to file an answer to Plaintiff's complaint upon the granting of this motion.

Therefore, based on the argument provided above, Defendant Kendrick respectfully requests the Court grant his motion and set aside the default entered against him. Further, Defendant Kendrick requests that his proposed answer to Plaintiff's complaint, attached as Exhibit E to his declaration in support of this motion, be deemed filed and served as of the date the Notice of Entry of Order for this motion is filed and served.

Trial Date:	March 26, 2012

I, Jonathan Kendrick, declare:

I am one of the defendants in this action and have personal knowledge of each fact state in this declaration.

1. On January 28, 2011, Plaintiff filed a complaint in the Alameda County Superior Court alleging childhood sexual abuse ("Complaint") and naming me as a defendant.

2. I was not served with the Complaint until July 16, 2011, almost six months after its filing. See Exhibit A. All other defendants were served by March 21, 2011 and had already filed responsive pleadings well before I was served.

3. Plaintiff's only explanation for the extraordinary delay in service of process was given in her May 12, 2011 Case Management Statement in which she claims I was "not at address listed at Registered Sex Offender website." See Exhibit B. As of the time of the filing of the Complaint to this day, I have resided at the same address where Plaintiff ultimately served me with her Complaint on July 16, 2011 and with her Request for Entry of Default on August 22, 2011.

4. From January 28, 2011 to July 16, 2011, litigation in the case was well underway. The remaining defendants ("Church Defendants") filed a Demurrer to the Complaint on March 28, 2011 (Docket entry #14), which was heard and ruled on by the Court on May 19, 2011. (Docket entries #18 and 19, respectively) On June 3, 2011, Church Defendants filed their answer to the Complaint. (Docket entry #22) The initial case management conference took place on June 14, 2011 (Docket entry #23) during which the pre-trial settlement conference and trial dates were set. (Docket entries #25 and #27, respectively)

5. Furthermore, written discovery had already commenced to the extent that Church Defendants had filed a motion to compel production of documents on July 19, 2011. (Docket entry #29)

6. All of the above took place without my knowledge or participation.

7. Once I was finally served with the Complaint, I knew I needed a lawyer because I have no knowledge of or experience in the civil legal arena. Given that, I was unaware of the 30-day deadline to file a responsive pleading.

///

///

///

8. I contacted the attorneys for Church Defendants asking for their help and representation. I was told they were unable to provide me with legal assistance in this matter. See Exhibit D [1]. This refusal was hard for me to understand and accept, considering my association with Church Defendants as well as the nature and allegations of the Complaint.

9. Despite this, I began to diligently search for my own attorney, completely unaware that I had only a short amount of time to act before having a default entered against me. I contacted multiple attorneys but was quoted a retainer fee over $10,000.00, which I absolutely cannot afford. I nevertheless continued, and still continue, to seek representation. Because of factors working against me, primarily my inability to afford a private attorney, I have yet to retain legal representation.

10. Shortly after the 30-day period to respond to the Complaint had expired, Plaintiff filed a Request for Entry of Default with the Court, which the clerk entered on August 26, 2011. See Exhibit C; see also Docket entry #41. As far as I know, Plaintiff's counsel of record in this matter, Richard J. Simons, never even attempted to give me any type of forewarning of their intentions even though they were well aware I was unrepresented.

11. I have since learned that the date the default was entered, i.e. August 26, 2011, exceeds the time allotted by California Rules of Court 3.110(g), which is within ten (10) days after the time for service had elapsed. I was served on July 16, 2011 and, therefore, had thirty (30) days – or until August 15, 2011 – to file a responsive pleading. When I did not, Plaintiff had to file her Request for Entry of Default within 10 days, or by August 25, 2011. According to the Court's online docket, Plaintiff's request for entry and the actual entry of default against me was filed on August 26, 2011, thereby violating the limits specifically identified in said statute.

12. To date, I have not been able to secure representation but am eager to defend myself against Plaintiff's malicious allegations with the hope of clearing my name. In an effort to prove my sincerity, I have attached hereto as Exhibit E my proposed answer to the Complaint.

13. I believe my actions with regard to the above and the filing of this motion show the Court my good faith effort and readiness to respond should the Court grant my motion.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct.

2. At all times herein, defendant THE WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, Inc. (WATCHTOWER NY) was a corporation, licensed in the State of New York, with a principle place of business in the City of New York, State of New York. At all times herein, defendant THE

EX A

WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF PENNSYLVANIA (WATCHTOWER PA) was a corporation, licensed in the State of State of Pennsylvania, with a principle place of business in the City of New York, State of New York. At all times herein, defendant THE GOVERNING BODY OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES (GBJW), was an unincorporated association of individuals, with a principle place of business in the City of New York, State of New York.

3. Plaintiff is unaware of the true names and capacities of defendants sued herein as ROES 1 to 10 and therefore sue said defendants by such fictitious names. Said fictitiously named defendants were negligent in and about the matters alleged herein, and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the damages complained of by plaintiff. Plaintiff will seek leave to amend this Complaint when the true names and capacities of such fictitiously-named defendants have been ascertained.

4. At all times herein, defendant JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES on Peralta Boulevard (JWP), Fremont, was an entity, the form of which is unknown, that owned, managed, operated, supervised, and staffed a religious facility, organized and existing for the purpose of practicing and promoting the faith of Jehovah's Witnesses, and located within the City of Fremont, State of California. FIRST CAUSE OF ACTION
(As to Defendants WATCHTOWER NY, WATCHTOWER PA, GBJW, KHJW, and JWP Only)

6. In the time period of 1996 and 1997, plaintiff JANE DOE was a minor. During that time period, plaintiff JANE DOE, was a member of the religious group commonly known as the Jehovah's Witnesses, and attended, participated in, and was a member of the Jehovah's Witness religious facility located in the City of Fremont, and owned, managed, operated, supervised, and staffed by defendants WATCHTOWER NY, WATCHTOWER PA, GBJW, KHJW, JWP, and each of them. During that same time period, defendant JONATHAN KENDRICK was a volunteer, active member, and participant in the congregation and congregation leadership of the religious facility in Fremont. During that time period, defendant KENDRICK sexually molested and abused plaintiff JANE DOE on multiple occasions within the County of Alameda. Defendant KENDRICK accomplished the sexual abuse and molestation of plaintiff by use of the trust, position, and authority he held as a fellow member, volunteer, and leader of the religious facility and congregation in Fremont.

7. At all times herein, defendants WATCHTOWER NY, WATCHTOWER PA, GBJW, KHJW, JWP, and each of them, negligently supervised, managed, and controlled defendant KENDRICK in his membership and participation in the Fremont religious facility, and negligently failed to warn plaintiff JANE DOE, her family, and other members of the congregation, of the propensity and risk that defendant KENDRICK would sexually molest or abuse minor girls, a propensity and history of which defendants, and each of them, acting through their employees, agents, and volunteers, had actual notice. During the same time period, defendants, and each of them, were negligent in failing to exercise reasonable care to protect plaintiff JANE DOE, and other minors, who were members of, or participants in, activities at the religious facility in Fremont, from the risk of sexual abuse or molestation by perpetrators, including defendant JONATHAN KENDRICK.

8. As a result of the negligence of defendants, and each them, as herein alleged, plaintiff JANE DOE was caused to suffer the physical, mental, and emotional injuries of childhood sexual abuse and molestation; was caused to incur medical and other expenses for care, treatment, and counseling; and has suffered loss of earnings and earning capacity. Plaintiff will further continue to incur all such damages in the future, in amounts of which plaintiff will advise defendants at least sixty days prior to trial.

SECOND CAUSE OF ACTION
Willful and Intentional Acts
(As to Defendant Jonathan Kendrick Only)

9. Plaintiff realleges each and every allegation contained in paragraphs 1 through 8 as though fully set forth herein.

10. During the time period stated herein, defendant JONATHAN KENDRICK intentionally, willfully, and maliciously sexually abused and molested plaintiff JANE DOE during the time that she was a minor.

11. As a result of the intentional, willful conduct of defendant JONATHAN KENDRICK, as set forth herein, plaintiff has incurred, and will continue to incur the damages as set forth in paragraph 8 of this Complaint.

WHEREFORE, plaintiff prays for relief as follows:

1. For compensatory damages, including economic and non-economic, according to proof in amounts of which plaintiff will advise defendants at least 60 days prior to trial;

2. For costs of suit incurred herein; and

3. For such further relief as the Court deems just and proper.

Doe Plaintiff/Petitioner(s) VS. The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, I Defendant/Respondent(s) (Abbreviated Title)	No. HG11558324 Order Motion to Compel Production of Documents Granted

The Motion to Compel Production of Documents filed for Jane Doe was set for hearing on 10/03/2011 at 03:00 PM in Department 22 before the Honorable Robert McGuiness.

The matter was argued and submitted, and good cause appearing therefore,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED THAT:

Pursuant to the court's prior order in this matter, it conducted an in camera review of two letters dated respectively, November 15, 1993 and December 3, 1993, to determine whether the same were (are) privileged communications within the application of Evidence Code section 1034 and related statutes. After review, the court determines that the letters are not privileged and plaintiff's motion to compel production is granted. However, the court will withhold production of the subject letters and they shall remain under seal until November 17, 2011 so as to allow defendants time to consider and seek appellate review here. The court has determined this matter largely within the context of the holding of Roman Catholic Diocese of Los Angeles v. Superior Court, 131 Cal. App. 4th 417. The record there and here demonstrate that the communications were likely to be shared with more than one person; persons other than elders would be likely to consider same and that the penitent (defendant Kendrick) did not expect the communications to be kept confidential (under the circumstances related and presented).

JANE DOE,

Plaintiff,

v.

THE WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, Inc., a corporation, et al.,

Defendants.

No. HG11558324

ASSIGNED FOR ALL PURPOSES TO JUDGE ROBERT McGUINESS, DEPARTMENT 22

MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN OPPOSITION TO DEFENDANT KENDRICK'S MOTION TO SET ASIDE DEFAULT

Date: 1/19/2012
Time: 3:00 p.m.
Dept: 22
Reservation No: 1225197

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff JANE DOE was repeatedly sexually molested by defendant Jonathan Kendrick during 1995 when she was 9 and 10 years old. During the time of the abuse, Kendrick was an apparently trustworthy member of the North Fremont Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses to which plaintiff and her family belonged. Unknown to Jane Doe's family, however, was that Mr. Kendrick had previously, but secretly, been disciplined for a 1993 sexual molestation of a different minor girl.

Defendant Kendrick did not file a timely answer, or request an extension of time to answer, when the Complaint in this action was served upon him. His Motion for Relief from Default is based upon the alternate grounds of his own excusable neglect and plaintiff's supposed violation of California Rule of Court 3.110. As shown below, there was no excusable neglect. Mr. Kendrick's waited one additional week to make sure that I was not going to hear from either Mr. Kendrick or an attorney on his behalf.

15. At my instruction, my office staff mailed the Request for Entry of Default to Mr. Kendrick on August 22, 2011. A courtesy copy of the Endorsed Filed Request is attached as Exhibit 7 to this Declaration. The Clerk entered default as to Mr. Kendrick on August 26, 2011, as is stated on Exhibit 7.

16. Written discovery in this matter, and depositions of institutional defendants' employees and agents, has demonstrated that Mr. Kendrick has a long history of sexual abuse of children during his association with Jehovah's Witnesses that has been the subject of numerous interventions and proceedings. These include reproval from the North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses in 1993 following his admitted molestation of his 13-year-old stepdaughter, as documented in institutional defendants' correspondence attached as Exhibit 8; and his sexual abuse of his 8-year-old step-granddaughter in 2002, about which elders of the Oakley Congregation were questioned, as documented in Contra Costa Sheriff's Department Report #03-20646, excerpts of which are attached as Exhibit 9; and a sexual affair with the wife of an Elder, as described in the Deposition of Claudia Francis, attached at Exhibit 13, and a letter from North Congregation Elders to Elders of Kendrick's new congregation in Oakley, attached as Exhibit 14 .

17. Defendant Kendrick's deposition was noticed by my office October 25, 2011. A Subpoena was served upon him for appearance on that date. A true and correct copy of the Notice and Subpoena, and Proof of Service thereof, is attached as Group Exhibit 10. Thereafter, Mr. Kendrick faxed me a letter requesting an extension of time for appearance at the deposition, while he obtained an attorney. A true and correct copy of the fax received by my office from Mr. Kendrick on October 19, 2011 requesting the extension of time is attached as Exhibit 11. The extension of time was granted to Mr. Kendrick as confirmed by my correspondence of October 20, 2011, a true of correct copy of which is attached hereto as Exhibit 12.

18. Mr. Kendrick has personal experience with civil proceedings and has shown himself to be competent in using them. My investigation uncovered restraining orders between Mr. Kendrick and family members that includes civil documents completed by Mr. Kendrick on his own behalf. True and correct copies as obtained by my investigator are attached as Exhibit 16.

19. Attached as Exhibit 15 is a courtesy copy of the Summons issued in this case.

I declare that the above is true under penalty of perjury, that I have personal knowledge of the facts set forth herein, and am competent to testify thereto.

Executed this 5 day of December, 2011, at Hayward, California.

attempted showing is filled with half-truths and falsehoods. The evidence demonstrates Mr. Kendrick was persuaded to change his mind about appearing in the case after his default was taken. CRC 3.110 has no applicability to this Motion. Because defendant Kendrick is not a victim of "excusable neglect," the Motion must be denied.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

The Complaint in this action was filed on January 28, 2011. In addition to a cause of action for willful and intentional misconduct against Kendrick as perpetrator of the sexual abuse of plaintiff during her minority, claims of negligence were alleged against entities of the Jehovah's Witnesses. ("Church Defendants"). Plaintiff timely served all Church Defendants, who filed responsive pleadings. Mr. Kendrick was not served because plaintiff's investigation had not been able to confirm an address for Mr. Kendrick. (Declaration of R. Simons, attached, ¶¶2-4, and Exs. 1 and 2). The Court was advised of this delay in service at the initial Case Management Conference held on June 14, 2011.

Mr. Kendrick's address was obtained from the Church Defendants on June 29, 2011, as a result of Supplemental Responses to written discovery. (Simons Dec., ¶¶4-6 and Exs. 3-5). Mr. Kendrick was then served by personal service on July 16, 2011. (Simons Dec., Ex. 6).

Kendrick consulted multiple attorneys concerning this civil action before any default was entered. He admits in his Declaration he contacted the attorneys for the Church Defendants. (Kendrick Dec., ¶8). He also "contacted multiple attorneys" on his own. (Kendrick Dec., ¶9, 3:8). At least one of those attorneys, Michael Markowitz of Danville, contacted plaintiff's counsel prior to the expiration of the time to file a responsive pleading. (Simons Dec., ¶¶8-11). Although Mr. Kendrick makes no reference to his discussions with Mr. Markowitz, it was clear from the discussions with plaintiff's counsel that Mr. Kendrick, who apparently has no assets, decided to allow his default to be taken in exchange for the promise by plaintiff not to attempt any collection against him. (Simons Dec., Ibid). Mr. Markowitz and counsel for plaintiff had extensive discussions about the service, the possibility of default, and the filing of an answer. No request for an extension of time was ever made to plaintiff's counsel, no application for filing an answer with an accompanying Petition for Waiver of Fees was made by Mr. Kendrick, and no extension of time was granted. (Simons Dec., ¶¶10-13).

Re: Doe v. Watchtower, et al.

Dear Mr. McCabe:

I have received the discovery responses from your various clients in this matter. As to Answer to Form Interrogatory No. 12.2, I request some further information. The answer states that Jonathan Kendrick was interviewed on April 6, 2011, but that "contact information unknown to this Defendant". Since I have been unable to find Mr. Kendrick, and apparently you spoke with him on April 6, 2011, and must have some contact information, I am entitled to whatever information you have. Please provide a supplemental response, including telephone and cell phone numbers, address, email, or whatever other information concerning his identity and whereabouts you have.

With respect to the North Congregations Response to Request for Documents, category 5, as to records involving Jonathan Kendrick, the objections and claim of privilege are not well taken. There is no First Amendment right for matters involving childhood sexual abuse, as that is a secular rather than a theology issue. The clergy/penitent privilege of California Evidence Code §1030 does not apply, as the letters of December 3, 1993, and November 15, 1993, from elders to the U.S. Service Department are not confidential communications between penitent and clergy. In the event that your client refused to produce these documents, please notify me promptly, so that I may bring a Motion to Compel production.

Additionally, in the North Congregation's Response to Request for Documents, category 7, Reports from the Elders dated November 5, 1996, and November 7, 2002, are both objected to on the grounds of First Amendment, and clergy/penitent privilege. Clergy/penitent privilege would not apply to either of these reports, as they on their face are not confidential communications from a parishioner to a clergyman as defined in the Evidence Code. Secondly, there is no First Amendment right where issues of childhood sexual abuse are involved, since this is strictly a secular matter. Lastly, in the event that defendants wish to assert that some or all of plaintiff's emotional distress and other damages flow from family relations, rather than the sexual abuse by Mr. Kendrick, information concerning Kathleen Conti and plaintiff would both be relevant. Candace Conti obviously has waived any privacy interest, as she is a plaintiff in this action. Kathleen Conti has no objection, and a written waiver can be provided. In any event, the Letters from the Elders dated November 7, 2002, and November 5, 1996, are not subject to privilege based upon the information provided to date, and should be produced. In the event that your client refused to produce these documents, please notify me promptly, so that I may bring a Motion to Compel production.

Thank you for your immediate attention to this matter.

Very truly yours,

Mr. Kendrick's claim that he is unable to understand the nature of the process, the language in the Summons and Complaint, or the duty to either request an extension of time or file an answer, is difficult to establish as credible. Mr. Kendrick read and understood the paperwork well enough to call Jehovah's Witness' attorneys and meet with Mr. Markowitz. He was able to send his own correspondence to plaintiff's counsel regarding his deposition after receiving a subpoena on October 8, 2011. (Simons Dec., ¶17 and Exs. 10-12).

Plaintiff's counsel waited an extra week prior to submitted a Request for Entry of Default against Mr. Kendrick to confirm that no answer was going to be filed, no extension of time requested, and no attorney appearing in the matter. (Simons Dec., ¶¶14 and 15).

As shown below, Mr. Kendrick's argument that he did not understand the nature of the proceedings and therefore is protected by the statutory doctrine of "excusable neglect" – like many of the other factual assertions contained in Mr. Kendrick's Declaration – is beyond belief. There is no excusable neglect in this matter, but rather an apparent change of mind for reasons unknown, including the influence of others.

I. THE PARTY SEEKING RELIEF FROM DEFAULT MUST MAKE A SUFFICIENT SHOWING TO ESTABLISH EXCUSABLE NEGLECT.

"The court may, upon any terms as may be just, relieve a party or his or her legal representative from a judgment, dismissal, order, or other proceeding taken against him or her through his or her mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect." (Cal. Code Civ. Pro. § 473(b).) The moving party must establish his grounds for relief by a preponderance of the evidence. (Luz v. Lopes (1960) 55 Cal.2d 54, 62.) "Mere mistake, inadvertence or neglect does not warrant relief unless, upon a consideration of all of the evidence, it is found to be excusable." (Daher v. American Pipe & Constr. Co., (1968) 257 Cal.App.2d 816, 820.)

Excusable neglect must be an act or omission that a reasonably prudent person may have committed under the same circumstances. (Kooper v. King (1961) 195 Cal.App.2d 621, 626.) "Relief will be denied unless the plaintiff or the moving party is able to convince the court that he has exercised

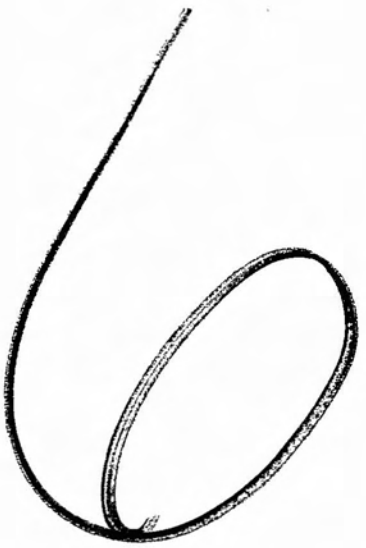
Dear Mr. Simons:

I was able to obtain Mr. Kendrick's contact information which is as follows:

200 Honey Lane
Oakley, California 94561
Telephone 925 670-0411

I have spoken by telephone to your assistant and requested that we try to schedule all of my client's depositions during the week of August 22, 2011. I am unavailable August the 11th as I am taking a few days off to celebrate my 42nd wedding anniversary. Additionally, I will have co-counsel from New York involved in these depositions and it would be helpful if we could group the depositions together to facilitate his travel schedule and if possible minimize the number of trips across the country.

I would reiterate also that I would like a date for your client's deposition which I would estimate would take a half day. Again, if it could be scheduled following my clients' depositions that would be very helpful.



Verifications for the discovery responses from Watchtower New York and Pennsylvania are in the mail to me and will be forwarded to your office as soon as I receive them. Once you have had a chance to review the responses, I look forward to working with you to try to resolve any disputes that we may have.

Thank you for your courtesy and cooperation in this matter.

Very truly yours,

James M. McCabe

Dear Brothers,

We are writing to you regarding a case of child abuse. We telephoned 11/12/93 and it was suggested that we submit in writing our questions.

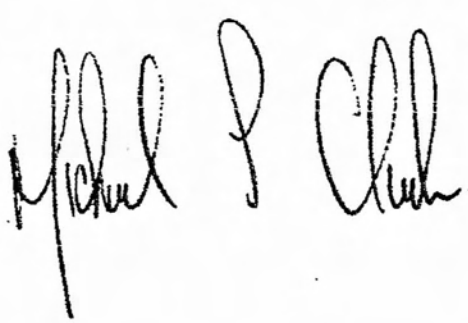
We met on 11/11/93 with Jonathan Kendrick, a ministerial servant, who confessed to child abuse with his 15 yr old step daughter. The abuse occurred approximately 4 months ago. He confessed to touching the breast of his step daughter while she was sleeping. She was awaken instantly and knew what had happened. His wife was informed that evening and the 3 of them talked it out between them. Brother Kendrick thought since he was sorry and his family was willing to forget the abuse, he would not have to report it to the congregation elders. He said that his conscious continued to bother him.

Evelyn, his wife, is baptized but inactive. She occasionally attends meetings.

Andrea, the step daughter, is not baptized and is no longer an unbaptized publisher. The step daughter is now using this as a tool to threaten with when she wants something. Because she has been promiscuous with 2 boys at school. the parents have tried to enforce house rules covering her comings and goings.

Andrea has recently mentioned the abuse to another young girl, Toy Register, whom she attends school with. Coincidentally, Toy attends our congregation meetings and is studying. Her mother is disfellowshipped. Toy mentioned the abuse to her mother and added that Brother Kendrick on another occasion had accidentally touched her chest but admitted that it was not intentional. Mrs Register is now threatening to call the police.

Here are the facts as best as we can present them without interviewing each party. Our questions are as follows:



1. Can 2 elders handle this matter with Brother Kendrick as mentioned on page 93 of "Pay attention to Yourselves....Flock", under the heading Uncleanness? Or do we have to form a Judicial hearing because of it being child abuse?

2. We assume that Brother Kendrick does not qualify any longer as a Ministerial Servant. We will announce to the congregation that he is no longer serving as such. If this is incorrect, please inform us.

3. The legal department has given us some direction as far as our legal requirements and we will follow that closely.

We will wait to hear from you regarding the above questions. If I have not been clear enough, you may reach me during the day at my work phone (510-462-7861 ext 105) reasonable diligence to protect himself against the judgment." (Elms v. Elms (1946) 72 Cal.App.2d 508, 513).

Your Brothers,

While Courts generally interpret section 473 liberally, the law has long recognized that "this does not mean, however, that relief should be given to one who willfully slumbers on his rights and makes no effort to protect himself, and courts should not listen to flimsy excuses and the claim of ignorance of the law." (Williams v. McQueen, (1928) 89 Cal.App. 659, 662).

II. KENDRICK'S FAILURE TO FILE RESPONSIVE PLEADING WAS NOT DUE TO EXCUSABLE NEGLECT.

Defendant's Declaration states that, upon receipt of service of the Complaint, "I knew I needed a lawyer because I have no knowledge of or experience in the civil legal arena. Given that, I was unaware of the 30 deadline to file a responsive pleading." (Kendrick Dec., ¶7, 2:21-23). Mr. Kendrick's Declaration is false.

First of all, as shown by his Declaration and Motion, Mr. Kendrick is able to read and write in the English language. Therefore, he presumably could read the language of the Summons, served with the Complaint, which states: "NOTICE! You have been sued. The Court may decide against you without you being heard unless you respond within 30 days." (Simons Dec ¶19; Ex. 15.)

Additionally, Mr. Kendrick claims to have promptly contacted multiple attorneys. At least one attorney, Mr. Markowitz, conducted negotiations with plaintiff's counsel that included discussion of a default. Although Mr. Kendrick's Declaration purposefully omits any mention of his consultation with Mr. Markowitz, there can be no doubt that a reputable attorney of Mr. Markowitz's stature would have explained all of the applicable deadlines and alternative methods of proceeding, even in a case where he was unable to accept representation of the client's interests. Mr. Kendrick was satisfied to allow a default if there was no risk of collection. It is likely that Mr. Kendrick later decided, or was influenced by others to decide, to become an active party to the lawsuit.

Mr. Kendrick's claim that he has no knowledge of the civil legal arena is also false. Mr. Kendrick and his stepchildren were involved in civil proceedings in Contra Costa County to obtain

Dear Brothers:

Your letter dated November 15, 1993, has been received. As you will note from the enclosed S-52 form, Brother Jonathan Kendrick has been deleted from serving as a ministerial servant on the grounds of "uncleanness."

Your letter states: "He confessed to touching the breasts of his stepdaughter while she was sleeping. She was awakened instantly and knew what had happened." Since this incident is known by outside members of the family, it is appropriate that Brother Kendrick be deleted from serving as a ministerial servant with your congregation.

On page 92 of the Kingdom Ministry School textbook the following is stated: "Uncleanness includes an intentional momentary touching of sexual parts or caressing of breasts. Such minor uncleanness can be handled at the discretion of an elder or two; it does not require a judicial hearing. There is a need for strong counsel, admonition, and assistance to help the individual to maintain chaste conduct in the future."

In harmony with the above, it will not be necessary for a judicial committee to handle the "uncleanness" committed by Brother Kendrick. However, it would be appropriate for two elders to meet with him and provide him with strong Scriptural counsel so as to avoid a repetition of such a serious offense.

We trust the above comments will be helpful to you. With this letter we are pleased to send you an expression of our warm Christian love and best wishes.

Dear Brothers:

This is in regard to a matter involving Jonathan Kendrick. In reviewing our files, we noted that Jonathan Kendrick was reproved by the North Congregation and deleted as a ministerial servant on December 3, 1993, for child molestation.

In the letter to all bodies of elders dated March 14, 1997, direction was given to provide a report on anyone who is currently serving or who formerly served in a Society-appointed position in the congregation who is known to have been guilty of child molestation in the past. Has this information been provided to the Society? If so, perhaps it was lost in the mail. Therefore, please send us additional copies of your correspondence for our files. If not, please answer the questions in the first paragraph of page 3 of the March 14, 1997, letter. When responding, you may make reference to this letter by the date and desk symbol above.

Please accept our warm Christian love and best wishes.

Re: Jonathan Kendrick

Dear Brothers,

Larry Lamerdin and I met with Candace Conti on 12/13/09 regarding Jonathan Kendrick. Candace is the daughter of Neal and Cathy Conti who are now divorced. The father, Neal is remarried and attends meetings in the Niles Congregation in Fremont California. He is serving as a ministerial servant. The mother, Cathy attends meeting in the North Congregation in Downy California. Candace claims that Jonathan Kendrick sexually abused her from 1992-1993 when she was 9-11yrs old. She is now 24 years old

The Conti family and Jonathan Kendrick were close friends and spent quite a bit of time together. Because Cathy was having alcohol and emotional problems, they relied on Jonathan more than they should have. Candace claims that Jonathan Kendrick and her spent time alone together at his home. She claims that he would often drive her home from the meetings with her parent's permission. She claims that there relationship was inappropriate and her parents and congregation elders should have put a stop to it. We totally agreed. To our knowledge, the elders were not aware of this arrangement. She claims that he did unspeakable things to her including having her do things to him. She refused to go into detail other than saying it occurred over a 1-2 year period on many occasions. She remembers him taking her shopping along with 2 other young boys in the North Congregation. She recalls on another occasion him putting his hands under her shirt. She admits that she has blocked out much of the details and doesn't understand why.

Candace was asked if she wanted to 'confront' Jonathan Kendrick about the alleged abuse. She broke down in tears and said that would be too difficult. She asked us twice if we were going to report this to the authorities. We told her that if she wishes to make a report, it is her absolute right to do so.

Her biggest concern seems to be protecting other children from harm. She wanted to know what procedures were in place in the congregations when convicted abusers change congregations. What is to prevent them from 'hiding what they are?' She mentioned that the national list for these convicted abusers has a program that allows victims to list their e-mail address and if the abuser moves, the victim is notified. She wants to know if the Society has such plans to do something similar. We promised her we would ask.

We have made an appointment to talk with her father on 12/16/09. Candace expressed a reluctance to trust the congregation or her father to do the right thing. She feels betrayed and alone. We shared a number of scriptures with her regarding Jehovah's love and concern for her. We feel there is an opportunity to get her back into the congregation.

Candace mentioned that she had lunch last year (2008) with Sister Claudia Francis who had a close friendship with the Conti family and Jonathan Kendrick. Candace asked Sister Francis if she ever suspected that Jonathan was abusing her. Sister Francis revealed to Candace that she had found a receipt where Jonathan Kendrick had taken her boys and Candace shopping for clothes. The receipt was for a black bra. She doesn't know why she kept that receipt but it now makes her suspect wrong doing. We have tried to contact Sister Francis but so far no success.

Another judicial case that has a bearing on this matter involves Claudia Francis. She admitted to committing adultery with Jonathan Kendrick in 1998. We formed a judicial committee in October of 1999 and reproved her. The judicial committee notified the Oakley congregation since Jonathan Kendrick had moved there in Jan 1998. Brother Eric Smothers was our contact. We have no other notes regarding your judicial case with Jonathan Kendrick. You mentioned on the phone this week that you couldn't find any letters from us regarding this matter nor had any judicial committee met with him on this matter. This is quite disturbing. If no judicial committee was formed, Jonathan Kendrick should be confronted with this charge. It would be a serious matter if he has kept this secret all this time.

12/16/09
We met with Candace's father, Neal Conti on 12/16/09 to discuss the matter. He offered very little help or insight. He is remarried and serving as a ministerial servant in the Niles congregation of Fremont. He admits that the family was very troubled back then and that Candace was asked to shoulder too big of a load for a young girl when her parents divorced. We asked if he ever suspected that Candace was being abused and he said no. We encouraged him to reach out to his daughter and provide support. He said he would try.

We trust that these notes may help you when you meet with Jonathan Kendrick. We have plans to talk with Candace again after we hear from your congregation and the branch.

Your brothers

Michael Clarke

CASE SUMMARY: (OFFICER BROWN'S ORIGINAL REPORT)

ON 07-31-03, I RECEIVED AND REVIEWED CASE #03-20646 REGARDING ALLEGATIONS THAT JONATHAN KENDRICKS HAD USED HIS HAND TO RUB, SKIN TO SKIN, HIS EIGHT-YEAR-OLD STEP-GRANDDAUGHTER'S VAGINA.

IN ESSENCE, OFFICER BROWN MET WITH JOSHUA HOOD AT THE OAKLEY SUBSTATION REGARDING ALLEGATIONS OF MOLEST ON HIS DAUGHTER, [redacted] JOSHUA PROVIDED BROWN WITH TWO COMPUTER CD'S WHICH APPARENTLY CONTAINED CHILD PORNOGRAPHIC MATERIAL.

BROWN INTERVIEWED JOSHUA AND HE DETERMINED THE FOLLOWING. ABOUT FOUR YEARS AGO, JONATHAN KENDRICKS MARRIED JOSHUA'S MOTHER. DURING THIS TIME, BOTH JOSHUA AND HIS BROTHER HAD BEEN SUSPICIOUS OF JOHATHAN. IN TURN, JOSHUA SAID HE SPOKE WITH JONATHAN'S EX-WIFE WHO DISCLOSED THAT HE WAS INVOLVED IN A SEXUAL ASSAULT CASE REGARDING HER DAUGHTER IN 1995.

WHILE BOTH LINDA, HIS MOTHER, AND JONATHAN WERE AWAY FROM THEIR HOME ONE WEEKEND (07-19-03), BOTH JOSHUA AND HIS BROTHER ENTERED THE KENDRICK HOME AND GAINED ACCESS TO THEIR COMPUTER. JOSHUA STATED THAT HE HAD A KEY TO THE HOUSE AND PERMISSION TO BE AT THIS LOCATION.

SUSPECTING THE POSSIBILITY OF JONATHAN POSSESSING CHILD PORNOGRAPHY, JOSHUA AND HIS BROTHER OBSERVED AND DOWNLOADED TO CD WHAT THEY BELIEVED TO BE IMAGES AND VIDEO OF CHILD PORNOGRAPHY. APPARENTLY, THEY HAD USED AN "UNERASE" PROGRAM TO EXTRACT THIS MATERIAL FROM THE COMPUTERS HARD DRIVE.

THEN, JOSHUA REVIEWED THIS INFORMATION WITH HIS WIFE, MELISSA. IN TURN, THEY AGREED TO SPEAK WITH [redacted] ABOUT ANY POSSIBLE INAPPROPRIATE CONTACTS WITH JONATHAN. UPON ASKING [redacted], SHE THEN DISCLOSED AN INCIDENT THAT OCCURRED IN NOVEMBER OF 2002. ESSENTIALLY, JONATHAN PLACED AN UNKNOWN TYPE OF CREAM ON HIS HAND AND RUBBED [redacted]S LOWER STOMACH AND VAGINAL AREA, SKIN TO SKIN. IN ADDITION, JONATHAN HAS PINCHED [redacted]S BUTTOCKS AND KISSED HER ON THE MOUTH.

UPON HEARING THIS DISCLOSURE, JOSHUA CONTACTED HIS MOTHER AND HE DISCUSSED THIS INCIDENT WITH HER. APPARENTLY, PRIOR TO THE 07-25-03 CONTACT WITH BROWN, JOSHUA DISCOVERED THAT JOHATHAN WAS COMMITTED TO SAN FRANCISCO GENERAL HOSPITAL ON A "5150" HOLD. IN JOSHUA'S OPINION, SINCE JONATHAN HAD BEEN

HIS ACTIONS IN THIS CASE AS WELL AS HOW HE OBTAINED THIS INFORMATION. JOSHUA AGREED TO MEET WITH ME AT A LATER DATE.

FREMONT P.D. REPORT: (PAST SEXUAL ASSAULT CASE)

BASED ON THE INFORMATION THAT JOSHUA HAD PROVIDED ME, I CONTACTED THE FREMONT POLICE DEPARTMENT. THEIR RECORDS BUREAU VERIFIED THAT THERE WAS A REPORT MADE IN 1994 IN WHICH JONATHAN WAS LISTED AS A SUSPECT IN A CHILD MOLEST. IT APPEARS THAT HE WAS CONVICTED ON THIS MATTER, BUT THE FINAL CHARGES WERE SEXUAL BATTERY. I REQUESTED AND RECEIVED THIS REPORT FROM FREMONT P.D.

IN SUMMARY, JONATHAN FONDLED THE BREASTS AND PELVIC / VAGINAL AREA OF HIS STEPDAUGHTER FROM A PREVIOUS MARRIAGE. BOTH THE VICTIM AND HER BIOLOGICAL MOTHER SAID JONATHAN ADMITTED TO THIS TOUCHING. HOWEVER, UPON QUESTIONING BY POLICE, HE DID NOT ADMIT TO THE TOUCHING OF HER VAGINAL AREA. IT APPEARS THAT JONATHAN WAS CONVICTED FOR A SEXUAL BATTERY AND HE RECEIVED A THREE-YEAR PROBATION ENDING IN JULY OF 1997. REFER TO THIS REPORT FOR SPECIFICS.

I HAVE ATTEMPTED ON SEVERAL OCCASSIONS TO CONTACT MANUAL TO DISCUSS HIS ROLE IN THE JEHOVAH WITNESS RELIGION AS WELL AS WHAT INFORMATION HE COULD PROVIDE ME REGARDING THIS CASE. I HAVE LEFT SEVERAL VOICE MESSAGES AT HIS HOME WITH NEGATIVE RESULTS.

INTERVIEW NARRATIVE: JIM DOMINGAS (LEAD)

AFTER SEVERAL ATTEMPTS TO CONTACT BOTH INGLESIAS AND JIM DOMINGAS, I WAS FINALLY ABLE TO REACH JIM. I EXPLAINED TO JIM THAT I WAS INVESTIGATING ALLEGATIONS OF INAPPROPRIATE CONDUCT BY JONATHAN. FURTHERMORE, I WAS UNDER THE IMPRESSION THAT HE AND MANUAL HAD MET WITH HIM WHILE HE WAS HOSPTIALIZED IN MARTINEZ. DURING THIS VISIT, I AM TOLD JONATHAN ADMITTED TO THESE INAPPROPRIATE ACTS.

JIM TOLD ME THAT BOTH HE AND MANUAL WENT TO VISIT JONATHAN TO CONDUCT A "PENITENTIAL" CONVERSATION THAT WAS TO BE HELD IN CONFIDENCE. IN TURN, THE CONTENTS OF THIS CONVERSATION WAS EXEMPT FROM THE MANDATORY REPORTING PROTOCAL SET FORTH BY THE CALIF. PENAL CODE. AS A RESULT, JIM SAID HE, NOR MANUAL, WOULD NOT SPEAK TO ME REGARDING THIS CONVERSATION AND THAT I SHOULD

INTERVIEW NARRATIVE: LINDA HOOD-KENDRICKS (LEAD)

I CONTACTED LINDA, VIA PHONE CALL, TO SCHEDULE AN INTERVIEW WITH HER REGARDING ANY STATEMENTS / INFORMATION SHE MAY HAVE REGARDING THE ALLEGATIONS. THIS CONVERSATION FOCUSED ON HER DESIRE TO UNDERSTAND HYPOTHETICAL OUTCOMES IF SHE SPOKE WITH ME OR IF SHE DID NOT.

AS THIS CONVERSATION PROGRESSED, I FELT THAT JONATHAN HAD ADMITTED TO LINDA ABOUT HIS INAPPROPRIATE CONDUCT WITH [redacted]. THESE FEELINGS STEM FROM THE FACT THAT LINDA CONTINUED TO EXPRESS HER CONCERNS THAT BY SPEAKING WITH ME AND /OR DISCLOSING THE INFORMATION SHE POSSESSED WOULD SURELY LEAD TO JONATHAN'S ARREST. I ASKED JOSHUA TO DESCRIBE THE CIRCUMSTANCES THAT LED TO HIS "INVESTIGATION" OF JONATHAN. IN ESSENCE, LINDA AND JONATHAN MARRIED SHORTLY AFTER JOSHUA'S FATHER DIED. BOTH JOSHUA AND HIS BROTHERS WERE "LEARY" OF JONATHAN SINCE THEY DID KNOW MUCH ABOUT HIM.

AS TIME PASSED, JOSHUA SAID HE OBSERVED INCIDENTS WHERE JONATHAN WOULD BECOME INTOXICATED AND VERBALLY ABUSIVE TO LINDA. JOSHUA SAID HE ALSO HEARD OF SOME RUMORS THAT JONATHAN'S EX-WIFE HAD MADE UP "A BUNCH OF LIES" ABOUT HIM. IN ADDITION, JOSHUA HEARD THAT JONATHAN COULD NO LONGER HAVE ANY CONTACT WITH HIS STEPDAUGHTER. JOSHUA SAID HE DID NOT KNOW WHAT THESE LIES ENTAILED NOR LEARNED THE REASON FOR THIS RESTRICTED CONTACT.

mutual civil restraining orders, including a civil restraining order requested by Mr. Kendrick representing himself. Copies of these documents were obtained by plaintiff's counsel in the course of investigation. (Simons Dec., ¶18; Ex. 16). Mr. Kendrick is certainly guilty of selective lack of knowledge of civil court processes, as he is in selective memory of his conduct prior to the entry of default.

Mr. Kendrick's assertion that it was hard for him "to understand and accept, considering my association with Church Defendants as well as the nature and allegations of the Complaint" that the Church Defendants would not represent him, is similarly misleading -- if not completely false. (Kendrick Dec., ¶8). Mr. Kendrick's associations with the Jehovah's Witnesses have been remarkable primarily for his repeated sexual misconduct. In 1993, he was removed as a Ministerial Servant for the sexual molestation of his stepdaughter. (Simons Dec., ¶16 and Ex. 8). He then engaged in a sexual affair with the wife of an Elder. (Simons Dec., ¶16 and Ex. 13). In 2003, Elders at the Oakley Jehovah's Witnesses Congregation were contacted by the Contra Costa County Sheriff's Department in their investigation of defendant's sexual abuse of his 8 year-old step-granddaughter. (Simons Dec., ¶16 and Ex. 9). Although Mr. Kendrick was convicted of felony sexual abuse of a child for these offenses (Simons Dec., Ex. 1), the Jehovah's Witnesses Elders refused to cooperate with the Sheriff's Department in the investigation. This is hardly the "association" with the Church Defendants that would create the reasonable expectation that Mr. Kendrick would be provided with an attorney by Jehovah's Witnesses for yet another episode of sexual abuse of Jehovah's Witness' children.

III. CALIFORNIA RULE OF COURT 3.110(b) HAS NO APPLICABILITY TO THIS ACTION.

CRC 3.110(b) seeks to enforce the policy of timely prosecution of cases as part of the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act. It is one of multiple standards designed "to compel attorneys and litigants to prepare and resolve all litigation without delay." (California Government Code §68607). However, the purpose of Rule 3.110 is to require a plaintiff to proceed promptly in the prosecution of the action, not to reward delay by a defendant by prohibiting the taking of their default. Plaintiff's delay in service, and the delay in entering the default were both reasonable. Plaintiff did not incur the expense of serving Mr. Kendrick until a confirmed address had been obtained. The Court was advised, and no Order to Show Cause was ever issued. Once the address was obtained, service was promptly made. Plaintiff promptly

JOSHUA TOLD LINDA THAT HE WAS GOING TO DETERMINE IF JONATHAN HAS ANY PRIOR ARRESTS AND / OR A CRIMINAL RECORD. JOSHUA WENT TO FREMONT AND HE TRIED TO ACCESS THIS INFORMATION. THE CLERKS AT THIS LOCATION TOLD HIM THAT THEY COULD NOT DISCLOSE THE CONTENT OF HIS CRIMINAL RECORD TO HIM. YET, THROUGH FURTHER CONVERSATIONS WITH THEM, JOSHUA DETERMINED THAT JONATHAN HAD SOME TYPE OF CRIMINAL RECORD AND THERE WERE SOME SERIOUS CHARGES ON IT IF THEY COULD NOT BE DISCLOSED TO HIM.

AT THAT POINT, JOSHUA TOLD LINDA OF THIS FINDING AND HE TOLD HER THAT HE WAS GOING TO THE OAKLEY POLICE DEPT TO FILE A REPORT. JOSHUA WENT TO THE OAKLEY SUBSTATION AND HE FILED A REPORT ALLEGING THE MOLESTATION OF [redacted] BY JONATHAN.

A SHORT TIME LATER, JONATHAN WAS RELEASED FROM THE HOSPITAL AND HE RETURNED TO LINDA'S HOME. AT THAT POINT, HE KICKED JOEL OUT OF THE HOUSE. THEN, JONATHAN CONTACTED A LAWYER THAT SPECIALIZED IN SEXUAL ASSAULT CASES. DURING THIS MEETING WITH THE ATTORNEY, JONATHAN ADMITTED TO MOLESTING [redacted] TO BOTH LINDA AND THE ATTORNEY.

I ASKED JOSHUA IF HE, LINDA OR JONATHAN HAVE EVER DISCLOSED THIS ADMISSION OR ANY OTHER INFORMATION TO ANYONE ELSE. JOSHUA SAID, PRIOR TO FILING THE INITIAL POLICE REPORT, HE CONTACTED THE ELDERS OF LINDA'S AND JONATHAN'S CHURCH.

IN ESSENCE, THESE ELDERS CAME TO JOSHUA'S HOUSE AND HE TOLD THEM OF [redacted] DISCLOSURES. IN TURN, WHEN JONATHAN WAS ADMITTED TO THE MENTAL HEALTH WARD, THESE ELDERS VISITED HIM. AGAIN, JONATHAN ADMITTED TO THESE ELDERS THAT HE HAD MOLESTED [redacted]

JOSHUA SAID HE SPOKE TO THE WIFE OF ONE OF THE ELDERS AND SHE TOLD HIM THAT THE ELDERS WOULD RESOLVE THIS PROBLEM. FURTHERMORE, SHE TOLD JOSHUA TO "GO ABOUT YOUR LIFE." JOSHUA SAID HE DID NOT AGREE WITH THIS COURSE OF ACTION. THIS WOMAN TOLD JOSHUA THAT JONTHAN HAD ADMITTED HIS "WRONG-DOINGS". IN TURN, HE SHOULD BE MORE FORGIVING TOWARDS HIM.

JOSHUA THEN TOLD LINDA THAT SHE WAS GOING TO HAVE TO SPEAK WITH THE POLICE. LINDA SAID SHE WOULD GIVE A STATEMENT. HOWEVER, AS TIME WENT ON, LINDA BECAME MORE RESISTANT IN CONTACTING THE POLICE. EVENTUALLY, JOSHUA FELT THAT LINDA WAS NOT GOING TO GIVE A STATEMENT REGARDING THIS MATTER.

Dear Mr. Kendrick:

All counsel in the above-entitled case have been made aware of your request to reschedule your appearance at your deposition on Tuesday October 25, 2011. You have been served with a Subpoena for that appearance. You may be excused from this appearance only by agreement to reschedule the date and time with the attorneys in the case.

I am willing to delay the deposition until Wednesday, November 9, 2011. at 10:00 a.m., in my office at 22274 Main Street, Hayward, upon the condition you agree to reschedule your appearance to that time and place without further Subpoena. I will notify all other counsel of the new time and date.

CONCLUSION

Mr. Kendrick's false and misleading showing is not sufficient to establish excusable neglect. His showing is instead one of flimsy excuses and a false claim of ignorance of the law. The Court should deny his Motion for Relief.

Re: Jonathan Kendrick

Dear Brothers,

Larry Lamerdin and I met with Candace Conti on 12/13/09 regarding Jonathan Kendrick. Candace is the daughter of Neal and Cathy Conti who are now divorced. The father, Neal is remarried and attends meetings in the Niles Congregation in Fremont California. He is serving as a ministerial servant. The mother, Cathy attends meeting in the North Congregation in Downy California. Candace claims that Jonathan Kendrick sexually abused her from 1992-1993 when she was 9-11yrs old. She is now 24 years old

The Conti family and Jonathan Kendrick were close friends and spent quite a bit of time together. Because Cathy was having alcohol and emotional problems, they relied on Jonathan more than they should have. Candace claims that Jonathan Kendrick and her spent time alone together at his home. She claims that he would often drive her home from the meetings with her parent's permission. She claims that there relationship was inappropriate and her parents and congregation elders should have put a stop to it. We totally agreed. To our knowledge, the elders were not aware of this arrangement. She claims that he did unspeakable things to her including having her do things to him. She refused to go into detail other than saying it occurred over a 1-2 year period on many occasions. She remembers him taking her shopping along with 2 other young boys in the North Congregation. She recalls on another occasion him putting his hands under her shirt. She admits that she has blocked out much of the details and doesn't understand why.

Candace was asked if she wanted to 'confront' Jonathan Kendrick about the alleged abuse. She broke down in tears and said that would be too difficult. She asked us twice if we were going to report this to the authorities. We told her that if she wishes to make a report, it is her absolute right to do so.

Her biggest concern seems to be protecting other children from harm. She wanted to know what procedures were in place in the congregations when convicted abusers change congregations. What is to prevent them from 'hiding what they are?' She mentioned that the national list for these convicted abusers has a program that allows victims to list their e-mail address and if the abuser moves, the victim is notified. She wants to know if the Society has such plans to do something similar. We promised her we would ask.

We have made an appointment to talk with her father on 12/16/09. Candace expressed a reluctance to trust the congregation or her father to do the right thing. She feels betrayed and alone. We shared a number of scriptures with her regarding Jehovah's love and concern for her. We feel there is an opportunity to get her back into the congregation.

Candace mentioned that she had lunch last year (2008) with Sister Claudia Francis who had a close friendship with the Conti family and Jonathan Kendrick. Candace asked Sister Francis if she ever suspected that Jonathan was abusing her. Sister Francis revealed to Candace that she had found a receipt where Jonathan Kendrick had taken her boys and Candace shopping for clothes. The receipt was for a black bra. She doesn't know why she kept that receipt but it now makes her suspect wrong doing. We have tried to contact Sister Francis but so far no success.

Another judicial case that has a bearing on this matter involves Claudia Francis. She admitted to committing adultery with Jonathan Kendrick in 1998. We formed a judicial committee in October of 1999 and reproved her. The judicial committee notified the Oakley congregation since Jonathan Kendrick had moved there in Jan 1998. Brother Eric Smothers was our contact. We have no other notes regarding your judicial case with Jonathan Kendrick. You mentioned on the phone this week that you couldn't find any letters from us regarding this matter nor had any judicial committee met with him on this matter. This is quite disturbing. If no judicial committee was formed, Jonathan Kendrick should be confronted with this charge. It would be a serious matter if he has kept this secret all this time.

12/16/09
We met with Candace's father, Neal Conti on 12/16/09 to discuss the matter. He offered very little help or insight. He is remarried and serving as a ministerial servant in the Niles congregation of Fremont. He admits that the family was very troubled back then and that Candace was asked to shoulder too big of a load for a young girl when her parents divorced. We asked if he ever suspected that Candace was being abused and he said no. We encouraged him to reach out to his daughter and provide support. He said he would try.

We trust that these notes may help you when you meet with Jonathan Kendrick. We have plans to talk with Candace again after we hear from your congregation and the branch.

Your brothers

I, Richard J. Simons, hereby declare:

1. That I am an attorney at law licensed to practice before all Courts of the State of California and am the attorney for Plaintiff in the above-entitled action.

Included in that criminal record of Defendant Kendrick was a Felony Order of Probation, in which the terms and conditions of the sentence imposed on Mr. Kendrick for his conviction on felony violations of Penal Code section 288(a) were ordered. Certificate of Compliance With VAWA

This temporary protective order meets all Full Faith and Credit requirements of the Violence Against Women Act, 18 U.S.C. 2265 (1994) (VAWA) upon notice of the restrained person. This court has jurisdiction over the parties and the subject matter; the restrained person has been or will be afforded notice and a timely opportunity to be heard as provided by the laws of this jurisdiction. This order is valid and entitled to enforcement in all jurisdictions throughout the 50 United States, the District of Columbia, all tribal lands, and all U.S. territories, commonwealths, and possessions and shall be enforced as if it were an order of that jurisdiction.

Warnings and Notices to the Restrained Person in ❷

19 If you do not obey this order, you can be arrested and charged with a crime.

- It is a felony to take or hide a child against this order. You can go to prison and/or pay a fine.
- If you travel to another state or to tribal lands, or make the protected person do so, with the intention of disobeying this order, you can be charged with a federal crime.
- If you do not obey this order, you can go to prison and/or pay a fine.

20 You Cannot Have Guns or Firearms

You cannot own, have, possess, buy or try to buy, receive or try to receive, or otherwise get a gun while the order is in effect. If you do, you can go to jail and pay a $1,000 fine. If the orders are approved at the hearing listed on page 1, the court will order you to sell to a gun dealer or turn in to police any guns or firearms that you have or control. The judge will ask you for proof that you did so. If you do not obey this order, you can be charged with a crime. If the orders are approved at the hearing, federal law says you cannot have guns or ammunition.

21 After You Have Been Served With a Restraining Order

- Obey all the orders.
- If you want to respond, fill out Form DV-120. Take it to the court clerk with the forms listed in Item ㉒.
- File DV-120 and have all papers served on the protected person by the date listed in Item ⑱ of this form.

- Even if you do not attend the hearing, the judge can make the restraining orders last for 3 years.

22 Child Custody, Visitation, and Support

- Child Custody and Visitation: If you do not go to the hearing, the judge can make custody and visitation orders for your children without hearing your side.
- Child Support: The judge can order child support based on the income of both parents. The judge can also have that support taken directly from your paycheck. Child support can be a lot of money, and usually you have to pay until the child is 18. File and serve a Financial Statement (FL-155) or an Income and Expense Declaration (FL-150) so the judge will have information about your finances. Otherwise, the court will make support orders without hearing your side.

Instructions for Law Enforcement

23 Start Date and End Date of Orders
The start date is the date next to the judge's signature on page 3. The orders end on the hearing date on page 1 or the hearing date on Form DV-125, if attached.

24 Arrest Required If Order Is Violated
If an officer has probable cause to believe that the restrained person had notice of the order and has disobeyed the order, the officer must arrest the restrained person. (Pen. Code, §§ 836(c)(1), 13701(b).) A violation of the order may be a violation of Penal Code section 166 or 273.6.

25 Notice/Proof of Service
- Law enforcement must first determine if the restrained person had notice of the orders. If notice cannot be verified, the restrained person must be advised of the terms of the orders. If the restrained person then fails to obey the orders, the officer must enforce them. (Fam. Code, § 6383.)

  Consider the restrained person "served" (noticed) if:
  - The officer sees a copy of the Proof of Service, or confirms that the Proof of Service is on file or
  - The restrained person was at the restraining order hearing, or was informed of the order by an officer (Fam. Code, § 6383, Pen. Code, § 836(c)(2))

26 If the Protected Person Contacts the Restrained Person
Even if the protected person invites or consents to contact with the restrained person, the orders remain in effect and must be enforced. The protected person cannot be arrested for inviting or consenting to contact with the restrained person. The orders can be changed only by another court order. (Pen. Code, § 13710(b).)

27 Child Custody and Visitation
- Custody and visitation orders are on Form DV-140, Items ❸ and ❹. They are sometimes also written on additional pages or referenced in DV-140 or other orders that are not part of the restraining order.
- Forms DV-100 and DV-105 are not orders. Do not enforce them.

28 Enforcing the Restraining Order in California
Any law enforcement officer in California who receives, sees, or verifies the orders on a paper copy, or on the California Law Enforcement Telecommunications System (CLETS), or in an NCIC Protection Order File must enforce the orders.

29 Conflicting Orders
If a criminal restraining order (CR-160) conflicts with a civil restraining order (DV-110 or DV-130), enforce the criminal order. Even if the criminal order is older, the officer must still enforce it over the civil order. (Pen. Code, § 136.2(h).) Any nonconflicting terms of the civil restraining order remain in full force.

3. At the time of filing of this action, I checked on the Department of Justice's Sex Offender Registry website to obtain Defendant Kendrick's address. Although Mr. Kendrick is listed and the information contained his name and photograph, no address is listed. A printout of the DOJ pages on Mr. Kendrick is attached as Exhibit 2 to this Declaration.

4. Because I did not have a confirmed address for Mr. Kendrick, I did not serve him immediately after the filing of this action. The Court was advised of the delayed service on Mr. Kendrick prior to the time of the Initial case Management Conference in this case. The Complaint was served on the institutional defendants, and discovery served upon them. On June 14, 2011, I received defendant Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York's Responses to Plaintiff's Form Interrogatories. Response 12.2 stated that defense counsel had interviewed Kendrick on April 6, 2011, but that contact information was unknown to that Defendant. A true and correct copy of the excerpt of Answers to Form Interrogatory 12.2 is attached as Exhibit 3 to this Declaration.

5. On June 20, 2011, I sent a Meet and Confer Letter to Mr. McCabe, counsel for the institutional defendants, requesting a further response to answer 12.2 that would include all contact information for Mr. Kendrick. A true and correct copy of the correspondence of June 20 is attached as Exhibit 4 to this Declaration.

6. On June 29, 2011, James McCabe responded in writing with Mr. Kendrick's current address and home telephone number. A true and correct copy of his correspondence is attached as Exhibit 5 to this Declaration.

7. Defendant Kendrick was then promptly served by personal service on July 16, 2011. A courtesy copy of the Endorsed Filed Proof of Service is attached as Exhibit 6 to this Declaration.

8. After service of Summons and Complaint on Mr. Kendrick, and prior to entry of the default, I received a telephone call from attorney Michael Markowitz of Danville. I know Mr. Markowitz personally as an experienced criminal defense attorney, knowledgeable as well in civil litigation, and an attorney who has represented other sex offenders' interests in child sex abuse civil litigation I have brought on behalf of other plaintiffs in the past.

[PROPOSED] ORDER DENYING MOTION FOR RELIEF FROM DEFAULT

Date:	1/19/2012
Time:	3:00 p.m.
Dept:	22
Reservation No:	1225197

The Motion for Relief from Default of Defendant JONATHAN KENDRICK having regularly come before the Court on January 19, 2012, in Department 22, notice having been duly given, oral argument having been heard, and the matter having been submitted on the papers and pleadings produced in support and opposition of the Motion,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Defendant's Motion for Relief from Default is DENIED.

Dated: _____

THE HONORABLE ROBERT McGUINESS
Judge of the Superior Court

RECEIVED ALAMEDA COUNTY
DEC 20 2011
CLERK OF THE SUPERIOR COURT
By _____ Deputy

9. I did speak telephonically with Mr. Markowitz prior to the entry of the Default in this case. He told me that Defendant Kendrick had consulted him on his position in this civil case, but did not have adequate funds to retain his office. Mr. Markowitz then asked me several questions concerning my views on the role Mr. Kendrick might have in providing compensation to Plaintiff in view of his weak financial condition. I advised Mr. Markowitz that although Plaintiff would be required to enter a default if no timely answer was filed by Mr. Kendrick, I did not intend to make any effort to institute collection proceedings against Mr. Kendrick, based on his lack of financial resources, and that Jane Doe and I both were aware that any compensation to be obtained would come from the institutional defendants in the event Plaintiff prevailed. We also briefly discussed other issues, specifically that Mr. Kendrick was likely to be deposed, and that accompanying Fifth Amendment questions would likely arise.

10. Mr. Markowitz did not request an extension of time for Mr. Kendrick to respond, and advised me that he would relay our conversation and intentions to him, and that it was likely Mr. Kendrick would simply default.

11. From professional and personal experience with Mr. Markowitz, I know him to be a reputable and honest attorney. As such, I have no doubt that he explained to Mr. Kendrick the timing for avoiding a default, the manner to file an in pro per answer without fees based lack of ability to pay, and Plaintiff's intention of taking default if no answer was filed.

12. After my conversation with Mr. Markowitz, I had contact with Mr. Kendrick and his wife, Linda Hood Kendrick, after a representative of my office inadvertently left a message at what was later identified as their home telephone number while looking for another witness. They each called back and either spoke with me, or left voicemail messages after talking to my staff. Neither requested an extension of time to answer or that the default be set aside.

13. At no time did Mr. Kendrick contact my office to request an extension of time to file a responsive pleading.

14. As of August 15, 2011, the 30-day deadline to file a responsive pleading after service of summons pursuant to Cal. Civ. Proc. Code section 412.20, Defendant had not filed any response. I

INTRODUCTION

Defendant JONATHAN KENDRICK (hereinafter "Defendant") brought this Motion for Relief from Default (hereinafter "Motion") based on excusable neglect, among other reasons. Plaintiff JANE DOE (hereinafter "Plaintiff") fails to adequately oppose the Motion and/or demonstrate any prejudice that she would suffer if the default was set aside. The basic facts are that Defendant acted diligently to secure legal representation after being served with the complaint in this matter and simply failed to understand he had only thirty (30) days to file a response. Further, less than two months after learning that his default had been entered, Defendant, while continuing his search for legal counsel, sought the assistance of a paralegal service and filed this Motion. Defendant's diligence, coupled with the fact that Plaintiff will suffer no prejudice if Defendant's default is set aside, more that support Defendant's request that the Court grant his Motion and set aside the default entered against him on August 26, 2011.

II

PLAINTIFF'S OPPOSITION FAILS TO PROVIDE SUPPORT FOR THE CONTENTION THAT DEFENDANT'S FAILURE TO TIMELY REPSOND TO PLANTIFF'S COMPLAINT WAS NOT EXCUSEABLE NEGLECT

Despite Plaintiff's insistence otherwise, this Motion is not the proper forum for which to explore the allegations in her Complaint, or any other allegations relating to Defendant's past. Defendant brought this Motion so that he may participate in this case and defend himself at trial, rights afforded to him by the laws of the State of California. That is the focus of the Motion and should be the focus of any opposition and reply. Unlike the defendants in the cases cited in Plaintiff's Opposition, Defendant acted as a reasonably prudent person after being served with Plaintiff's complaint, as demonstrated in his moving papers. Defendant's failure to file a responsive pleading in the required time was not inexcusable or intentional. During the time period between being served with the complaint and having his default taken, Defendant spoke with numerous attorneys and was trying to find representation, unaware that the clock was ticking. (Declaration of Jonathan Kendrick filed herewith [hereinafter "Kendrick Decl."] at ¶¶ 2-4.) Further, as shown below, Plaintiff fails to provide case law, or credible evidence that refutes Defendant's demonstration of excusable neglect.

In Plaintiff's Opposition she argues that Defendant's ability to read and write the English language negates his assertion that he was unaware of the 30 day deadline to file a responsive pleading because the Summons includes a notice of the same. However, a defendant's ability to read the language of the Summons is insufficient to negate excusable neglect, otherwise no motion for relief, brought by a person who can read/write the English language, could ever be granted. As previously stated, after Defendant was served with the complaint he understood he needed legal counsel; however, he was unaware of the deadline to respond and none of the lawyers he spoke with during that time warned him of the deadline. (Kendrick Decl." at ¶¶ 2-4.)

This includes attorney Michael Markowitz, whom Plaintiff assumes because of his reputation would have explained the timing for a response. However, Mr. Markowitz did not provide that information to Defendant. (Kendrick Decl. at ¶ 3.) In fact, Mr. Markowitz informed Defendant that he had spoken with Plaintiff's counsel and that Defendant need not worry about the litigation at all because Plaintiff was simply going to ignore him as a Defendant as Plaintiff's target was the Watchtower defendants. (Kendrick Decl. at ¶ 3.)

Further, Plaintiff's contention that Defendant's request for a restraining order nearly a decade ago takes away his ability to claim that he does not have knowledge and/or experience in the civil legal arena is preposterous. It should go without saying that, filling out a judicial council form requesting a restraining order is a completely different, and much more simplified, process than civil litigation. The forms required to request a restraining order are of the "fill-in-the-blank" variety and are accompanied by an instructions sheet for how they are to be filled out, filled and served. They are clearly tailored for non attorneys. Moreover, Defendant received assistance with filling out these documents from the court clerk who provided him with copies of the documents he needed to fill out. (Kendrick Decl. at ¶ 5.) Most telling, and a fact which is notably absent from Plaintiff's Opposition, is the fact that Defendant's request for the restraining order was denied because he failed to properly serve and file a proof of service. (Kendrick Decl. at ¶ 5.) Defendant did not become "experienced" with civil litigation, and the attendant time required for responding to a complaint, by virtue of requesting a restraining order. Defendant simply became aware of how to request a restraining order (not even how to properly serve one). The fact is, in regards to this case, Defendant failed to understand that he had a short window of time to respond to the complaint served on him by Plaintiff, which is exactly why he was diligently seeking out legal representation - he knew he did not have the knowledge or the experience to handle such a complicated legal matter on his own. (Kendrick Decl. at ¶ 2.)

II

PLAINTIFF WILL SUFFER NO PREJUDICE IF THE DEFAULT AGAINST DEFENDANT IS SET ASIDE

Plaintiff has failed to allege, and will not suffer, any prejudice if Defendant's default is set aside. Plaintiff did not serve Defendant with the complaint until six months into the litigation while discovery against the other Defendants was already well underway. (Declaration of Jonathan Kendrick filed in support of this Motion on October 14, 2011 at ¶ 4.) Further, the trial of this matter is still more than five months away leaving sufficient time for any necessary discovery to be completed. If granting the relief will not prejudice the opposing party (other than losing the advantage of the default), "the original negligence in allowing the default to be taken will be excused on a weak showing." (Aldrich v. San Fernando Valley Lumber Co. (1985) 170 Cal.App.3d 725, 740.)

III

THE LAW FAVORS TRIAL OF CASES ON THE MERITS.

The law always favors trial on the merits, and looks with disfavor upon a party who seeks to take advantage of the excusable mistake or neglect of his adversary. (Weitz v. Yankosky (1966) 63 Cal.2d 849, 855.) Based upon that principle, any doubts in applying section 473 must be resolved in favor of the party seeking relief from default. (Elston v. City of Turlock (1985) 38 Cal.3d 227, 233; Fasuyi v. Permatex, Inc. (2008) 167 Cal.App.4th 681, 696.)

The bottom line is that where the party in default moves promptly to seek relief, which Defendant did, and no prejudice to the opposing party will result from setting aside the default and letting the case go to trial on the merits, which is the case here as there is plenty of time for discovery before trial, "very slight evidence will be required to justify a court in setting aside the default." (Elston v. City of Turlock, supra, 38 Cal.3d at 233; Fasuyi v. Permatex, Inc., supra, 167 Cal.App.4th at 696; Shamblin v. Brattain (1988) 44 Cal.3d 474, 478; Misic v. Segars (1995) 37 Cal.App.4th 1149, 1154; Purdum v. Holmes (2010) 187 Cal.App.4th 916, 922.) The fact that Defendant diligently pursued legal representation after being served with the Complaint, unaware that his time to respond was set to expire in 30 days, and none of the numerous attorneys he spoke with warned him of the deadline is sufficient to demonstrate excusable neglect in allowing the default to occur. (Kesselman v. Kesselman (1963) 212 Cal.App.2d 196, 207-208; Elms v. Elms (1946) 72 Cal.App.2d 508, 513.)

III

CONCLUSION

Based on the foregoing, Defendant Jonathan Kendrick respectfully requests that this Court grant his Motion for Relief from Default and set aside the default entered against him on August 26, 2011.

Respectfully submitted.

3. One of the attorneys I met with during that time period was Michael Markowitz. During my consultations with him he never explained the timing for filing a response to the complaint to avoid having my default entered, the manner to file an in pro per answer without fees based on lack of ability to pay nor did Mr. Markowitz explain Plaintiff's intention of taking my default if no answer was filed within the required time period. In fact, Mr. Markowitz informed me that he had spoken with Plaintiff's counsel and that I did not need to worry about the litigation at all because Plaintiff was simply going to ignore me as a Defendant and that The Watchtower defendants were the "real targets".

4. Further, none of the attorneys I spoke with after being served with the complaint, and prior to the entry of default, told me I only had 30 days to respond to Plaintiff's Complaint.

5. In regards to the Request for Restraining Order that I filed in 2003, I received assistance in preparing those documents from the court clerk who provided me with the copies of everything I would need. Ultimately, my request was denied based on the fact that I failed to properly serve the papers and/or file a proof of service by the time of the hearing – a process which I did not understand even after the clerk explained it to me.

Defendant JONATHAN KENDRICK (hereinafter "Defendant"), hereby asserts the following objections to the Declaration of Richard Simons ("Simons Declaration"), dated December 5, 2011, and filed by Plaintiff JANE DOE (hereinafter "Plaintiff") in support of her opposition to Defendant's Motion for Relief from Default (hereinafter "Motion"), and requests that this Court strike portions of the Simons Declaration, for the reasons set forth herein.

Simons Declaration, ¶ 16, p. 3, lines 15-18 which state: "As such, I have no doubt that he explained to Mr. Kendrick the timing for avoiding a default, the manner to file an in pro per answer without fees based lack of ability to pay, and Plaintiff's intention of taking default if no answer was filed" is objectionable since this statement is hearsay, speculative, argumentative, lacks foundation and Simons lacks personal knowledge of whether, in fact, Mr. Markowitz actually provided Plaintiff with any of the information as alleged. (Cal. Evid. Code §§ 702, 1101, 1200.) Further, Mr. Markowitz never told Defendant the timing for filing a response to the complaint to avoid having his default entered, the manner to file an in pro per answer without fees based on lack of ability to pay and Plaintiff's intention of taking his default if no answer was filed. (Declaration of Jonathan Kendrick filed herewith at ¶ 3.)

As a result, Defendant respectfully requests that this Court sustain this objection, and strike the above-quoted portion of paragraph 11 of Mr. Simons' Declaration.

Doe Plaintiff/Petitioner(s) VS. The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, I Defendant/Respondent(s) (Abbreviated Title)	No. HG11558324 Order Motion to Vacate/Set Aside Granted

The Motion to Vacate/Set Aside was set for hearing on 01/19/2012 at 03:00 PM in Department 22 before the Honorable Robert McGuiness. The Tentative Ruling was published and was contested.

The matter was argued and submitted, and good cause appearing therefore,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED THAT:

The tentative ruling is affirmed as follows: The Motion of Jonathan Kendrick for relief from default is GRANTED.

The court is concerned that the evidence suggests that Mr. Kendrick was aware of the lawsuit, had consulted with counsel, and was possibly aware that he was required to file a responsive pleading yet failed to do so within the allotted time. The court also notes that the motion was filed shortly after the default, which mitigates any prejudice to the Plaintiff, that counsel for Plaintiff did not did not provide notice to Plaintiff before taking the default, Kim v. Westmoore Partners, Inc. (2011) 201 Cal.App.4th 267, 271 fn 1, and that there is a strong policy preference in favor of resolving cases on their merits, Fasuyi v. Permatex, Inc. (2008) 167 Cal.App.4th 681, 696. Weighing these factors, the court finds that defendant Mendrick has made the "very slight" showing required for excusable neglect and grants the relief requested under CCP 473(b).

Because of the significant evidence that Mr. Kendrick was aware that he was required to file a responsive pleading, the court makes the grant of this motion conditional on Mr. Kendrick paying Plaintiff $1000 for the fees that plaintiff incurred as a result of Mr. Kendrick's failure to file a timely answer. Vanderkous v. Conley (2010) 188 Cal.App.4th 111, 118-119.

Defendant Kendrick must file the proposed answer on or before January 26, 2012.

INTRODUCTION

Jonathan Kendrick sexually molested and abused Plaintiff Jane Doe when she was nine years old. Jonathan Kendrick gained access to his victim through their mutual involvement in the North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses in Fremont. The Congregation was managed and supervised by The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc.

Plaintiff Jane Doe seeks leave to file a First Amended Complaint to add factual allegations supporting an award of punitive damages against Defendant Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. (WBTSNY).

STATEMENT OF FACTS

The Jehovah's Witnesses are a collection of various corporations and entities around the world organized for religious purposes. (Evidence in Support of Motion Ex. 8, "Organized to Accomplish Our Ministry," p. 26 [all exhibits cited hereinafter are Evidence in Support of Motion of Jane Doe to Amend Complaint].) The "Governing Body" is a group of men who meet at the Jehovah's Witnesses' New York world headquarters and control all Jehovah's Witnesses activities worldwide. (Deposition of WBTSNY PMQ Alan Shuster, Ex. 29, 9:9-17, 19:6-13; Dec. of Expert William Bowen, Ex. 31, ¶4.) The Governing Body acts through the various corporations it has established, including WBTSNY, and establishes in detail each and every significant policy and administrative practice for all the entities and all the Jehovah's Witnesses. (Shuster Depo., Ex. 29, 19:6-16; Bowen Dec., Ex. 31, ¶4 3:3-7.) The policies and procedures are issued and explained through official publications such as the Branch Organization Manual, the Kingdom Ministry School Textbook, letters to All Bodies of Elders, letters to All Circuit and District Overseers, the Awake and Watchtower magazines, and a manual named "Organized to Do Jehovah's Will." (Shuster Depo., Ex. 29, 19:14-20:2; 54:11-25; 109:22-110:11; Bowen Dec. ¶4; Deposition of Elder Gary Abrahamson, Ex. 21, 12:21-13:5,15-18, 43:8-19.) The local and national congregational administrative officials, called "Elders," must follow these rules, without any discretion to depart from them. (Letter from WBTSNY to All Bodies of Elders 7/31/89, Ex. 1, Abrahamson Depo., Ex. 21, 88:18-89:17; Bowen Dec., Ex. 31, ¶5 3:9-12.)

WBTSNY's "Legal Department," located in New York, communicates instructions and directions to the local Elders within the Congregations. (Deposition of WBTSNY PMQ Mario Moreno, Ex. 28, 6:12-20.) The Legal Department's instructions are formulated in each case to implement the mandates and rules set by the Governing Body. (Ibid.; Shuster Depo., Ex. 29, 41:17-25, 43:2-14; Bowen Dec., Ex. 31, ¶5 3 9-12, ¶6 3:20-26.) Before 2001, WBTSNY also directed local congregations through a "Service Department." After 2001, the Governing Body formed a new corporation, the Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, to perform this function. (Shuster Depo., Ex. 29, 16:6-11; Bowen Dec. ¶5 3:13-16.)

For many years, WBTSNY has had written policies, established by the Governing Body, which Elders are required to follow when they receive information concerning possible sexual abuse of children within their Congregation. (Shuster Depo., Ex. 29, 54:11-25; Bowen Dec. ¶4; Deposition of Elder Michael Clarke, Ex. 20., 9:12-17, 18:2-25.) The primary document setting forth these procedures is the letter to All Bodies of Elders dated July 1, 1989. (Ex. 1.) This letter, approved by the Governing Body, has been and remains the controlling document setting forth the administrative policies and procedures in cases of childhood sexual abuse. (Shuster 38:20-39:24; Bowen Dec. ¶6.)

In 1993, Elders in the North Fremont Congregation learned of possible sexual abuse of two girls by Jonathan Kendrick, an important member of the Congregation. (Letter from North Congregation Elders to WBTSNY 11/15/93, Ex. 2; Abrahamson Depo., Ex. 22, 120:23-123:8; Clarke, Ex. 20, 34:11-35:9; Declaration of Evelyn Kendrick, Ex. 30, ¶3.) They confirmed the first report, and did not investigate the second. (Ex. 2; Clarke, Ex. 20, 34:11-35:9.) The Elders, on a written instruction from WBTSNY, "removed" Jonathan Kendrick from his position within the congregation as a "Ministerial Servant." (Letter from WBTSNY to North Congregation 12/3/93, Ex. 3; Abrahamson Depo., Ex. 22, 119:15-120:2.) Also following specific instruction from WBTSNY, the Elders involved in the investigation of Jonathan Kendrick did not notify or warn anyone else in the congregation that Jonathan Kendrick was a potential sexual predator of children. (Letter to All Bodies of Elders, 7/31/89, Ex. 1; Letter from North Congregation to WBTSNY 8/31/98, Ex. 4; Clarke Depo., Ex. 20, 60:3-22.) Following an official policy of secrecy, the Elders did not notify law enforcement. (Clarke Depo., Ex. 20, 36:10-25, 38:17-24.) The Elders did not warn or notify other administrative persons in the Congregation including fellow Elders or other Ministerial Servants (Deposition of Former Elder Paul Inman, Ex. 24, 7:16-21, 11:25-12:3), or Congregation members, or the parents of children active in the Congregation, including Plaintiff's parents. (Deposition of Congregation Member Claudia Francis, Ex. 26, 10:7-13, 28:11-25; Deposition of Kathleen Conti, Ex. 18, 41:21-24, 44:1-8; Deposition of Neal Conti, Ex. 19, 11:23-25, 15:4-12.) Jonathan Kendrick continued to be allowed to engage in all Congregation activities, including "service," where members, including children, go door to door through residential neighborhoods. (Deposition of Jane Doe, Ex. 17, 12:20-22, 13:20-22, 26:7-21; N. Conti Depo., Ex. 19, 12:11-25.) The policy of secrecy allowed Jonathan Kendrick, a confirmed child molester, to hide in the North Congregation and continue to groom and molest girls, including Plaintiff. (Bowen Dec., Ex. 31, ¶12; Declaration of Expert Dr. Anna Salter, Ex. 32, ¶8; K. Conti Depo., Ex. 18, 47:10-14.)

The policy of secrecy has as its rationale a very secular foundation: the effort of the Governing Body to avoid lawsuits by victims of sexual or other abusive conduct perpetrated by leaders or members of the Jehovah's Witnesses. The secrecy policy and its basis are stated repeatedly and explicitly in the letter to All Bodies of Elders dated July 1, 1989. (Ex. 1.) It states in different provisions:

> "Improper use of the tongue by an elder can result in serious legal problems for the individual, the congregation, and even the Society. " (Ex. 1, p. 1, ¶3.)
>
> "Worldly persons are quick to resort to lawsuits if they feel their "rights" have been violated. " (Ex. 1, p. 1, ¶4.)
> "The legal consequences of a breach of confidentiality by the elders can be substantial. If the elders fail to follow the Society's direction carefully in handling confidential matters, such mistakes could result in successful litigation by those offended. Substantial monetary damages could be assessed against the elders or the congregation. In some cases where the authorities are involved, certain complications could lead to a fine or imprisonment. These possibilities underscore the need for elders to be discerning and to follow carefully directions provided by the Society. (Ex. 1, p. 2, ¶3, emphasis added in part and in part in original.)

In total, the letter makes more than 18 references to costly lawsuits, legal problems, and monetary damages. (Ex. 1, p. 1, ¶¶1, 3-4; p. 2, ¶¶1, 3; p. 4, ¶4; p. 5, ¶¶3, 4.) It contains eight directives to contact the Society's Legal Department immediately when issues arise. (Ex. 1, p. 3, ¶¶ 2, 3, 4; p. 5, ¶ 4; p. 5, ¶ 1.) It also gives repeated separate instruction not to cooperate with law enforcement or honor search warrants or subpoenas. (p. 3, ¶¶2-5; p. 5, ¶3.)

The evidence in support of this Motion to Amend supports a clear and convincing finding that the Governing Body was the managing agent of WBTSNY; that the Governing Body's policies were and continued to be administered through WBTSNY's Legal Department; that the secrecy policy violated WBTSNY's secular duty to protect children from sexual abuse while taking part in Jehovah's Witnesses' activities; that the policy exposed Plaintiff to the sexual abuse she suffered; and that the policy to be followed in child sexual abuse cases were promulgated by the Governing Body through WBTSNY in deliberate disregard of the safety of children, and with conscious knowledge of the risks. Specific evidence includes:

(1) WBTSNY issued specific instructions to the Fremont Elders that Jonathan Kendrick was to be removed from his position as Ministerial Servant, but that the reasons for the removal would be kept confidential from all members of the congregation. (Letter from North Congregation to WBTSNY 8/31/98, Ex. 4; Clarke Depo., Ex. 20, 60:3-22.) Jonathan Kendrick continued to be active and a respected member in good standing of the Congregation. (K. Conti Depo., Ex. 18, 44:3-8, 80:24-81:6.) He continued to be fully involved in Congregation activities that provided him access to children – including Plaintiff. (Jane Doe, Ex. 17, 12:20-22, 13:20-22, 26:7-21; N. Conti Depo., Ex. 19, 12:11-25.) The North Fremont Congregation consisted of a little over 100 members, providing Jonathan Kendrick with both enough members to "blend in," and yet a small enough community that he easily knew and was trusted by all of the other members – including Plaintiff's parents. (Abrahamson Depo., Ex. 21, 15:14-16:7, K. Conti Depo., Ex. 18, 44:3-8, 80:24-81:6; Francis Depo., Ex. 26, 28:11-25.)

(2) Jonathan Kendrick took advantage of his place in the Congregation to molest Plaintiff. The ability to operate with the protection of the secrecy policy allowed Jonathan Kendrick to also continue sexual predatory conduct with other members of the Congregation, both adults and children. For example, Claudia Francis, wife of Elder Roderick Francis, personally observed that Jonathan Kendrick bought a bra for a ten-year-old girl in the Congregation named Brianna, which she thought was "weird."

(Francis Depo., 10:16-19, 33:13-35:6.) She observed Jonathan Kendrick engaged in activities with Candace, and calling her overly affectionate names, which she also thought was strange (Id. at 35:10-25, 36:4-23.) She even observed Jonathan Kendrick in a soft porn photograph with children. (Id. at 42:4-18.) However, it was not until later, when she learned of Jonathan Kendrick's past history of molesting children, that the significance of her observations occurred to her (Id. at 36:24-37:10). That was too late to protect Plaintiff.

(3) The reprehensibility of the secrecy policy is demonstrated by Jonathan Kendrick's continuing molestation of other children after he was first identified in 1993. After molesting Plaintiff, he moved to a new Congregation in Oakley, which was not advised of his record of child molestation in Fremont. (Letter from North Congregation to WBTSNY, 8/31/98, Ex. 4.) This failure to warn is specifically authorized by the July 31, 1989 Letter to All Bodies of Elders. (Ex. 1, p. 4.) Jonathan Kendrick then met and married Linda Hood, an Oakley Congregation member, who was unaware of his background. He molested his wife's eight-year-old granddaughter, leading to his conviction of 2 felony counts of violating Penal Code section 288, and his registration as a sex offender. (Oakley Police Report No. 03-20645, July 25, 2003, Ex. 6; Conviction, Ex. 5.).

(4) The Governing Body, and the WBTSNY Corporation as its acting agent, were fully aware of the risks and probable consequences of protecting child abusers' identities and failing to warn congregation members. Their publications repeatedly acknowledge the risk of continuing abuse by one who is known to have engaged in such conduct. (Awake, 10/8/93, Ex. 15, p. 11; The Watchtower, 1/31/97, Ex. 16, p. 29.) This information was generally known to all national organizations that involve youth activities. (Salter Dec., ¶8.) Nevertheless, the policy of secrecy has continued to the present day. (Shuster Depo., Ex. 29, 38:20-39:24, 81:13-82:4.)

This corporate policy, and its implementation in the case now before the Court, meets the legal and evidentiary requirements for an amendment to allege punitive damages.

I. PLAINTIFF'S BURDEN IS A PRIMA FACIE SHOWING.

A Complaint may be amended to allege facts supporting a claim for punitive damages against a religious corporation "upon a finding, on the basis of the supporting and opposing affidavits presented, that the plaintiff has established evidence which substantiates that plaintiff will meet the clear and convincing standard of proof under Section 3294 of the Civil Code." (C.C.P. § 425.14.)

Section 425.14 requires that a plaintiff establish only "a sufficient prima facie showing of facts to sustain a favorable decision if the evidence submitted is credited." (Little Co. of Mary Hospital v. Superior Court (2008) 162 Cal.App.4th 261, 268, citing Hung v. Wang (1992) 8 Cal.App.4th 908, 931.) A plaintiff need not establish that she "will win," as such a requirement would infringe her Constitutional right to a jury trial. (Rowe v. Superior Court (1993) 15 Cal.App.4th 1711, 1722.)

In assessing whether a plaintiff has established a prima facie showing, the trial court does not make any factual determination or engage in any substantive weighing process. (Id. at p. 1723.) Consideration of opposing affidavits involves "only a determination that they do not as a matter of law, defeat the evidence." (Ibid.) If the Court determines a prima facie case exists, it must permit the plaintiff to file the proposed amended complaint. (Ibid.)

II. PLAINTIFF HAS OFFERED A PRIMA FACIE SHOWING TO SUPPORT HER PROPOSED AMENDMENT.

A. WBTSNY Had A Duty To Plaintiff.

California Courts have long recognized a duty to protect children from the risk of sexual abuse at the hands of those known to present a specific risk. Third-party defendants have been exposed to liability for their own negligent failure to prevent sexual molestations by employees, volunteers, and family members, where the non-perpetrator defendant possessed actual knowledge of the employee or volunteer's history of sexual abuse and failed to warn or protect children exposed to the abuser. (Evan F. v. Hughson United Methodist Church (1992) 8 Cal.App.4th 828, 842-43 [Church Youth Director]; Pamela L. v. Farmer (1980) 112 Cal.App.3d 206, 211 [Spouse of molester of girls in home swimming pool]; Juarez v. Boy Scouts of America (2000) 81 Cal.App.4th 377, 395-6 and fn. 5 [Boy Scout volunteer Scout Master]). The basis of the duty is found both in the "special relationship" between children and those who sponsor, organize, or supervise their activities, and in the general duty owed to persons of all ages to protect them from criminal conduct by third persons known to present a specific and preventable risk of criminal conduct or assault. (Rest. 2d Torts §302B.)

A specific duty also exists for organizations or persons who sponsor or supervise activities where youth participate. For example, Juarez v. Boy Scouts, supra, held that the evidence in that case established a duty to protect the child victim from the sexual abuse he experienced, even where there was no actual knowledge of prior molestation by the perpetrator Scout Master. The Court found that the general knowledge concerning child molesters' involvement in activities where youth are present and participate, and the knowledge of the risk of child molestation in or arising out of those activities, was sufficient to support "the imposition of a duty of care on the Scouts to take reasonable protective measures to protect Juarez from the risk of sexual abuse by adult volunteers involved in scouting programs, such as warning, training, or educating him (either directly or through his parent or adult volunteers) about how to avoid such an outcome." (Juarez, supra, 81 Cal.App.4th at p. 409-10). As Juarez noted, its holding was a continuation of a long line of cases recognizing such a duty even in the absence of specific knowledge of a specific child abuser. Juarez relied upon Wallace v. Der-Ohanian, (1962) 199 Cal.App.2d 141, where a youth camp operator was held liable for sexual abuse of an 11-year-old by an unknown third-party stranger who was not associated with the camp.

In this action, the Congregation Elders acted as Defendant WBTSNY's agents in their conduct concerning knowledge (WBTSNY's Responses to Plaintiff's Requests for Admission, Set Three (RFA), Ex. 7, Nos. 3 and 4.) The members of the Governing Body were the managing agents who set the policies followed by the Elders. (Shuster Depo., Ex. 29, 19:6-20:2, 31:12-16; Bowen Dec., Ex. 31, ¶4 3:1-4.) Plaintiff met Jonathan Kendrick through the Jehovah's Witnesses, she and her family trusted him because of the Jehovah's Witnesses community and church relationship, and Jonathan Kendrick had access to Plaintiff during, before, and after meetings, services, and door-to-door neighborhood service. (K. Conti Depo., Ex. 18, 80:24-81:6; Jane Doe, Ex. 17, 25:8-26:24; N. Conti Depo., Ex. 19, 12:11-25; Abrahamson Depo., Ex. 21, 38:2-23; Shuster Depo., Ex. 29, 62:3-6; 63:2-7; Clarke Depo., Ex. 20, 47:4-16). The Elders' knowledge of Kendrick's prior sexual abuse involving one confirmed and a second suspected victim, and the involvement of children such as Plaintiff in every aspect of Jehovah's Witnesses activities (Abrahamson Depo., Ex. 21, 38:2-23; Shuster Depo., Ex. 29, 62:3-6; 63:2-7; Clarke Depo., Ex. 20, 47:4-16), is sufficient to establish a duty to have protected her from Jonathan Kendrick's sexual abuse.

B. WBTSNY Negligently Breached Its Duty to Plaintiff.

The standard of care between 1993 and 1996 for the prevention of child molestation and sexual abuse in religious institutions where children are allowed to participate is established by the expert witness Declaration of Anna Salter, Ph. D. (Ex. 32, ¶8.). Dr. Salter holds a Ph.D. in Clinical Psychology and Public Practice from Harvard, and has spent her entire professional career in childhood sexual abuse recognition and response. She has conducted workshops and trainings for 30 years all over the nation and world, and been a consultant with organizations of all kinds on policies and procedures. (Salter Dec., Ex. 32, ¶¶1-4). Dr. Salter's opinion is that, throughout the relevant time period, national religious corporations like defendants had "an obligation to educate and train participants in such groups or activities, including volunteer adults, children, administrative personnel, in the recognition, prevention, reporting, and possible signs of childhood sexual abuse; and a further obligation to address reports of childhood sexual abuse immediately to actively prevent further opportunities for abuse of any child . . . Failure to notify those individuals in positions of leadership authority within the local chapter, group, congregation, or club of a confirmed report violates the standard, and the failure to notify parents and other adults within the group or congregation violates this standard." (Salter Dec., ¶8, 2:22-3:6).

Dr. Salter's opinion as to the standard of care is consistent with the legal duties long recognized in California case law. (Evan F. v. United Methodist, supra, 8 Cal.App.4th 828; and cases cited therein). There is a prima facie case that Defendant WBTSNY violated the applicable standards of care in this case. WBTSNY did not notify parents, congregation members, or congregation officials of Kendrick's established or suspected sexual abuse of two girls. (Letter from North Congregation to WBTSNY 8/31/98, Ex. 4; Clarke Depo., Ex. 20, 60:3-22; Francis Depo., Ex. 26, 28:11-25; K. Conti Depo., Ex. 18, 44:3-8.) They did not warn parents or congregation members of Jonathan Kendrick's history. (Ibid.) On the contrary, the Fremont Elders followed their instructions, and corporate policy, and kept Kendrick's sexual abuse of children a secret. (Letter from WBTSNY to All Bodies of Elders 7/31/89, Ex. 1; Shuster Depo., Ex. 29, 81:13-82:4; Clarke Depo., Ex. 20, 60:3-22.) Further, although general platitudes were espoused in its publications (See WBTSNY's Amended Responses to Plaintiff's Request for Documents, Ex. 9, No. 6), WBTSNY provided no evidence that it actually maintained or implemented any policy or program of education, training, or childhood sexual abuse prevention.

C. WBTSNY's Negligent Conduct Constitutes Legal Malice.

1. Standard for Malice

To prevail on a claim for punitive damages at trial, a plaintiff must prove by clear and convincing evidence that the defendant acted with oppression, fraud, or malice. (Civ. Code § 3294(a).) "Malice" means "despicable conduct which is carried on by the defendant with a willful and conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others." (C.C. § 3294(c)(1).) "Despicable conduct is conduct that is so vile, base, or contemptible that it would be looked down on and despised by ordinary decent people." (College Hospital, Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 8 Cal.4th 704, 725; CACI 3945.) If the Court cannot be said as a matter of law that the conduct was not despicable, the determination should be left to the jury. (Angie M. v. Superior Court (1995) 37 Cal.App.4th 1217, 1228-29.) Malice is usually proven by circumstantial evidence alone. (Nolin v. National Convenience Stores, Inc. (1979) 95 Cal.App.3d 279, 288, citation omitted.)

A plaintiff is entitled to punitive damages based upon negligence liability if the defendant's negligence exhibits a "conscious disregard of the safety of others." (Snyder v. Enterprise Rent-A-Car Co. (2005) 392 F.Supp. 2d 1116, 1129 (N.D. Cal.), citing Taylor v. Superior Court (1979) 24 Cal.3d 890, 895.) Malice may be established where the defendant is aware of, but fails to avoid, the probable and dangerous consequences of his conduct. (Taylor v. Superior Court, supra, 24 Cal.3d 890, at p. 895-96.)

Claims for punitive damages have been recognized and affirmed in a multiplicity of circumstances of negligent harm arising from the failure to warn or the withholding of significant information. In Snyder v. Enterprise Rent-a-Car, supra, the plaintiffs sought punitive damages against a company that rented a car to a driver with a suspended license whose driving under the influence resulted in their son's death. (392 F.Supp.2d at p. 1120.) The court denied the defendant's motion for summary judgment on the issue of punitive damages, finding that in adopting a policy opting not to check the status of renters' licenses, the defendants were aware that they would inevitably rent vehicles to persons who were not licensed, and that injuries would result. (Id. at p. 1130.)

In Nolin v. National Convenience Stores, Inc., supra, 95 Cal.App.3d 279, 282, sufficient evidence was presented to support the jury's determination of malice where the plaintiff was injured when she slipped on gasoline spilled near a pump at the defendant's gas station. The court found that both direct and circumstantial evidence proved that the defendant knew about the chronic dangerous condition and so carelessly maintained the area that it had displayed a conscious disregard for the safety of its customers. (Id. at p. 288.) The defendant's disregard for the risk was demonstrated by a lack of concern for the likelihood of injury, its lack of training of its employees concerning cleanup procedures, and its financial motives. (Ibid.)

In O'Hara v. Western Seven Trees Corp., (1977) 75 Cal.App.3d 798, the court held inducing the plaintiff to rent an apartment by misrepresenting that the complex was patrolled by the defendant's security agents, and withholding knowledge that several rapes had occurred and few safety precautions had been taken, demonstrated conscious disregard for the plaintiff's safety. (Id. at p. 806.) The court explicated that the defendant was on notice of the past attacks and conditions making future assaults likely, and "by not acting affirmatively to protect [the plaintiff], they increased the likelihood that she would also be a victim." (Id. at p. 804.)

In this case, Defendant WBTSNY's conduct consisted of (1) having actual knowledge of Jonathan Kendrick's record of child molestation (Letter from North Congregation Elders to WBTSNY 11/15/93, Ex. 2; Abrahamson Depo., Ex. 22, 120:23-123:8; Clarke, Ex. 20, 34:11-35:9; Declaration of Evelyn Kendrick, Ex. 30, ¶3); (2) having general knowledge of both the effects of childhood sexual abuse on victims, and the high recidivism of childhood sexual abusers (Awake, Ex. 10-14; Awake, 10/8/93, Ex. 15, p. 11; The Watchtower, 1/31/97, Ex. 16, p. 29); (3) failing to provide any training to Elders, parents, congregation members, or others, on investigation of or recognition and prevention of sexual abuse of children (Shuster Depo., 89:14-90:13, 113:17-114:13; Clarke Depo., 33:6-10; Abrahamson Depo., Ex. 21, 43:7-19); (4) failing to warn anyone of the risk of childhood sexual abuse posed by Jonathan Kendrick (Letter from WBTSNY to All Bodies of Elders 7/31/89, Ex. 1; Shuster Depo., Ex. 29, 81:13-82:4; Clarke Depo., Ex. 20, 60:3-2; K. Conti Depo., Ex. 18, 44:3-8; Francis Depo., Ex. 26, 28:11-25) (5) continuing to allow Jonathan Kendrick to participate in congregation activities involving children, including plaintiff (Doe Depo., Ex. 17, 26:7-29:14; K. Conti Depo., Ex. 18, 47:10-14, Shuster Depo., Ex. 29, 89:14-90:13); and (6) keeping Jonathan Kendrick's sexual abuse of children secret (Letter from WBTSNY to All Bodies of Elders 7/31/89, Ex. 1, Letter from North Congregation to WBTSNY 8/31/98, Ex. 4, Clarke Depo., Ex. 20, 60:3-22). All of these omissions and actions were in furtherance of the policies of, and on the authority of, WBTSNY, and were committed by admitted agents of WBTSNY. The factual analogies to the Snyder, Nolin, and O'Hara cases are clear.

2. Corporate Authority

To establish a prima facie case supporting an award of punitive damages against a corporate defendant, Plaintiff must present evidence that the defendant's managing agents "authorized or ratified" the wrongful conduct, or was "personally guilty of" malice. (Civ. Code § 3294(b).) Plaintiff meets the elements of section 3294 in this case. A "Managing Agent" is one who exercises "substantial independent authority and judgment over decisions that ultimately determine corporate policy." (White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 563, at p. 573; Major v. Western Home Ins. Co. (2009) 169 Cal. App. 4th 1197, 1221.)

Although the conduct regarding Jonathan Kendrick was performed at the North Fremont Congregation by Elders Abrahamson and Clarke, they acted as agents of WBTSNY. (RFA, Ex. 7, Nos. 3 and 4.) All of the disputed conduct involved following the policies of, and instructions of, WBTSNY. (Letter from WBTSNY to All Bodies of Elders 7/31/89, Ex. 1; Clarke Depo., Ex. 20, 60:3-22; Shuster Depo., Ex. 29, 81:13-17.) All of the policies, including the secrecy policy as to childhood sexual abusers, were in fact WBTSNY corporate policy as established by the Governing Body as its managing policy makers. (Shuster Depo., Ex. 29, 19:6-20:2, 31:12-16; Shuster depo 19:6-16; Bowen Dec., Ex. 31, ¶4 3:1-4.) The Elders had no discretion to diverge from their instructions or the policies established by the Governing Body through WBTSNY. (Ex. 1; Abrahamson Depo., Ex. 21, 89:12-17.)

3. Deliberate Indifference and Conscious Disregard

WBTSNY's implementation and maintenance of the secrecy policy epitomizes despicable conduct carried on with a willful and conscious disregard of the rights or safety of children. (C.C. §3294(c)(1).) Circumstantial evidence supports this finding, as the Declaration of Dr. Salter establishes that national organizations of all kinds, from the Boy Scouts of America to the National Council of Churches, had recognized by 1993 the need to educate and train participants in sexual abuse recognition and prevention, and to respond immediately to reports of childhood sexual abuse in such a way as to actively prevent further victims of that perpetrator. (Salter Dec., ¶8, 2:22-3:6.) It was also generally well known long before the relevant time period that childhood sexual abusers frequently are recidivists, their grooming conduct goes unnoticed, that children frequently do not report, that there are usually no witnesses to childhood sexual abuse, and that the perpetrators are not the type of people who are generally "suspicious." (Salter Dec., ¶8, 3:6-18; Awake, 1/22/85, Ex. 10, p. 4-5; Awake, 4/8/93, Ex. 13, p. 31; Awake, 10/8/93, Ex. 15, p. 6: "In the vast majority of cases – 85 to 90 percent by some estimates – the abuser is a person the child knows and trusts.") It was further generally known that allowing adults who have sexually molested even one child to participate in further activities with youth without warning or precautions exposes children to further abuse. (Salter Dec., ¶8, 3:18-23; Awake 10/8/93, Ex. 15, p. 11.)

Besides this circumstantial evidence, there is evidence that the Governing Body was aware of and disregarded these known risks by the policies and practices at issue in this case. In the two preceding years, four issues of Awake magazine featured articles and letters about the prevalence and consequences of child sexual abuse. Six weeks before the investigation at the Kendrick home, WBTSNY published an issue of Awake entirely dedicated to the subject, with headings such as "Your Child Is in Danger!," "An Urgent Problem," and "How Can We Protect Our Children?" (Awake, 10/8/93, Ex. 15.) It reports that "assaults on children are often cloaked in secrecy" and go unreported, even though it has been found that almost one in three girls falls victim to sexual abuse. (Id. at p. 4.) It explains that "child molestation is neither new nor rare; it is a longstanding problem that is epidemic today." (Ibid.) The also reports about an alarming rate of recidivism among child molesters and the overwhelming likelihood they repeat their abuse among many victims, citing a study that revealed 30 child molesters had abused 2,099 children. (Id. at p. 11.) It also explains that those child molesters had used "positions of trust" to accomplish their abuse, and that "denial and disbelief allow abuse to continue." (Ibid.) Moreover, the article notes a Conference of Bishops' conclusion that "it was a 'general conspiracy of silence' that allowed gross child abuse to persist among the Catholic clergy for decades." (Id. at p. 5). The Awake articles set forth the policies of the Governing Body and their corporate entities. (Shuster Depo., Ex. 29, 109:22-110:11.) WBTSNY consciously disregarded a known risk by following the secrecy policy and withholding from parents and adults at North Congregation the fact that Jonathan Kendrick was a known child molester. The sole motive was to protect the organization's secular legal and pecuniary interests.

4. Causation

These policies and practices were a substantial factor in Plaintiff's abuse by Jonathan Kendrick. After confessing to molesting Andrea, Jonathan Kendrick continued to participate in meetings, field service, and activities at North Congregation, and was not prevented from interacting with children. (Doe Depo., Ex. 17, 26:7-29:14; K. Conti Depo., Ex. 18, 47:10-14, Shuster Depo., Ex. 29, 89:14-90:13.) In the close North Congregation community of only about 100 members, neither Plaintiff's parents, nor any other parents, suspected Jonathan Kendrick was a threat to children. (K. Conti Depo., Ex. 18, 80:24-81:6; Francis Depo., Ex. 26, 28:11-25.)

Congregation member Claudia Francis saw the middle-aged Jonathan Kendrick rollerblading alone with Plaintiff, age nine, and thought, "that is very strange." (Francis Depo., Ex. 26, 35:10-25.) Jonathan Kendrick said to her about Plaintiff: "'She's my absolute favorite. She's my number one,'" and she thought, "That's awful strange," but chalked it up to his flamboyant and outrageous personality. (Id.

at 36:4-23.) Ms. Francis also learned that Jonathan Kendrick bought a black bra for a ten-year-old girl in the Congregation named Brianna. When she asked him why he would buy a ten-year-old a black bra, he told her, "every girl needs a black bra." Ms. Francis thought, "That's weird." (Id. at 33:13-35:6.) And Ms. Francis once accompanied Jonathan Kendrick to a storage facility and came across and old photo of him in his 20s, in his underwear, posing on the floor with two four-year-olds, also in their underwear. (Id. at 41:6-42:3.) Jonathan Kendrick explained the children were "friends" of his. Seeing the photo "bothered" Ms. Francis. (Id. at 42:4-18.) But this suggestive evidence did not "connect the dots" for Claudia Francis. Ms. Francis testified that the events indicating Jonathan Kendrick's misconduct were disjunctive and gradual, and it was not until she was told that he molested his stepdaughter that she recognized the significance of what she had seen. (Id. at 36:24-37:10.) By then, it was too late for Plaintiff.

In Jehovah's Witnesses, children routinely attend congregation meetings without their parents, and rely on other members to drive them home. (Abrahamson Depo., Ex. 21, 38:2-23.) Jonathan Kendrick provided that role for the Conti Family and abused Candace on dozens of occasions. (Doe Depo., Ex. 17, 28:9-29:14.) WBTSNY expects parents in the Congregation to be the primary protectors of children from abuse. (Abrahamson Depo., Ex. 21, 44:6-19; Awake, Exs. 10-15.) However, without knowing of a specific threat, parents cannot protect their children. (Salter Dec., ¶8.) Like Claudia Francis, Plaintiff's parents were under the impression that Jonathan Kendrick, like all other members attending the five weekly meetings, doing service work, and participating in the Congregation's activities, was acting with the Jehovah's Witnesses' blessing. (K. Conti Depo., Ex. 18, 44:3-8, 47:10-14, 80:24-81:6; N. Conti Depo., Ex. 19, 12:11-13:25.) They never suspected that Watchtower had actual knowledge that Jonathan Kendrick was a threat to their daughter.

Jonathan Kendrick accomplished the sexual abuse of Plaintiff by use of the trust, position, and authority he held as a fellow member, volunteer, and leader of the North Congregation religious facility. Watchtower endorsed Kendrick's continued membership and participation in North Congregation during the duration of his abuse of Plaintiff despite actual knowledge that Jonathan Kendrick had sexually molested his 13-year-old stepdaughter in 1993, and that there may be other victims. WBTSNY authorized the Elders' conduct, and dictated their decisions. WBTSNY elected to follow its secrecy policy and withhold critical information about Jonathan Kendrick's risk to children.

III. PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO AN ORDER PERMITTING FINANCIAL DISCOVERY.

Plaintiff also seeks an Order Permitting Financial Discovery as to WBTSNY. (Civil Code §3295(c)). The Court may enter the Order "at any time." (Ibid.) Because Plaintiff has shown that she is very likely to succeed on her claim for punitive damages, the Court may enter the Order before trial. (Jabro v. Superior Court (2002) 95 Cal. App. 4th 754, 755.) Alternatively, the Court may enter the Order at any time during trial, or if the trial is bifurcated, between the two phases of the trial. (Mike Davidov Co. v. Issod (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 597, 609.)

CONCLUSION

The evidence shows WBTSNY implemented and maintained policies and practices that authorized a known child molester to continue his conduct in secret among the children of the North Fremont Congregation. The wrongful conduct at issue was authorized by Defendant WBTSNY for the purpose of protecting its own secular legal and financial interests. The evidence shows willful indifference and conscious disregard of the safety of children, including Plaintiff, and her sexual abuse was the result. Plaintiff has met her burden by presenting sufficient clear and convincing evidence on each essential element necessary for a reasonable jury to award punitive damages, and her proposed amendment and request for financial discovery should be allowed.

TO ALL BODIES OF ELDERS IN THE UNITED STATES.

CONFIDENTIAL

Dear Brothers:

We are writing to help all of you as individual elders be aware of a growing concern regarding the handling of your duties that may involve legal issues or questions. Due to its importance, the presiding overseer should arrange for a special meeting of the body of elders to read and consider this letter carefully.

In spreading the Kingdom message, it is appropriate that we be bold and outspoken. Jesus commanded that "what you hear whispered, preach from the housetops." (Matthew 10:27) Even when worldly authorities demand that we keep silent, we reply as did the apostles: "We cannot stop speaking about the things we have seen and heard." (Acts 4:20) The Christian congregation will continue to declare the Kingdom message boldly until Jehovah says the work is done.

Elders share the obligation to shepherd the flock. However, they must be careful not to divulge information about personal matters to unauthorized persons. There is "a time to keep quiet," when "your words should prove to be few." (Ecclesiastes 3:7; 5:2) Proverbs 10:19 warns: "In the abundance of words there does not fail to be transgression, but the one keeping his lips in check is acting discreetly." Problems are created when elders unwisely reveal matters that should be kept confidential. Elders must give special heed to the counsel: "Do not reveal the confidential talk of another." (Proverbs 25:9) Often the peace, unity, and spiritual well-being of the congregation are at stake. Improper use of the tongue by an elder can result in serious legal problems for the individual, the congregation, and even the Society.

While we as Christians are ready to forgive others who may wrong us, those in the world are not so inclined. Worldly persons are quick to resort to lawsuits if they feel their "rights" have been violated. Some who oppose the Kingdom preaching work readily take advantage of any legal provisions to interfere with it or impede its progress. Thus, elders must especially guard the use of the tongue. Jesus faced opposers who tried to "catch him in speech, so as to turn him over to the government." (Luke 20:20) He instructed us to be "cautious as serpents and yet innocent as doves" in such situations. (Matthew 10:16) Where such a threat exists, our position as elders should be in line with David's words: "I will set a muzzle as a guard to my own mouth, as long as anyone wicked is in front of me."—Psalm 39:1.

In recent years, this matter has come to be a cause for increasing concern. The spirit of the world has sensitized people regarding their legal "rights" and the legal means by which they can exact punishment if such "rights" are violated. Hence, a growing number of vindictive or disgruntled ones, as well as opposers, have initiated lawsuits to inflict financial penalties on the individual, the congregation, or the Society. Many of these lawsuits are the result of the misuse of the tongue. As elders, remember that ill-advised statements or actions on your part can sometimes be interpreted legally as violating others' "rights."

The need for elders to maintain strict confidentiality has been repeatedly stressed. Please see The Watchtower of April 1, 1971, pages 222-4, and September 1, 1987, pages 12-15. The September 1977 Our Kingdom Service, page 6, paragraph 36, and the ks77 text- book, page 65, also provide helpful direction and counsel. That material strongly emphasized the elders' responsibility to avoid revealing confidential information to those not entitled to it.

The legal consequences of a breach of confidentiality by the elders can be substantial. If the elders fail to follow the Society's direction carefully in handling confidential matters, such mistakes could result in successful litigation by those offended. Substantial monetary damages could be assessed against the elders or congregation. In some cases where the authorities are involved, certain complications could lead to a fine or imprisonment. These possibilities underscore the need for elders to be discerning and to follow carefully directions provided by the Society.

I. WHAT TO DO IN SPECIFIC CASES

A. Judicial Committee Matters

Judicial committees must follow carefully the Society's instructions in carrying out their duties. (Note ks77, pages 66-70; ks81, pages 160-70.) Anything submitted in writing to the committee by the alleged wrongdoer or by witnesses should be kept in strict confidence. If it is necessary to continue at a later time a committee hearing, the members of the committee should submit to the chairman any personal notes they have taken. The chairman will keep these notes in a secure place to prevent breaches of confidentiality. The notes may be returned to the individual elders when the hearing resumes. Upon conclusion of the case, the chairman should place only necessary notes and documents, a summary of the case, and the S-77 forms in a sealed envelope for the congregation file. Nothing should be preserved outside of this sealed envelope (including unnecessary personal notes) by any elder on the committee. Obviously, no committee will ever allow judicial proceedings to be tape recorded or allow witnesses testifying before the committee to take notes.

B. Child Abuse

Many states have child abuse reporting laws. When elders receive reports of physical or sexual abuse of a child, they should contact the Society's Legal Department immediately. Victims of such abuse need to be protected from further danger.—See "If the Worst Should Happen," Awake! January 22, 1985, page 8.

C. Search Warrants and Subpoenas

1. A search warrant is a court order authorizing the police to search premises to locate evidence that may be used in a criminal prosecution. No elder should ever consent to the search of a Kingdom Hall or any other place where confidential records are stored. However, armed with a search warrant the police do not need consent and may even use force to accomplish their task. Likely before obtaining a search warrant, the police or other governmental officials will make inquiries regarding confidential records, make request to obtain the records, or indicate that they will seek a search warrant if the elder(s) involved does not cooperate. In any such situation, the Society's Legal Department should be called immediately.

At any time an elder is confronted with a search warrant (whether given advance notice or not), the elder should first ask to read the warrant. After reading it he should ask if he can call for legal guidance and then call the Society's Legal Department. If for some reason the Legal Department cannot be contacted, the elders involved should make every effort to obtain the assistance of a local attorney for the purpose of protecting the confidentiality of the records. It may be impossible to stop determined officers from conducting the search authorized by the warrant. Conscientious elders will want to do all they reasonably and peaceably can to preserve the confidentiality of the congregation in harmony with the principle set out in Acts 5:29.

2. Subpoenas are demands for records or for the appearance of an individual at a trial or deposition to give testimony. Subpoenas may be issued by a court or in some cases by a governmental agency or an attorney. If an elder receives a subpoena, he should contact the Society's Legal Department immediately. Never turn over records, notes, documents, or reveal any confidential matter sought by subpoena without receiving direction from the Legal Department.

D. Crimes and Criminal Investigations

In some cases the elders will form judicial committees to handle alleged wrongdoing that also could constitute a violation of Caesar's criminal laws (e.g., theft, assault, etc.). Generally, a secular investigation into a matter that is a concern to the congregation should not delay conducting a judicial hearing. To avoid entanglement with the secular authorities who may be investigating the same matter, the strictest confidentiality (even of the fact that there is a committee) must be maintained.

If the alleged wrongdoer confesses to the sin (crime), no one else should be present besides the members of the committee. When evidence supports the accusation but genuine repentance is not displayed resulting in a decision to disfellowship, this should be handled in the normal course regarding advice of appeal rights and announcements to the congregation. In cases of serious criminal wrongdoing (e.g., murder, rape, etc.), or where the criminal conduct is widely known in the community, the body of elders should contact the Society before proceeding with the judicial committee process.

E. When Servants and Publishers Move

A considerable number of publishers, including elders and ministerial servants move from one congregation to another. Sometimes the circumstances surrounding their departure are unsettled. Some appointed brothers may be experiencing problems that have brought their qualifications into question. It is not uncommon for a body of elders to hold back in giving counsel, allowing a brother to move without discussing his problem. Thereafter, they decline to recommend his reappointment in his new congregation. Often such a brother protests, requiring extensive correspondence between the bodies of elders. Much personal, and sometimes embarrassing, information must then be passed on. Such mishandling of things greatly increases the potential for serious repercussions. Problems can be avoided by the body of elders assuming its responsibility to inform a brother that he will not be favorably recommended, fully explaining the reasons why. Every effort should be made to resolve any difference before he leaves, eliminating any need for controversy involving his new congregation. The body should assign two elders to meet with him before he moves, letting him know whether they are recommending him to the new congregation.

This would likewise apply to publishers who move at a time when their personal conduct requires investigation by the elders. If serious accusations of wrongdoing have been made against an individual and he moves to another congregation before matters are finalized, usually it is best for the elders in the original congregation to follow through in handling matters, if possible and if distance permits. They are acquainted with the individual and the circumstances surrounding the alleged wrongdoing; this ordinarily puts them in the best position to get the facts and to handle the case. Handling matters in this way will eliminate the need to reveal confidential information unnecessarily about the private lives of individuals.

F. When Lawsuits Are Threatened

If the congregation or the elders (in their capacity as elders) are threatened with a lawsuit, the Society's Legal Department should be contacted immediately. No statements should be made by any member of the body of elders about the merits or validity of an actual or threatened lawsuit without authorization from the Society.

G. Child Custody

Elders may learn that a publisher is facing a dispute over child custody in a divorce proceeding. If the parental rights of such is challenged on the basis of our Christian beliefs, or on the assertion that our beliefs are harmful to a child's best interests, the elders should immediately write to the Society's Legal Department. In a rare emergency, a telephone call may be necessary. The Legal Department will assess the facts and determine the degree of its involvement, if any. Elders have no authority to make any promises about the Society's paying legal fees or handling specific cases. There is no need to contact the Society if there is no indication that the beliefs and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses will be attacked in a child custody dispute.

When you write to the Society's Legal Department about a specific case, please provide the following information:

1. The names of the parents and their attorneys.
2. The number of children involved and their ages.
3. A brief description of the facts, including the presence of any apostates.
4. An assessment of the Christian parent's spiritual condition—Is he or she new in the truth? Active? Inactive? Balanced?
5. The status of the legal proceedings—Has the matter gone to trial? Has the trial date been set? If so, when?

II. POINTS TO REMEMBER

A. Appreciate the Importance of Maintaining Confidentiality

Elders must exercise extraordinary caution when it comes to handling confidential information about the private lives of others. Do not mistakenly minimize the gravity of a breach of confidentiality. Unauthorized disclosure of confidential information can result in costly lawsuits. Even if a lawsuit turns out favorably, valuable time and energy that could have been devoted to Kingdom interests will be lost.

B. Do Not Make Statements to Secular Authorities Until You Receive Legal Advice from the Society

You are not legally required to make immediate responses to secular authorities about matters that could involve the disclosure of confidential information. Voluntarily allowing the Kingdom Hall or confidential records to be searched, where no search warrant is produced, could infringe on the legal rights of the congregation or of others. No statements should be made until you have an understanding of your legal position from the Society's Legal Department.

C. Be Extremely Careful with Written Material

All material related to judicial matters should be kept in a safe place, accessible only to elders. Final reports on the handling of judicial matters should be placed in a sealed envelope in the congregation file. A judicial committee should avoid sending to an individual any kind of correspondence that accuses him of specific wrongdoing. (Note ks77, pages 68-9.) Nothing should be put in writing to any disfellowshipped person to advise him of his status or the reasons for it without specific direction from the Society. The rules and procedures of Jehovah's Witnesses do not require such written disclosures. Anything in writing submitted to a judicial committee should be kept in strict confidence. If a judicial committee disfellowships an individual, he should be informed orally of the action taken and of the right to appeal. If the wrongdoer refuses to attend the hearing, two members of the judicial committee should attempt to contact the individual at his home and inform him orally of the decision. If this is not possible, the two elders may be able to inform him by telephone.

D. Guard the Use of Your Tongue

Think before you speak. Do not discuss private and judicial matters with members of your family, including your wives, or with other members of the congregation. Be extremely careful not to inadvertantly disclose private information when others are present, such as when speaking on the telephone with others listening in or nearby. (Note ks77, page 65.) At times, complicated judicial cases may necessitate consultation with an experienced, mature elder in another congregation or with the circuit overseer. Unless the circuit overseer is the elder consulted, only the pertinent details should be discussed and names should not be used.

Elders bear a heavy responsibility in ministering to the needs of the Christian congregation, and observing confidentiality as they do so. (1 Corinthians 16:13) We trust that the information in this letter will help you carry this burden. Please be assured of our love and prayers, and may Jehovah continue to bless you as you shepherd his flock.—1 Peter 5:1-3.

Your brothers,

Watchtower B.T.S. Society
OF NEW YORK, INC.

P.S. Due to the importance of the information that is presented herein it is suggested that the body of elders jointly read and consider this letter as soon as possible after its receipt in the congregation. Please do not make any copies of this letter, nor should it be read by others. It should be kept in the congregation's confidential files for any future reference that may be required by the body of elders.

Dear Brothers,

We are writing to you regarding a case of child abuse. We telephoned 11/12/93 and it was suggested that we submit in writing our questions.

We met on 11/11/93 with Jonathan Kendrick, a ministerial servant, who confessed to child abuse with his 15 yr old step daughter. The abuse occurred approximately 4 months ago. He confessed to touching the breast of his step daughter while she was sleeping. She was awaken instantly and knew what had happened. His wife was informed that evening and the 3 of them talked it out between them. Brother Kendrick thought since he was sorry and his family was willing to forget the abuse, he would not have to report it to the congregation elders. He said that his conscious continued to bother him.

Evelyn, his wife, is baptized but inactive. She occasionally attends meetings.

Andrea, the step daughter, is not baptized and is no longer an unbaptized publisher. The step daughter is now using this as a tool to threaten with when she wants something. Because she has been promiscuous with 2 boys at school. the parents have tried to enforce house rules covering her comings and goings.

Andrea has recently mentioned the abuse to another young girl, Toy Register, whom she attends school with. Coincidentally, Toy attends our congregation meetings and is studying. Her mother is disfellowshipped. Toy mentioned the abuse to her mother and added that Brother Kendrick on another occasion had accidentally touched her chest but admitted that it was not intentional. Mrs Register is now threatening to call the police.

Here are the facts as best as we can present them without interviewing each party. Our questions are as follows:

1. Can 2 elders handle this matter with Brother Kendrick as mentioned on page 93 of "Pay attention to Yourselves....Flock", under the heading Uncleanness? Or do we have to form a Judicial hearing because of it being child abuse?

2. We assume that Brother Kendrick does not qualify any longer as a Ministerial Servant. We will announce to the congregation that he is no longer serving as such. If this is incorrect, please inform us.

3. The legal department has given us some direction as far as our legal requirements and we will follow that closely.

We will wait to hear from you regarding the above questions. If I have not been clear enough, you may reach me during the day at my work phone (510-462-7861 ext 105)

Your Brothers,

Dear Brothers:

Your letter dated November 15, 1993, has been received. As you will note from the enclosed S-52 form, Brother Jonathan Kendrick has been deleted from serving as a ministerial servant on the grounds of "uncleanness."

Your letter states: "He confessed to touching the breasts of his stepdaughter while she was sleeping. She was awakened instantly and knew what had happened." Since this incident is known by outside members of the family, it is appropriate that Brother Kendrick be deleted from serving as a ministerial servant with your congregation.

On page 92 of the Kingdom Ministry School textbook the following is stated: "Uncleanness includes an intentional momentary touching of sexual parts or caressing of breasts. Such minor uncleanness can be handled at the discretion of an elder or two; it does not require a judicial hearing. There is a need for strong counsel, admonition, and assistance to help the individual to maintain chaste conduct in the future."

In harmony with the above, it will not be necessary for a judicial committee to handle the "uncleanness" committed by Brother Kendrick. However, it would be appropriate for two elders to meet with him and provide him with strong Scriptural counsel so as to avoid a repetition of such a serious offense.

We trust the above comments will be helpful to you. With this letter we are pleased to send you an expression of our warm Christian love and best wishes.

Dear Brothers:

The Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses is pleased to advise that the following brother(s) has been appointed to serve in your congregation. Each one appointed should be sure that he is well acquainted with what the Bible says about his responsibilities in the congregation. In all that he does, he should look to God's Word for guidance and should cooperate closely with the faithful and discreet slave class, through whom the Lord is providing direction for his congregation. Further details as to the assignments to be cared for by each one will be provided by the local body of elders.

Head of the congregation, Jesus Christ,

P.S. To body of elders: If any brother recommended is appointed by the Society, please have two elders speak to him before announcing the appointment. Ask if there is any reason why it should not be announced. If so, do not announce it, but return this form and advise the Society why he is disqualified.

If there is a deletion only, it is not necessary to read the first paragraph. Simply announce the deletion. If an elder is deleted for reasons other than moving to another congregation with a favorable recommendation, he should turn over his Kingdom Ministry School textbook(s) to the Congregation Service Committee.

and to care for all His "belongings," or Kingdom interests on earth. (Matt. 24:45-47; Luke 12: 42-44) Rather than being an individual Christian, the 'faithful slave' today is the remnant, still living on earth, of the composite body of Christ's anointed footstep followers. Such remaining ones are a part of spiritual Israel, the anointed congregation of God. (Gal. 6:16; compare Isaiah 43: 10.) This remnant is faithfully discharging the responsibilities of the "slave" during this time of the end by taking the lead in the preaching of "this good news of the kingdom" throughout all the earth and by providing spiritual food at the proper time for the household of faith.—Matt. 24:14.

USE OF RELIGIOUS CORPORATIONS

During these last days of the present wicked system of things, the "belongings" of the Master have increased abundantly throughout all the earth. This has placed a heavy responsibility on the 'faithful slave.' In discharging its responsibility to provide spiritual food at the proper time and in order to get the good news of the Kingdom preached before the end comes, the remnant on earth, as "the faithful and discreet slave" class, has formed certain agencies, or legal entities. It has proved to be the course of wisdom for the 'faithful slave' to organize certain corporations that are recognized by the laws of various countries. These religious corporations own and operate printing facilities that produce and distribute Bibles and Bible literature on a worldwide basis for use in the Kingdom ministry.

The first in time and the principal corporation used in this way is the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania. This nonprofit religious society was incorporated in 1884, is made Exact statistics are difficult to come by. In the United States, the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect has records of 55,399 cases of children being sexually molested in one year. But these are only cases of incestuous abuse. Abuse by friends, neighbors, teachers, and so forth—as well as by strangers—would increase that figure to a considerable extent. And a spokesman for the Child Welfare League of America told Awake! that "the figures we have are only the tip of the iceberg."

A report in the magazine Ladies Home Journal estimates: "Sexual abuse of young girls is four times more common than rape of adult women. Between the ages of five and 13, one in four little girls falls prey to some form of sexual abuse by adults—whether it be exhibitionism, inappropriate fondling, rape, or incest. Although young females are the most common victims, 20 to 25 percent of those attacked are little boys."

Doctors are convinced of the harmful and long-term effects of such abuse. Hence, parents wonder: 'Are my children at risk? What steps can I take to protect them? What sort of person would try to harm them?'

Child Molesting

'Who Would Do a Thing Like That?'

MOST parents would answer this question wrong. When we think of sexual molestation, most of us probably picture a weird stranger who exposes himself to children or lures them away into a car or to some wooded area. Publicity has also been given to groups that lure children away to exploit them for pornography or child prostitution. Such things do happen, but these people are far from the usual type of child molester. So who are the usual child molesters?

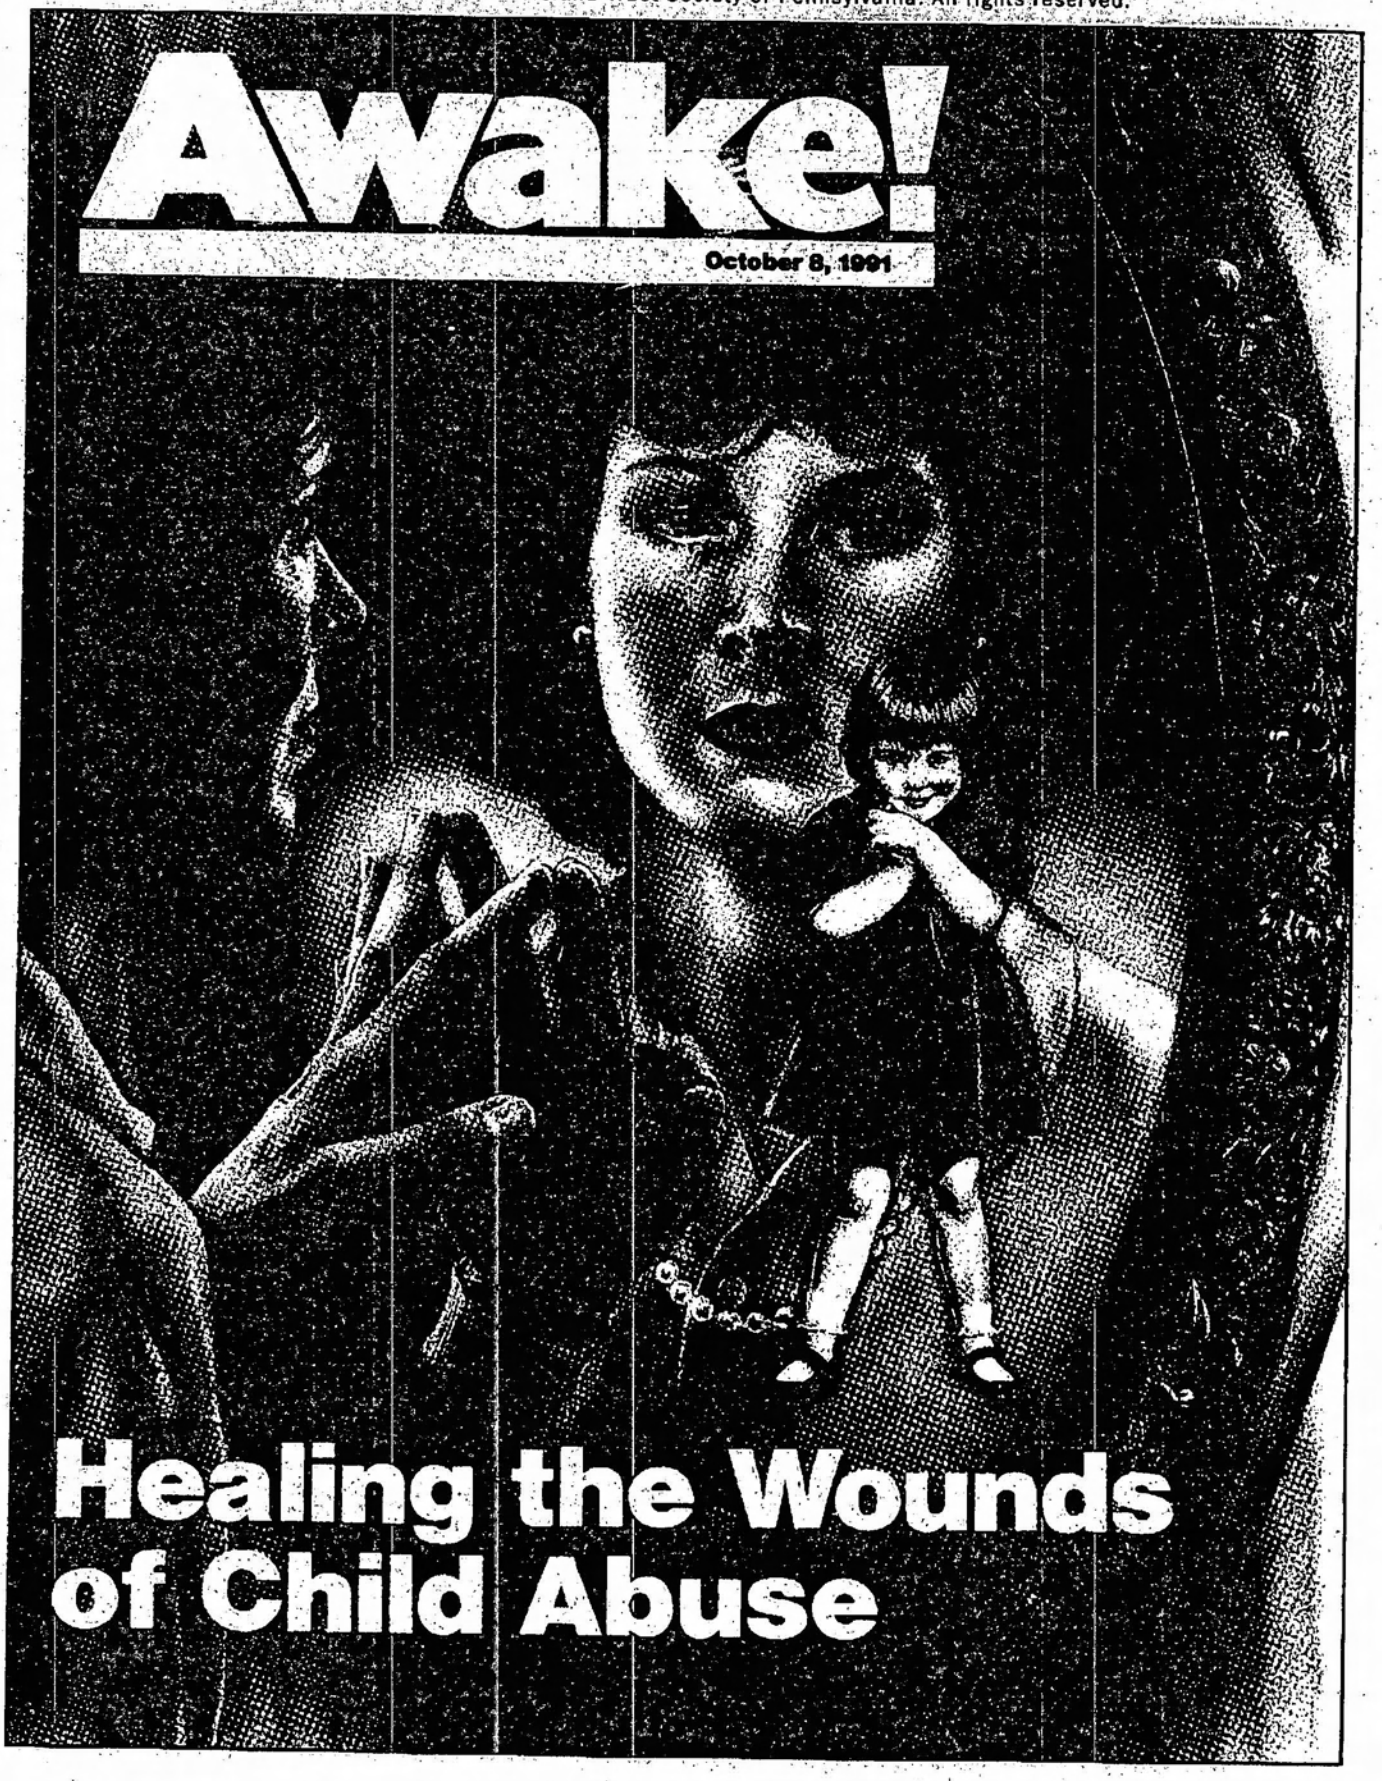
Sue was molested by a man who was running a church group. He ran a youth club, and everybody agreed that he was very pleasant. But he sexually abused Sue and other girls. Another young girl wrote to an advice column to tell that her favorite uncle had taken to pulling her onto his lap and fondling her improperly. One man remembers that as a boy he was habitually abused by the grown son of a close family friend. An 11-year-old boy was molested by the aunt that he lived with. A New York woman reports being molested by her grandfather when she was seven years old. A 15-year-old boy was molested by his doctor during a medical examination. For Pam, it was even worse. For many years, her own father molested her. And Mary was molested by two older brothers and an older first cousin.

In fact, probably less than a third of sexual assaults on children are committed by strangers. Usually the victim knows the assailant. Often the abuser is a relative. Thus, in most cases children are molested by people they know and trust, which makes the problem of protecting them more difficult.

The Molester at Work

Many parents have another misconception. They envision molestation as being violent, with the child fighting and screaming for mercy. This may not be the case at all, at least not in the beginning. At the outset, sexual abuse may be disguised as playful or affectionate contact, and go on from there. The abuser is likely to persuade and pressure the child, using all the built-in authority of an older person. Do you remember what it was like when you were a child and were trained to obey adults even when they told you to do things you did not like, such as go to bed early or eat all your vegetables? Molesters take advantage of this training. One convicted abuser said: "Show me an obedient child, and I'll show you an easy victim."

One child was receiving obscene phone calls. When asked why she had not put the phone down, she said she thought it was rude to do that when someone was still talking! A woman of 30 remembers having been approached at the age of 5 by her grandfather. He said to her: "Good girls do this for Grandpa and never tell their mothers." How many five-year-olds would be able to see through such a deception?



And do you remember how you loved presents and treats as a child? Abusers often use this childish trait to get an abusive relationship started. For example, what would your child do if the school janitor said: "Stay with me for a while in the office after school, and I will give you some money"? or if the baby-sitter said: "I will let you sit up late and watch television, if you do something for me first"?

Sometimes molesters misuse a child's natural love of secrets. Wasn't it exciting, when you were young, to have a secret? One little girl had a secret that she kept from her parents. But one day her parents saw her acting in a precocious, sexual manner. When asked where she had learned such a thing, the little girl said: "It's a secret." Her father explained that sometimes we should not keep a secret, so the little girl revealed her secret. A 40-year-old man with a family of his own, who was a close family relative, had pushed her down and sexually assaulted her.

"She was molested by her minister."

Finally, threats may be involved, subtle threats that strike at a child's sense of security. A grown woman tells of having been abused by her stepfather when she was a child. She says he abused her for four years, starting when she was six. Why did she not tell her mother? "He said that if I ever told anybody about it, the police would come get him and my mother would lose her job. The family would starve and it would all be my fault."

The Innocent Victims of Child Abuse

"I'M NEAR 40 now," says Eilene.* "And even though my problem is over 30 years old, it still haunts me. The anger, the guilt, the problems in my marriage! People try to understand, but they just can't." Eilene's problem? She is a victim of childhood sexual abuse, and for her the effects have proved to be long lasting.

Eilene is far from alone. Surveys indicate that an alarming number of women—and men—have suffered such mistreatment.* Far from being a rare act of deviant behavior, then, childhood sexual abuse is a widespread affliction, one that cuts across all social, economic, religious, and racial lines.

Fortunately, the vast majority of men and women would never even think of mistreating a child in this way. But a dangerous minority have this sick inclination. And contrary to stereotypes, few child abusers are drooling homicidal maniacs who lurk around playgrounds. The majority are persons who have cultivated a convincing veneer of normalcy. They satisfy their perverted lusts by targeting naive, trusting, defenseless children—usually their own daughters.^ Publicly, they may treat them kindly, tenderly. Privately, they subject them to threats, violence, and humiliating, degrading forms of sexual assault.

Admittedly, it is difficult to comprehend that such horrors could take place in so many seemingly respectable homes. Even in Bible times, though, children were used "for the momentary gratification of . . . sensual passion." (The International Critical Commentary; compare Joel 3:3.) The Bible predicted: "But know this, that in the last days critical times hard to deal with will be here. For men will be lovers of themselves . . . having no natural affection . . . without self-control, fierce, without love of goodness." Therefore, it should not surprise us that child abuse is taking place on a large scale today.—2 Timothy 3:1-3, 13.

Childhood molestation may leave no physical scars. And not all adults who were victimized as children are visibly distressed. But as an ancient proverb observed: "Even in laughter the heart may be in pain." (Proverbs 14:13) Yes, many victims have deep emotional scars—secret wounds that fester inside. Why, though, does childhood molestation wreak such havoc in some? Why does not the passage of time alone always heal its wounds? The magnitude of this distressing problem demands that we address it. True, some of what follows may be unpleasant to read—especially so if you have been a victim of childhood abuse. But be assured that there is hope, that you can recover.

* All names have been changed.

* Because definitions of sexual abuse and survey methods vary greatly, accurate statistics are nearly impossible to obtain.

^ Most victims are molested by their biological fathers or their stepfathers. Abuse also takes place at the hands of older siblings, uncles, grandfathers, adult acquaintances, and strangers. Since the vast majority of victims are female, we will generally refer to them in the feminine gender. For the most part, though, the information presented herein applies to both sexes.

The Secret Wounds of Child Abuse

"I just hate myself. I keep thinking there's something I should have done, should have said to stop it. I just feel so dirty."—Ann.

"I feel alienated from people. I often deal with feelings of hopelessness and despair. Sometimes I want to die."—Jill.

"CHILDHOOD sexual abuse is . . . an overwhelming, damaging, and humiliating assault on a child's mind, soul, and body . . . The abuse invades every facet of one's existence." So says The Right to Innocence, by Beverly Engel.

Not all children react to abuse in the same way.* Children have different personalities, coping skills, and emotional resources. Much also depends on the child's relationship to the abuser, the severity of the abuse, how long the abuse lasted, the child's age, and other factors. Furthermore, if the abuse is exposed and a child receives loving adult support, damage can often be minimized. However, many victims suffer deep emotional wounds.

Why It Devastates

The Bible offers insight into why such damage occurs. Ecclesiastes 7:7 observes: "Mere oppression may make a wise one act crazy." If this is true for an adult, imagine the effect of brutal oppression on a small child—particularly if the abuser is a trusted parent. After all, the first few years of life are critical to a child's emotional and spiritual development. (2 Timothy 3:15) It is during those tender years that a youngster begins developing moral boundaries and a sense of personal worth. By bonding to her parents, a child also learns the meaning of love and trust.—Psalm 22:9.

"With abused children," explains Dr. J. Patrick Gannon, "this process of trust building gets derailed." The abuser betrays the child's trust; he robs her of any semblance of safety, privacy, or self-respect and uses her as a mere

* Our discussion focuses on what the Bible calls por-nei'a, or fornication. (1 Corinthians 6:9; compare Leviticus 18:6-22.) This includes all forms of immoral intercourse. Other abusive acts, such as exhibitionism, voyeurism, and exposure to pornography, while not por-nei'a, may also damage a child emotionally.

Awake!

Why Awake! Is Published Awake! is for the enlightenment of the entire family. It shows how to cope with today's problems. It reports the news, tells about people in many lands, examines religion and science. But it does more. It probes beneath the surface and points to the real meaning behind current events, yet it always stays politically neutral and does not exalt one race above another. Most important, this magazine builds confidence in the Creator's promise of a peaceful and secure new world before the generation that saw the events of 1914 passes away.

object for his own self-gratification.* Small children do not understand the significance of the immoral acts being forced upon them, but almost universally they find the experience upsetting, frightening, humiliating.

Childhood abuse has thus been called "the ultimate betrayal." We are reminded of Jesus' question: "Who is the man among you whom his son asks for bread—he will not hand him a stone, will he?" (Matthew 7:9) But the abuser gives a child, not love and affection, but the cruelest "stone" of all—sexual assault.

Why the Wounds Persist

Proverbs 22:6 says: "Train up a boy according to the way for him; even when he grows old he will not turn aside from it." Clearly, parental influence can last a lifetime. What, though, if a child is trained to believe that she is powerless to prevent sexual intrusion? Trained to perform perversions in exchange for "love"? Trained to view herself as worthless and dirty? Could not that lead to a lifetime of destructive behavior? Not that childhood abuse excuses later inappropriate adult conduct, but it can help explain why abuse victims may tend to act or feel a certain way.

Many abuse victims suffer an array of symptoms, including depression. Some also seethe with persistent and at times overwhelming feelings of guilt, shame, and rage. Other victims may suffer emotional shutdown, an inability to express or even feel emotion. Low self-esteem and feelings of powerlessness also afflict many. Sally, who was abused by her uncle, recalls: "Each time he molested me I felt powerless and frozen, numb, stiff, confused. Why was this happening?" Reports psychologist Cynthia Tower: "Studies show that often people who were abused as children will carry through life a perception of themselves as a victim." They may marry an abusive man, project an air of vulnerability, or feel powerless to defend themselves when threatened.

Normally, children have 12 years or so to prepare for the emotions that awaken during puberty. But when lewd acts are forced upon a young child, she may be overwhelmed by the feelings aroused. As one study showed, this may later impede her ability to enjoy marital intimacies. Confesses a victim named Linda: "I find the sexual side of marriage to be the hardest thing in my life. I get the most dreadful sensation that it is my father there, and I get panicky." Other victims may react in just the opposite way and develop compulsive immoral desires. "I led a promiscuous life and would end up having sexual relations with complete strangers," admits Jill.

Abuse victims may also have difficulty in maintaining healthy relationships. Some simply cannot relate to men or to authority figures. Some will sabotage friendships and marriages by becoming abusive or controlling. Yet others tend to avoid close relationships entirely.

There are even victims who turn their destructive feelings on themselves. "I hated my body because it had responded to the stimulation of the abuse," admits Reba. Tragically, eating disorders,* workaholism, alcohol and drug abuse, are common among abuse victims—desperate attempts to bury their feelings. Some may also act out their self-hatred in more direct ways. "I have cut myself, dug my fingernails into my arms, burned myself," adds Reba. "I felt I deserved to be abused."

Do not jump to the conclusion, however, that anyone who feels or acts in such ways has necessarily been abused sexually. Other physical or emotional factors may be involved. For example, experts say that similar symptoms are common among adults raised in dysfunctional families—where their parents battered them, belittled and humiliated them, ignored their physical needs, or where the parents were drug or alcohol addicts.

Spiritual Damage

The most insidious effect of all that childhood abuse can wreak is the potential spiritual damage. Molestation is a "defilement of flesh and spirit." (2 Corinthians 7:1) By performing perverted acts on a child, by violating her physical and moral boundaries, by betraying her trust, an abuser contaminates a child's spirit, or dominant mental inclination. This can later impede the victim's moral and spiritual growth.

The book Facing Codependence, by Pia Mellody, further notes: "Any serious abuse . . . is also spiritual abuse, because it taints the child's trust of a Higher Power." For example, a Christian woman named Ellen asks: "How can I think of Jehovah as a Father when I have this concept of a cruel, raging man for an earthly father?" Says another victim, named Terry: "I never related to Jehovah as a Father. As God, Lord, Sovereign, Creator, yes! But as Father, no!"

Such individuals are not necessarily spiritually weak or lacking in faith. On the contrary, their persistent efforts to follow Bible principles give evidence of spiritual strength! But imagine how some might feel when they read a Bible text such as Psalm 103:13, which says: "As a father shows mercy to his sons, Jehovah has shown mercy to those fearing him." Some may grasp this intellectually. Yet, without a healthy concept of what a father is, it may be hard for them to respond to this text emotionally!

Some may also find it difficult to be "like a young child" before God—vulnerable, humble, trusting. They may hold back their true feelings from God when praying. (Mark 10:15) They may hesitate to apply to themselves the words of David at Psalm 62:7, 8: "Upon God are my salvation and my glory. My strong rock, my refuge is in God. Trust in him at all times, O people. Before him pour out your heart. God is a refuge for us." Feelings of guilt and unworthiness may even undermine their faith. One victim said: "I believe in Jehovah's Kingdom very much. However, I don't really feel I'm good enough to be there."

Of course, not all victims are affected the same way. Some have been drawn to Jehovah as a loving Father and feel no obstacle at all in relating to him. Whatever the case, if you are a victim of childhood sexual abuse, you may find it of great value to discern how it has affected your life. Some may be content to let matters rest. However, if it appears to you that the damage is significant, take heart. Your wounds can be healed.

"A Time to Heal"

Ann was everyone's shoulder to cry on; a rescuer of anyone with a problem. Poised and impeccable in appearance, she gave not even a hint of having secret emotional wounds, until one day she began to remember. "I was at work," recalls Ann, "and I started getting pains and intense feelings of shame. I could hardly stand up! For days I suffered. Then a memory came back of my stepfather molesting me—really, it was rape. And it was not the only time."

THERE is "a time to heal." (Ecclesiastes 3:3) And for many victims of childhood abuse—like Ann—the emergence of long-buried memories is an important part of the healing process.

How, though, could anyone forget something as traumatic as sexual assault? Consider how helpless a child is against the advances of a father or of some other powerful adult. She cannot run. She dare not scream. And she dare not tell—anyone! Yet, she may have to face her abuser every day and act as if nothing happened. Maintaining such a pretense would be difficult for an adult; it is nearly impossible for a child. So she uses the tremendous imagination with which children are endowed and escapes mentally! She pretends the abuse didn't happen, blanking it out or numbing her senses to it.

Actually, from time to time, all of us block out things we don't want to see or hear. (Compare Jeremiah 5:21.) But abuse victims use this ability as a tool of survival. Some victims report: "I pretended it was happening to someone else and I was just a spectator." "I pretended I was asleep." "I did my math problems in my head."—Strong at the Broken Places, by Linda T. Sanford.

Not surprisingly, then, the book Surviving Child Sexual Abuse claims: "It is estimated that up to 50 per cent of survivors of child sexual abuse are not aware of these experiences." Some, though, may recall the abuse itself but block out the feelings connected with it—the pain, the rage, the shame.

Repression—Tug-of-War in the Mind

Is it not best, then, that these things stay buried—that victims simply forget about them? Some may well choose to do so. Others simply cannot. It is as Job 9:27, 28 says: "If I smile and try to forget my pain, all my suffering comes back to haunt me." (Today's English Version) The repression of frightening memories is an exhausting mental effort, a ferocious game of tug-of-war that may even have serious health consequences.

As a victim gets older, the pressures of life often weaken her ability to repress the past. A whiff of cologne, a familiar-looking face, a startling sound, or even an examination by a doctor or a dentist may trigger a frightening onslaught of memories and feelings.* Should she not simply try harder to forget? At this point many victims find relief in trying to remember! Says a woman named Jill: 'Once the memories are brought out, they lose their power. To keep them in is more painful and dangerous than to dispose of them.'

*Some memories begin their emergence in the form of psychosomatic pains; others are in the form of hallucinations that may be mistaken for demonic activity—intruder sounds, such as doors opening; shadowy figures that move by doorways and windows; the feeling of an invisible presence in bed. Such distress generally ceases when the memories fully emerge.

The Value of Acknowledging

Why so? For one thing, remembering allows a victim to grieve. Grief is a natural reaction to trauma; it helps us to put distressing events behind us. (Ecclesiastes 3:4; 7:1-3) An abuse victim, though, has been denied her grief, forced to deny her horrifying experience, made to bottle up her pain. Such repression may result in what doctors call posttraumatic stress disorder—a numbed state virtually devoid of emotion.—Compare Psalm 143:3, 4.

As memories begin to return, the victim may virtually relive the abuse. Some victims even temporarily regress to a childlike state. "When a flashback is in progress," recalls Jill, "I often have physical symptoms. Sometimes the memories are so oppressive, I feel I am being driven to madness." Long-suppressed childhood rage may now come tumbling forth. "Remembering plunges me into depression and anger," says Sheila. But under these unique circumstances, anger is appropriate. You are grieving, expressing pent-up righteous rage! You have a right to hate the wicked acts perpetrated against you.—Romans 12:9.

Says one abuse victim: "When I was able to really remember, I had a great sense of relief . . . At least now I knew what I was dealing with. As difficult as it was on me to remember, it did give me back a part of my life that had become scary because it was so unknown and mysterious."—The Right to Innocence.

Remembering may also help a victim to get to the root of some of her problems. "I always knew I had deep self-hatred and anger but didn't know why," says one victim of incest. Remembering helps many to realize that what happened was not their fault, that they were victimized.

Of course, not all remember their abuse as dramatically or as vividly as others. And most counselors agree that it is not necessary to recall every detail of one's abuse in order to heal from its effects. Simply acknowledging that abuse occurred can be a big step toward recovery.—See box on page 9.

Facing the past and putting it together again can be one step toward healing

Getting Support

If you are a victim of childhood sexual abuse, do not ride out the storm of returning memories by yourself. It helps to talk out your feelings. (Compare Job 10:1; 32:20.) Some who are extremely distressed may decide to seek the help of a qualified physician, counselor, or mental-health professional. In any case, a trusted friend, a marriage mate, family members, or Christian overseers who will listen with empathy and respect can also be valuable allies.* "My biggest help has been my best friend, Julie," says Janet. "She's allowed me to talk over and over again about a memory. She allows me to feel the emotions that result. She listens and responds with understanding."

Trust is a risky business, and you may feel unworthy of receiving someone's help—or be too ashamed to talk about your abuse. But a true friend is "born for when there is distress" and may very well rise to the occasion if you give him or her a chance. (Proverbs 17:17) Be selective, though, about whom you confide in. Learn to reveal your concerns gradually. If a friend proves to be sympathetic and discreet, then you might try disclosing more.

It also helps to take good care of yourself physically. Get sufficient rest. Exercise moderately. Maintain a healthy diet. If possible, simplify your life. Feel free to weep. The pain may seem never ending, but in time it will subside. Remember: You lived through the abuse as a helpless child—and survived! As an adult, you have resources and strengths you didn't have back then. (Compare 1 Corinthians 13:11.) So face your painful memories and put them to rest. Rely on God for strength. Said the psalmist: "However great the anxiety of my heart, your consolations soothe me."—Psalm 94:19, The New Jerusalem Bible.

Ways to Recover

- ☐ Remembering and acknowledging the abuse
- ☐ Grieving over the abuse
- ☐ Talking out one's feelings with a supportive listener
- ☐ Overcoming feelings of guilt and shame
- ☐ Coming to terms with one's parents
- ☐ Applying Bible principles to change destructive behavior
- ☐ Healing unhealthy sexual feelings
- ☐ Developing healthy personal and moral boundaries
- ☐ Developing a close relationship with God and fellow Christians

Getting Rid of the Guilt and Shame

Ending self-blame is another important task of recovery. "Even now it's hard for me to think I was innocent," says a victim named Reba. "I wonder, why didn't I stop him?"

Bear in mind, though, that abusers employ the most diabolic means of coercion: authority ('I'm your father!'), threats ('I'll kill you if you tell!'), brute physical force and even guilt ('If you tell, Daddy will go to jail.'). Conversely, some use gentle persuasion or gifts and favors. Some misrepresent sexual activities as a game or as parental affection. "He said that this is what people do when they love each other," recalls one victim. How could a little child resist such emotional blackmail and trickery? (Compare Ephesians 4:14.) Yes, the abuser coldly exploits the fact that children are helpless, vulnerable, "babes as to badness."—1 Corinthians 14:20.

Perhaps, then, you need to remind yourself just how vulnerable and helpless you were as a child. You might try spending time with some small children or looking at childhood pictures of yourself. Supportive friends can also help by constantly reminding you that the abuse was not your fault.

Still, one woman says: "I get sick when I remember the feelings my father aroused in me." Some victims (58 percent in one study) recall experiencing arousal during the molestation. Understandably, this causes them much shame. The book Surviving Child Sexual Abuse reminds us, however, that "physical arousal [is] simply the body's automatic [response] to being touched or stimulated in certain ways" and that a child has "no control over this arousal." The abuser alone thus bears full responsibility for what transpired. IT WAS NOT YOUR FAULT!

Take comfort, too, in knowing that God views you as "blameless and innocent" in the matter. (Philippians 2:15) In time any urge to engage in self-destructive behavior may diminish, and you can learn to cherish your own flesh.—Compare Ephesians 5:29.

Coming to Terms With Your Parents

This may prove to be one of the most difficult tasks of recovery. Some continue to be filled with anger, fantasies of revenge—or guilt. One abuse victim said: "I am depressed because I think Jehovah expects me to forgive my molester, and I can't." On the other hand, you may live in morbid fear of your abuser. Or you may have hostile feelings toward your mother if she closed her eyes to the abuse or reacted with denial or anger when abuse was revealed. "My mother told me that I'd have to make allowances for [my father]," recalls one woman bitterly.

It is only natural to feel angry when one has suffered abuse. Nevertheless, the ties that bind families can be strong, and you may not want to cut off all contact with your parents. You may even be willing to consider a reconciliation. Much, though, would depend on the circumstances. Victims are sometimes inclined to forgive their parents outright—not excusing the abuse, but refusing to be consumed with resentment or controlled by fear. Preferring to avoid an emotional confrontation, some are content to 'have their say in their heart' and let matters rest.—Psalm 4:4.

You may come to feel, however, that matters can be resolved only by confronting your parents with the abuse—in person, by phone, or by letter. (Compare Matthew 18:15.) If so,

Releasing the Past

Memories are usually released over a period of weeks, months, or years, each emerging memory bringing on a temporary crisis. The Right to Innocence says that at times "you may feel like you are backsliding. You aren't. You are getting better. In actuality, you have gained the strength necessary to face deeper, even more painful feelings and awarenesses." With good reason, though, recovering may temporarily become a person's all-consuming concern. —Proverbs 18:14.

Some victims find it beneficial to read or hear the expressions of other victims. Looking at family photos and childhood memorabilia, visiting childhood sites, and talking to supportive friends and family members may also stir up memories. Particularly effective are writing exercises. Some victims record all they remember of their trauma in a journal. Others pour out their feelings in a letter to their abuser—one that is not sent—which often triggers further memories. Prayer too is a powerful tool of recovery. Like the psalmist you can pray: "Examine me, and know my disquieting thoughts, and see whether there is in me any painful way, and lead me in the way of time indefinite."—Psalm 139:23, 24.

be sure you have recovered sufficiently—or at least have enough support—to withstand the emotional storm that might erupt. Since little will be accomplished by a shouting match, try to be firm but calm. (Proverbs 29:11) You might proceed by stating (1) what took place, (2) how it has affected you, and (3) what you expect from them now (such as apologies, payment for doctor bills, or changes in conduct). At the very least, bringing matters out in the open may help dispel any lingering feelings that you are powerless. And it just might pave the way for a new relationship with your parents.

For example, your father might acknowledge the abuse, expressing deep remorse. He may also have made sincere efforts to change, perhaps by getting treatment for alcohol addiction or by pursuing a study of the Bible. Your mother may likewise beg your forgiveness for her having failed to protect you. Sometimes a full reconciliation may result. However, do not be surprised if you still feel ambivalent about your parents and prefer not to rush into a close relationship with them. At the very least, though, you may be able to resume reasonable family dealings.

On the other hand, the confrontation may trigger a torrent of denial and verbal abuse from the molester and other family members. Worse, you may discover that he is still a threat to you. Forgiveness may then be inappropriate, a close relationship impossible.—Compare Psalm 139:21.

In any event, it may take considerable time before your hurt feelings subside. You may need to remind yourself repeatedly that final justice belongs to God. (Romans 12:19) Talking things over with a supportive listener or even expressing your feelings in writing may likewise help you work out your anger. With God's help you can work through your anger. With the passage of time, hurtful feelings will no longer dominate your thinking.—Compare Psalm 119:133.

A Spiritual Recovery

Space does not permit us to discuss all the emotional, behavioral, and spiritual issues involved. Suffice it to say that you can do much to facilitate your recovery by "making your mind over" with the help of God's Word. (Romans 12:2) 'Stretch forward to the things ahead,' filling your life with spiritual thoughts and activity.—Philippians 3:13; 4:8, 9.

For example, many abuse victims find much comfort simply by reading through the Psalms. Even greater benefits come, though, by diligently applying Bible principles. In time marital stress can ease. (Ephesians 5:21-33) Destructive behavior can cease. (1 Corinthians 6:9-11) Unhealthy sexual feelings can heal. (Proverbs 5:15-20; 1 Corinthians 7:1-5) You can also learn balance in your personal relationships and build solid moral boundaries.—Philippians 2:4; 1 Thessalonians 4:11.

Make no mistake: Recovery requires real determination and supreme effort! Psalm 126:5, though, assures us: "Those sowing seed with tears will reap even with a joyful cry." Remember, too, that the true God, Jehovah, is interested in your welfare. He is "near to those that are broken at heart; and those who are crushed in spirit he saves." (Psalm 34:18) Says one abuse victim: "When I finally realized that Jehovah was aware of every feeling I had and that he cared—really cared—then I finally felt peace inside."

Our loving God, Jehovah, offers even more than peace of mind. He promises a new world of righteousness, where he will wipe out every memory of childhood pain. (Revelation 21:3, 4; see also Isaiah 65:17.) This hope can sustain and strengthen you as you travel the road toward full recovery.

second largest candy season in the United States after Christmas. One company produces more than a hundred types of Easter rabbits.

According to The Detroit News, Jack Santino, professor of folklore and popular culture at Bowling Green State University in Ohio, admitted that the secularization of Easter 'is "typical" of today's consumer-oriented society.' The newspaper added that the Easter "bunny—not the resurrection—has become the focus of Easter."

Just Another Holiday

In the Northern Hemisphere, Easter heralds the beginning of spring and is generally accompanied by a week's vacation from schools and colleges. So where possible, many young people flock to warm-weather resorts for wild beach-parties. Others view the Easter season simply as the end of the ski season—their last chance to enjoy the slopes.

Emblems of Easter have become symbols of fun and games

In Norway, where almost 88 percent of the population belongs to the Lutheran Evangelical state church, only about 14 percent of those surveyed in a recent study said that they would consider going to church on Easter. About 75 percent admitted that they no longer view Easter as a religious holiday. They said they would rather go skiing.

For many, some of the important emblems of Easter have become symbols of fun and games. The egg, for example, is probably the most popular symbol of Easter in many countries. The symbolism of the egg is very religious. Supposedly, the resurrection of Jesus Christ is represented by the new life that emerges from a seemingly lifeless egg. Hence, the custom of decorating eggs with attractive colors and designs is an important feature of the Easter celebration.

But for some, the main value of the Easter egg is to entertain children. In one town the traditional Easter egg hunt at the local church ends up in an egg fight! "For children," notes Robert J. Myers in his book Celebrations, "Easter means fun, surprises, and probably enough candy and sweets to last until Halloween!"

In theory, Easter continues to hold the highest position among Christendom's religious holidays. In practice, however, it seems that more and more people regard it as of little significance, as just another holiday. What about you? What does Easter mean to you? Before you answer this question, however, should you not first ask: 'What does Easter mean to God? Is the celebration pleasing to him? Are Christians really required to celebrate Easter?'

Awake!

Why Awake! Is Published Awake! is for the enlightenment of the entire family. It shows how to cope with today's problems. It reports the news, tells about people in many lands, examines religion and science. But it does more. It probes beneath the surface and points to the real meaning behind current events, yet it always stays politically neutral and does not exalt one race above another. Most important, this magazine builds confidence in the Creator's promise of a peaceful and secure new world before the generation that saw the events of 1914 passes away.

What Does Easter Mean to God?

EASTER—the "queen of festivals!" festum festorum!—is said to celebrate the resurrection of Christ. But what did Jesus have to say about commemorating his resurrection? Did the apostles command us to celebrate it? Is the celebration of Easter a God-given command or a man-made tradition? You can easily find answers to these questions by examining two sources of information—history and the Bible.

History Speaks

First, what does history have to say? Writing in the fifth century C.E., historian Socrates Scholasticus stated in his Ecclesiastical History: "It seems to me that the feast of Easter has been introduced into the church from some old usage, just as many other customs have been established."

The book Curiosities of Popular Customs explains that it was the policy of the "Church to give a Christian significance to such of the extant pagan ceremonies as could not be rooted out. In the case of Easter the conversion was peculiarly easy. Joy at the rising of the natural sun, and at the awakening of nature from the death of winter, became joy at the rising of the Sun of righteousness, at the resurrection of Christ from the grave. Some of the pagan observances which took place about the 1st of May were also shifted to correspond with the celebration of Easter. Many new features were added."

In his book Celebrations, Robert J. Myers agrees, stating that "many of the pagan rebirth rites, celebrated at the vernal equinox, became part of the feast." These statements are supported by The New Encyclopædia Britannica, which says: "As at Christmas, so also at Easter, popular customs reflect many ancient pagan survivals—in this instance, connected with spring fertility rites, such as the symbols of the Easter egg and the Easter hare or rabbit."

Of Pagan Origin?

Evidently, then, Easter as it is celebrated today is saturated with pagan rites and customs. This is not to say, however, that the celebration of Easter has no relationship to some Biblical events.

"I WEPT FOR JOY"

Readers Express Deep Appreciation for "Healing the Wounds of Child Abuse"

A RECENT series of articles in the Awake! magazine moved many readers from all over the world to express their heartfelt appreciation for the cover series "Healing the Wounds of Child Abuse" in the October 8th, 1991, Awake! Their responses have shown that this carefully prepared material accomplished its purpose, which was threefold: (1) to provide understanding and hope for the victims; (2) to warn parents so they can be vigilant about the safety of their children; (3) to help elders who assist abuse victims to be better informed so that they can give more effective assistance. —Proverbs 21:13; compare 27:23.

A theme that was repeated by many readers was typified by this comment: "I have always appreciated being one of Jehovah's Witnesses. However, my appreciation and love for Jehovah and his 'faithful and discreet slave' (Matthew 24:45-47) have been increased a hundredfold after reading the October 8, 1991, issue of Awake!"

"Jehovah Really Understands and Cares Deeply"

A large number expressed gratitude for a most important aspect of the articles: that God listens, cares, knows that the victim was not at fault, and can provide healing. A reader states: "Thanks from the bottom of my heart for the October 8th Awake! Your articles helped me by showing me that Jehovah really understands and cares deeply."—Britain.

A woman writes: "Some months ago I wanted to ask you to write about the matter of healing the wounds of child abuse. I did not write but instead prayed to Jehovah about it. You can imagine, then, why I was so delighted when I saw the cover of the October 8th issue. I broke into tears, and thanked our loving God, Jehovah, from the bottom of my heart."—Greece.

Another says: "When I think about what I had to go through, I cry bitterly. That is why I have read with particular attention the series about 'Healing the Wounds of Child Abuse,' which I have found to be extremely useful. They show clearly that you have loving interest in ones who have had to suffer such things in their lives."—Italy.

Many expressed this thought: "I thank Jehovah for providing this information, the best articles I have ever read on the topic. I pray this will help not only the victims (survivors) but also those who have had this morbid fear of addressing the issue and found it difficult to talk about the subject."—United States.

"I Feel Life Is Worthwhile Now"

A woman whose daughter was abused had not yet come to terms with the problem of that abuse. "But your articles put me on the right track," she explained. "I've been having therapy weekly for 11 months for anxiety, panic attacks, and depression. Those articles did more for me than all the therapy in the world! I feel life is worthwhile now, whereas before reading the issue, I still felt guilty for something I could not prevent." —Britain.

Many said that the information was a turning point in their lives: "I can't begin to thank you enough for the articles. They came when I was at about the lowest point I can ever remember. Some days I would curl up in a ball and sob. Thanks to these articles, which I have read and reread, I can see that my pain, and everyone's pain, is important to Jehovah and his organization. This information has given me the will to begin healing. I already feel closer to Jehovah again."—United States.

But child abuse is not only a Western problem, as this sample shows: "When I received the October 8th issue on child abuse, I immediately read it. It took considerable time for me to read the articles because of having difficulty seeing the words through my tears! My feelings and thoughts were right there in the articles. Now I feel happy that somebody understands. I was encouraged to see how Jehovah kindly helps people whose suffering is unseen by others. I am truly grateful that you published these articles. To heal my wounds, I will go on applying what is written in the articles. With love and feelings of gratitude beyond words."—Japan.

Another writes: "I have been contending with the wounds of child abuse all my life. When I got the October 8th magazine, I reasoned that Jehovah knows what we need even before we do and that he really loves us. I could hardly see for the flood of tears, and my heart felt as though it were about to burst for love and appreciation for our loving heavenly Father. This October 8th issue is a magazine that I will treasure 'till the former things will not be called to mind, neither will they come up into the heart.'" (Isaiah 65:17)—United States.

"I Have Been Let Out of Prison!"

A woman deeply troubled much of her life writes: "Thank you for the articles on child abuse. At last, at 53 years of age, I have been let out of prison! The unlocking key for me was the sentence that shows that these young victims 'are powerless to defend themselves when threatened, so God does not hold them responsible.'" Reading the October 8th Awake! and understanding that as the magazine stated, "IT WAS NOT YOUR FAULT!" helped her to apply Jesus' ransom sacrifice in beginning her healing process.—Britain.

Another woman says: "From the time I was small until my early years in elementary school, I was sexually molested repeatedly. As mentioned in the articles, I escaped mentally. However, the memories kept coming back. I have always thought: 'I am a dirty person. Jehovah would never accept me.' So my prayer to God has always been: 'You may not give me a place in Paradise, but at least please let me stay within your organization until I die.' This is because of thinking, like those victims mentioned in the articles, that 'I'm not really clean enough to be in God's Kingdom' and that my death would be at Armageddon. It was as if feelings of shame and wretchedness were crushing me to death. Thus, the contents of the articles, which were very warm and gentle, helped me a great deal. As I read them, my tears flowed."—Japan.

Another says: "I want to thank you for your sensitive and well-researched articles. For years, the trauma of abuse had fragmented my inner self. It is easy for many to understand the abuse and torture of war and political turmoil. We understand Holocaust survivors. Evil perpetrated by strangers is easier to digest. Yet why do some not comprehend it when the perpetrators are our own fathers, mothers, uncles, sisters, brothers —those who were to comfort, nurture, and protect us? I have seen my own scars and have known the shattering reality of hopelessness. In my healing it has been my spiritual Father, Jehovah, who has time and time again picked up my shattered self, keeping me from annihilation."—United States.

"I've Suddenly Come to Life!"

A woman who says that for 28 long years she felt as if she had been discarded wrote: "I read straight through the articles the evening I received the issue and shed tears because I was so moved and grateful. I am so happy to think that Jehovah so clearly understands my feelings. I feel as if I've suddenly come to life! Because the articles stress that children in that position bear no responsibility for what happens, I realize that I have no reason at all to reproach myself. My mind has truly been put to rest." Her heart was moved to respond to healing from God's Word.—Japan.

Child rape is also a problem in developing countries, as is evident by this similar response from Africa: "The articles came at a time when I needed them most. What a relief to read statements such as, 'be assured that there is hope, that you can recover' and, 'IT WAS NOT YOUR FAULT!' As I read the articles, I felt really safe and comforted for the first time in my life. They brought real consolation to my mind, soul, and body. Now I will have the strength to travel the road toward full recovery."—Nigeria.

Another writes: "Words cannot express my appreciation and how I felt after reading the October 8th Awake! on child abuse. Tears filled my eyes as I read every paragraph, every page, every scripture. It was written with much thought, tenderness, and love. As a victim, I have been struggling with my feelings and emotions. Now I feel that a measure of the burden of grief has been lifted. Thanks to your articles and to a trusted, patient friend who listens and gives me support, I can let the healing begin." The God of all undeserved kindness, through the priestly service of his Son, is making many such victims "firm" and "strong." (1 Peter 5:6-11)—United States.

One incest victim was so distraught that she tried to kill herself by setting a garage on fire while she was in there. She was rescued and hospitalized. As soon as the October 8th issue came out, it was brought to her. She cried hard when she read it, and then went over the articles again and again for support, helping her to overcome suicidal tendencies. A friend of hers who helped her a great deal wrote: "Sometimes I think Awake! should be renamed Cope because that's sure what it's helping us to do."—United States.

"Some Can Forget, Others Cannot"

Another appreciative reader has this to say: "The articles on child abuse are so balanced. I appreciate the scriptures used. These articles are so well written that I could commend you on it paragraph by paragraph. I am grateful that you showed that though some can forget, others cannot. I have been having flashbacks for three years and the physical pains that go with each memory. But it does get better by learning to deal with the flashbacks. Thank you again for such a wonderfully balanced series." (United States) These Scriptural articles have helped this victim, and many others, once again to rejoice in Jehovah's spiritual provisions.—Philippians 4:4-9.

"I have been a reader of Awake! magazine for years," writes one woman. "However, I have never been more touched by an article than by the magazine series entitled 'Healing the Wounds of Child Abuse.' The subject is a difficult one, but you handled it with tact and loving-kindness. Having been an abused child myself, it helped and comforted me immensely. I will save this magazine so that I can read it over often. I really cannot thank you enough for the time, effort, insight, and most of all the love you've shown for those who suffer in a quiet way."—United States.

Facing Reality

It has proved very helpful to victims who cannot forget the crimes committed against them to be allowed to talk with a sympathetic elder, face the problem realistically, see how Jehovah views the matter, and deal with it Scripturally so that healing in the power of Jesus' ransom can take place. In this regard, a woman states:

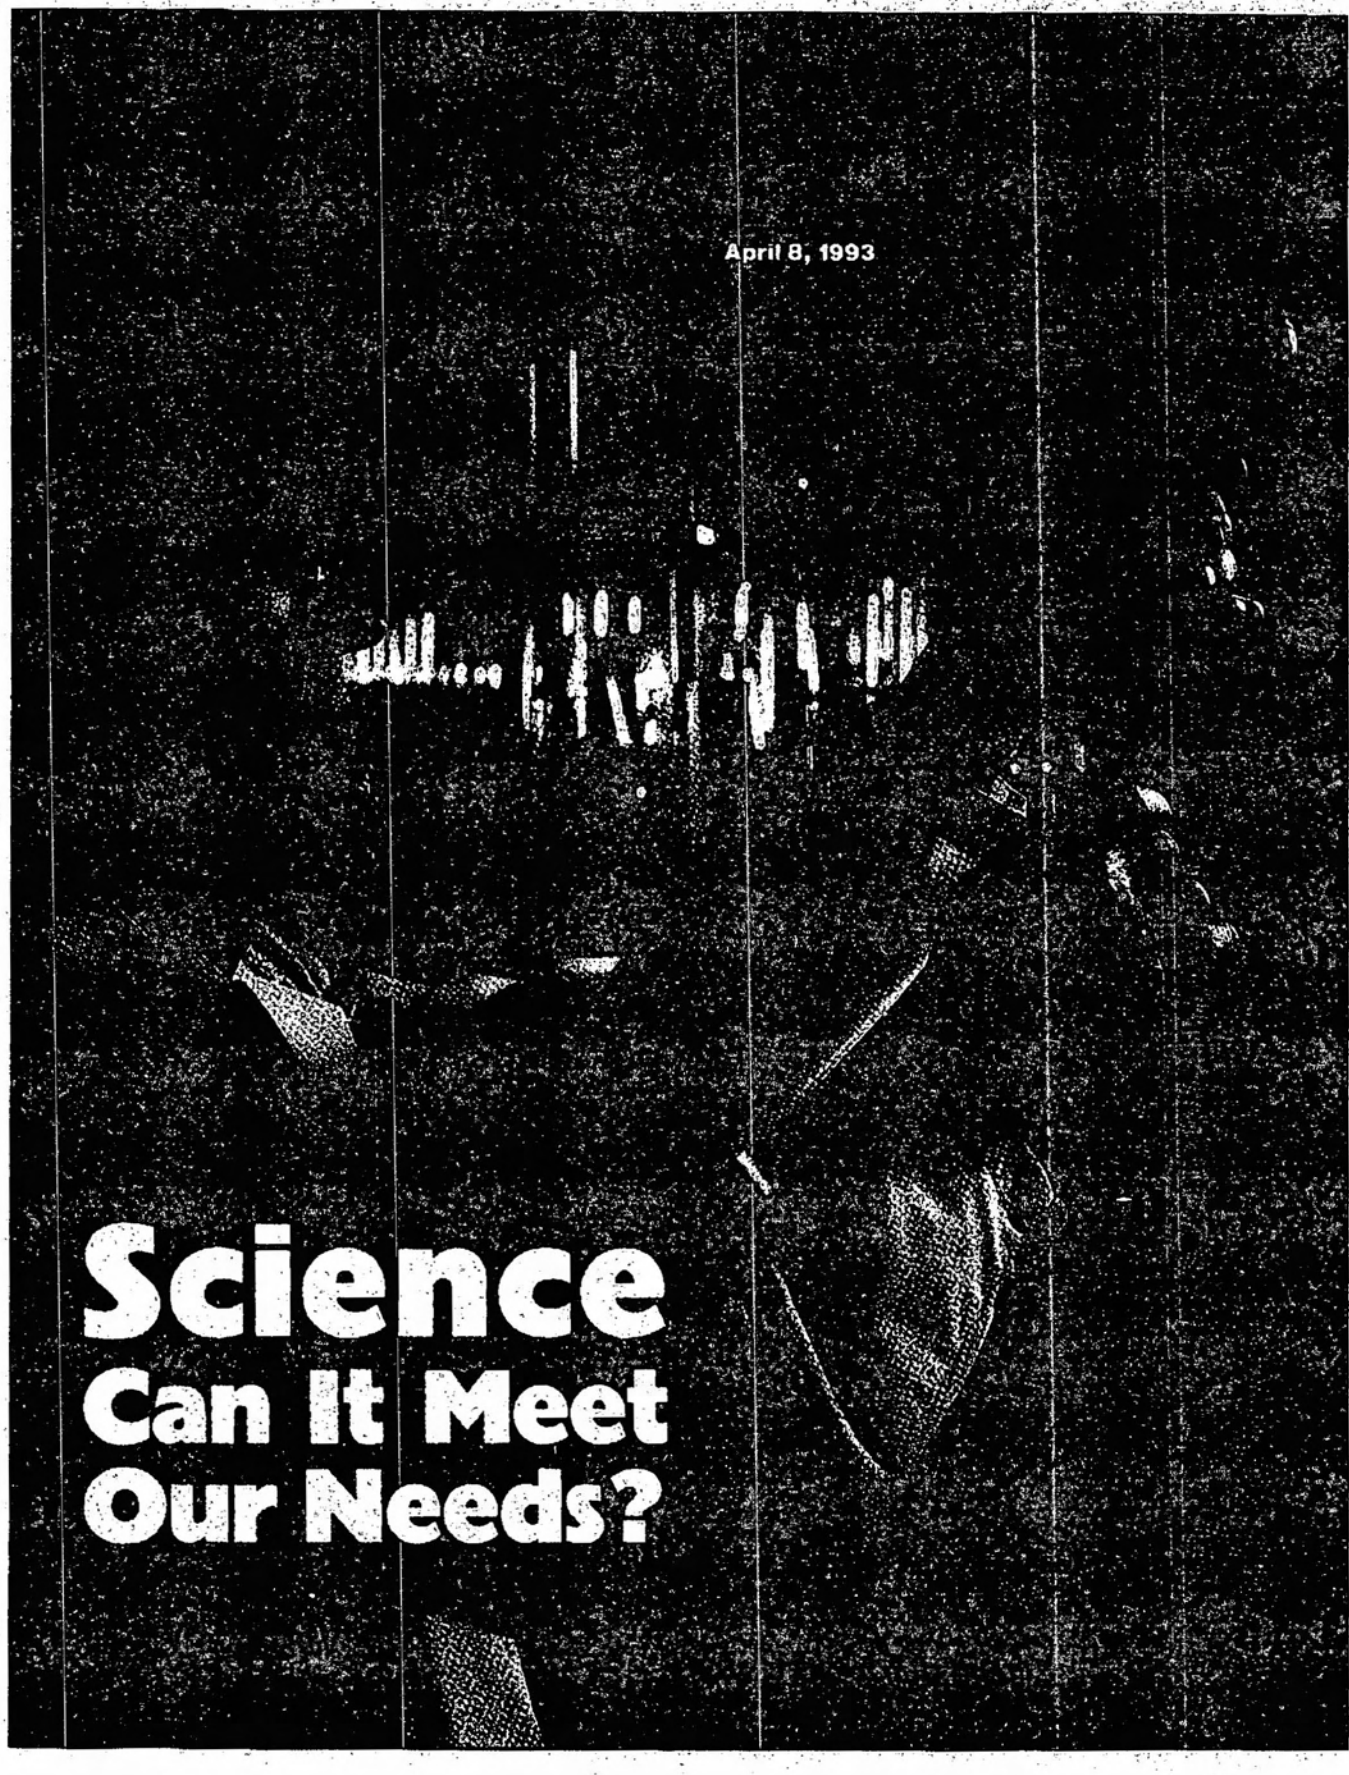
"I cannot express just how timely the articles were. I really couldn't believe how accurate the information was. I have suffered depression and bulimia for 20 years, looking for help and answers everywhere: psychiatrists, psychologists, medical doctors, group therapy, weight-loss clinics—all a dead end for me.

"But now I am finding help through information such as that found in the October 8th issue. It is desperately needed. I can't tell you the feelings of hopelessness that I have at times, so overwhelming that death would seem a relief. But now I can see that what happened to me as a child wasn't my fault, that God doesn't think I'm dirty. I was a victim. Because of information such as this, I see that Jehovah does care, that I can trust him. After 33 years of life, I feel Jehovah's spirit beginning to unlock the chains of bondage. Thanks for loving us enough to put the effort into such a wonderful gem as this Awake! Please continue to publish this type of articles and others, as they are vital for our spirituality."

The following letter from one man sums up the feeling of many. He had suffered more than 50 years of anguish because of being abused as a child. He says: "Jehovah's loving care through his earthly organization never ceases to amaze us and inspire ever deeper devotion and trust in him. After carefully studying the information in the October 8th, 1991, Awake! on child abuse, I wept for joy and sang song after song to Jehovah, rock and fortress, our refuge. Keep those articles coming, brothers. Jehovah is using you in ways you can never imagine."

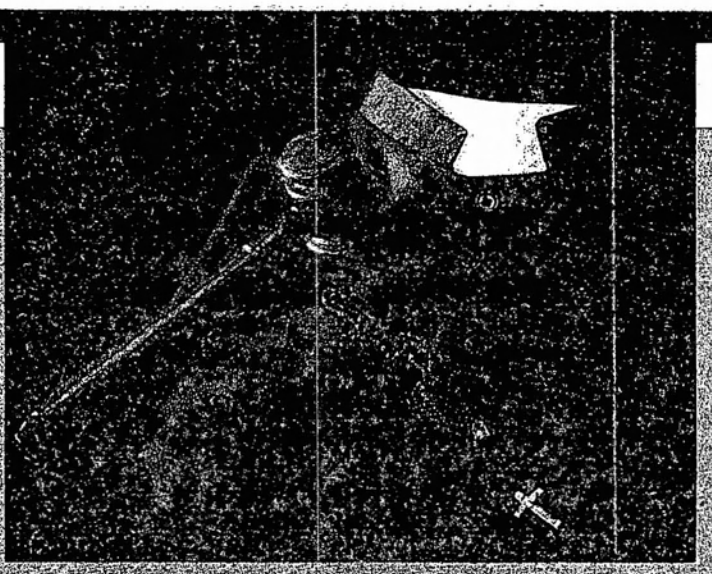
From Overseers



Of interest is this letter from a traveling overseer who supervises the activity of a number of congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses:

"Thank you for the October 8th Awake! on 'Healing the Wounds of Child Abuse.' Excellent information was presented that we really need. The articles were very accurate. I have observed time and again that victims have a very difficult time relating to Jehovah as a loving Father. When I see this difficulty, I ask them discreetly, 'Were you mistreated as a child?' The great majority of the time, the answer is yes! In every instance where the person was able to see the connection between the abuse and the way their current depression or turmoil affects them, they began to improve."

Summing up how many elders feel is this brief comment by another: "The October 8th issue on child abuse was excellent and needed. As elders in the congregations, we need to know as much as we can about these problems so as to show the concern and patience the victims need. As this system gets worse, these types of problems are getting more common. Thank you again for the help."



It has warmed our hearts to receive such letters. Coming fully to appreciate that 'it was not their fault,' and as a result of the transforming power of God's Word, such victims of child abuse cope with unhappy memories. They rejoice in the hope ahead, confident that in God's new world, "the former things will not be called to mind, neither will they come up into the heart." (Isaiah 65:17; Romans 12:12) Even now, through the healing power of Jesus' blood, they have a clean standing with God. (Hebrews 9:14) And they need to turn to the elders for help. These elders can act as "a hiding place from the wind" to those in need, speaking consolingly and praying with them. (Isaiah 32:2; 1 Thessalonians 5:14; James 5:14, 15) Thus, abuse victims can be helped to move forward and find joy in all the activities of the Christian congregation.

Science
Can It Meet Our Needs?

Victims of Pedophile Priests Speak Out

"DURING the past decade, some 400 Roman Catholic priests have been reported to church or civil authorities for sexual abuse of children," according to U.S. News & World Report. Recently, a national gathering of survivors of such abuse was held near Chicago, Illinois. Many spoke openly of how they had been victimized by pedophile priests.

But NCR (National Catholic Reporter) notes that speakers sounded another theme repeatedly throughout the conference: "The first abuse is sexual; the second and more painful, is psychological. This second abuse occurs when the church refuses to listen to victims of abuse, fails to take their accusations seriously, and moves only to protect the offending priests." "Fairly or unfairly," NCR reports, "they portrayed Catholic clergy as belonging to an unhealthy and misguided group more bent on preserving privilege and power than in serving lay needs." Several speakers made ominous comparisons to the Reformation, which split the church wide open in the 16th century.

According to Richard Sipe, a former priest turned psychotherapist and expert on sexual abuse by Catholic clergy, all this institutional denial reveals "a deep, desperate and knowing personal involvement in the problem." He added: "The church knows and has known for a long time a great deal about the sexual activity of its priests. It has looked the other way, tolerated, covered up and simply lied about the broad spectrum of sexual activity of its priests."

Not surprisingly, then, many abuse survivors are suing the church. NCR quotes one attorney who specializes in such cases as saying that there are pedophile-priest cases in each of the church's 188 dioceses in the United States. He says that out-of-court settlements have run as high as $300,000 per case. U.S. News & World Report says that such suits have already cost the church $400,000,000, a figure that could surge to $1 billion by the year 2000. And the Canadian Press reported recently that some 2,000 survivors of childhood sexual abuse in 22 church-run orphanages and mental institutions in Quebec are suing six religious orders for $1.4 billion in damages.

Interestingly, though, the aforementioned U.S. attorney, who represents 150 victims of pedophile priests in 23 states, says that he has never yet had a client who was eager to go to court. Each one first tried to seek justice "within the pastoral context of the church," NCR concludes. "Survivors go to the courts, it appears, not as a first resort, but as a last resort."

Little People, Big Stresses

"Children's griefs are little, certainly, but so is the child."
—Percy Bysshe Shelley.

LOOK at the drawing below of a top hat. At first glance the hat seems taller than the brim is wide. In reality, however, both height and width are equal. Dimensions can easily be misjudged.

It is just as easy for adults to misjudge the dimensions of a child's stress. 'Children's problems are so trivial,' some reason. But this thinking is illusory. "Adults should not judge troubles by their size," cautions the book Childstress!, "but by the size of the pain they produce."

In many cases the proportions of a child's pain are greater than adults realize. This was confirmed by a study in which parents were asked to rate their children's emotional state. Almost all replied that their children were "very happy." Yet, when questioned separate from their parents, most of the children described themselves as "unhappy" and even "miserable." Children face fears that parents greatly minimize.

Old-fashioned top hat

In another study, conducted by Dr. Kaoru Yamamoto, a group of children were asked to rate 20 life events on a seven-point stress scale. Then a group of adults rated those same events according to how they felt a child would rate them. The adults misjudged on 16 of the 20 items! "We all think we know our children," concludes Dr. Yamamoto, "but all too often we don't really see or hear, nor understand, what is really troubling them."

Parents must learn to view life's experiences from a new perspective: through the eyes of a child. (See box.) This is especially vital today. The Bible foretold that "in the last days there will set in perilous times of great stress . . . hard to deal with and hard to bear." (2 Timothy 3:1, The Amplified Bible) Children are not immune to such stress; often, they are its prime victims. While some of children's stresses are simply "incidental to youth," others are quite unusual and deserve special attention.—2 Timothy 2:22.

Why Awake! Is Published Awake! is for the enlightenment of the entire family. It shows how to cope with today's problems. It reports the news, tells about people in many lands, examines religion and science. But it does more. It probes beneath the surface and points to the real meaning behind current events, yet it always stays politically neutral and does not exalt one race above another. Most important, this magazine builds confidence in the Creator's promise of a peaceful and secure new world before the generation that saw the events of 1914 passes away.

Through the Eyes of a Child

Parental Death = Guilt. Recalling momentary angry thoughts toward a parent, a child may harbor concealed feelings of responsibility.

Divorce = Abandonment. A child's logic says that if parents can stop loving each other, they may also stop loving him.

Alcoholism = Tension. Claudia Black writes: "The daily environment of fear, abandonment, denial, inconsistency, and real or potential violence fostered in the alcoholic home is hardly a functional, healthy environment."

Parental Fighting = Fear. A study of 24 students revealed parental fights to be so stressful that bouts of vomiting, nervous facial tics, loss of hair, weight loss or gain, and even an ulcer were the consequences.

Overachievement = Frustration. "Wherever children turn," writes Mary Susan Miller, "they seem to be running for their lives in races lined up for them by adults." Pressured to be the best at school, at home, and even at play, the child never wins, and the race never ends.

Newborn = Loss. Now having to share parental attention and affection, a child may feel that he has lost a parent rather than gained a sibling.

School = Separation Anxiety. For Amy, leaving her mother and going to school was like suffering a little death each day.

Mistakes = Humiliation. With their shaky self-image, children "tend to blow some things up out of all proportion," says Dr. Ann Epstein. Humiliation, she found, was one of the most common triggers of child suicide.

Disabilities = Frustration. Besides the ridicule of uncompassionate peers, the physically or mentally disabled child may have to bear the impatience of teachers and family members who express disappointment over what is simply beyond his ability.

Abusive Parents
The Ultimate Stressors

"Because [children] have little frame of reference outside the family, the things they learn at home about themselves and others become universal truths engraved deeply in their minds."
—Dr. Susan Forward.

A POTTER can take a formless mass of clay, add water in the proper amounts, and shape it into a beautiful vessel. Similarly, parents shape a child's view both of himself and of the world. With love, guidance, and discipline, the child develops into a stable adult.

All too often, however, the impressions on a child's mind and heart are formed by abusive parents. Emotional, physical, and sexual abuse create distorted thinking patterns that become firmly set and difficult to reshape.

Emotional Abuse

Words can hit harder than fists. "I don't remember a day when [my mother] didn't tell me she wished I'd never been born," says Jason. Karen reflects: "I was always given the message that I was bad or not good enough."

Children will usually believe what is said against them. If a boy is constantly called stupid, then he may eventually feel stupid. Call a girl worthless, and she may believe just that. Children have a limited perspective and often cannot discern that which is accurate from that which is abusively exaggerated or false.

Physical Abuse

Joe recalls his physically abusive father: "He'd start punching me until he'd have me up against the wall. He'd keep pounding me so hard that I'd be dazed . . . The scariest part of it was not ever knowing what would provoke his outbursts!"

Jake was routinely beaten by his father. In one such beating, when Jake was just six years of age, his arm was broken. "I wouldn't let him or my sisters or Mom see me cry," Jake remembers. "It was the only pride I had left."

The book Strong at the Broken Places notes that childhood physical abuse is comparable to "being in a car accident every day, every week or every month." Such abuse teaches a child that the world is unsafe and that no one can be trusted. Additionally, violence often begets violence. "If children are not protected from their abusers," warns Time magazine, "then the public will one day have to be protected from the children."

Sexual Abuse

According to one estimate, 1 in 3 girls and 1 in 7 boys have been forced into a sexual experience by the time they are 18 years old. Most of these children suffer in silence. "Like soldiers missing in action," notes the book The Child in Crisis, "they remain lost for years in a private jungle of fear and guilt."

"How I hated my father for abusing me and how guilty I felt for hating him," says Louise. "I felt such shame because a child is supposed to love her parents and I didn't all the time." Such perplexing feelings are understandable when a child's primary protector turns into a perpetrator. Beverly Engel asks in The Right to Innocence: "How can we acknowledge that our own parent, someone who was supposed to love and care for us, could care so little about us?"

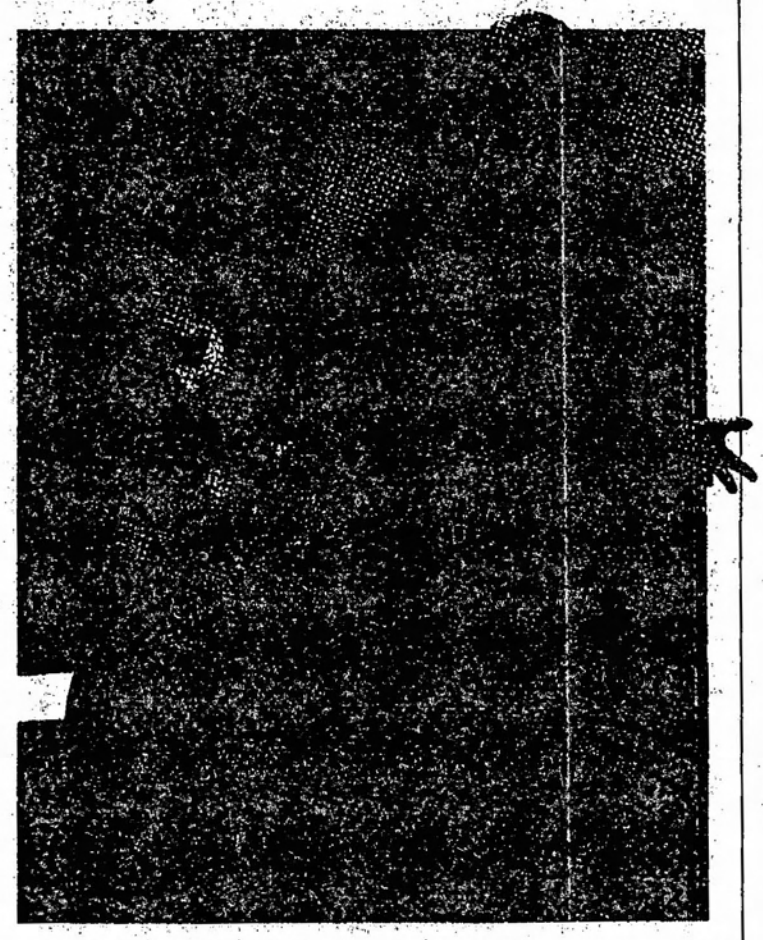
Sexual abuse can warp a child's entire view of life. "Every adult who was molested as a child brings from his or her childhood pervasive feelings of being hopelessly inadequate, worthless, and genuinely bad," writes Dr. Susan Forward.

It Doesn't Go Away



"It is not just the child's body that is abused or neglected," writes researcher Linda T. Sanford. "Troubled families mess with a child's mind." When a child is abused, either emotionally, physically, or sexually, he or she may grow up feeling unlovable and worthless.

Jason, mentioned earlier, had such low self-esteem as an adult that he was declared a suicide risk. Needlessly putting himself in life-threatening situations, he assessed his life as his mother had taught him: 'You should never have been born.'

Reflecting on the effects of being physically abused as a child, Joe says: "It just doesn't go away because you move out or get married. I'm always afraid of something, and I hate myself for it." The tension of the physically abusive household causes many children to grow up with negative expectations and rigid defenses that imprison rather than protect.

For Connie, incest created a distorted self-image that solidified in her adulthood: "I still think a lot of the time that people can look right inside me and see how disgusting I am."

All forms of abuse teach poisonous lessons that may become deeply entrenched by the time of adulthood. True, what is learned can be unlearned. Countless survivors who have recovered from childhood abuse testify to that fact. But how much better if parents realize that from the time of their child's birth, they are shaping much of his concept of himself and the world. A child's physical and emotional welfare is largely in his parents' hands.

Your Child Is in DANGER!

IN RECENT years a global outcry has arisen over the molestation of children. But the media attention, replete with celebrities who have publicly disclosed their own experiences of childhood abuse, has led to some popular misconceptions. Some believe that all this talk about attacks on children is simply the latest fad. In truth, though, there is little new about such sexual assault. It is nearly as old as human history itself.

An Ancient Problem

Some 4,000 years ago, the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah were famous for depravity. Pedophilia was apparently among the region's many vices. Genesis 19:4 describes a sex-crazed mob of Sodomites ranging "from boy to old man" seeking to rape Lot's two male guests. Consider: Why would mere boys be inflamed with the idea of raping males? Clearly they had already been introduced to homosexual perversions.

Centuries later, the nation of Israel moved into the region of Canaan. So steeped was this land in incest, sodomy, bestiality, prostitution, and even the ritualized sacrifice of little children to demon gods that all these vile acts had to be expressly forbidden in the Mosaic Law. (Leviticus 18:6, 21-23; 19:29; Jeremiah 32:35) Despite divine warnings, rebellious Israelites, including some of their rulers, adopted these despicable practices.—Psalm 106:35-38.

Ancient Greece and Rome, however, were far worse than Israel in this regard. Infanticide was common to both, and in Greece it was a widely accepted practice for older men to have relations with young boys. Boy brothels flourished in every ancient Greek city. In the Roman Empire, child prostitution was so prevalent that special taxes and holidays were set up specifically for that trade. In the arenas, girls were raped and forced into acts of bestiality. Similar atrocities were prevalent in many other ancient nations.

What about modern times? Is mankind too civilized for such horrible sex acts to flourish today? Students of the Bible cannot accept this notion. They well know that the apostle Paul characterized our era as "critical times hard to deal with." He detailed the rampant self-love, the love of pleasure, and the disintegration of natural family love that overrun modern society and added: "Wicked men and impostors will advance from bad to worse." (2 Timothy 3:1-5, 13; Revelation 12:7-12) Has child molestation, so often perpetrated by "wicked men and impostors," got worse?

An Urgent Problem

Assaults on children are often cloaked in secrecy, so much so that they have been called perhaps the most unreported of crimes. Even so, such crimes have evidently spiraled upward in recent decades. In the United States, a survey on the subject was conducted by the Los Angeles Times. It found that 27 percent of the women and 16 percent of the men had been sexually abused as children. Shocking as these statistics are, other careful estimates for the United States have run considerably higher.

In Malaysia, reports of child molestation have quadrupled over the past decade. In Thailand, some 75 percent of the men in one survey admitted to using child prostitutes. In Germany, officials estimate that as many as 300,000 children are sexually abused each year. According to South Africa's Cape Times, the number of reports of such assaults soared by 175 percent in a recent three-year period. In the Netherlands and Canada, researchers found that about one third of all women had been sexually abused as children. In Finland, 18 percent of the ninth-grade girls (15 or 16 years old) and 7 percent of the boys reported having had sexual contact with someone at least five years their senior.

In various countries disturbing reports have surfaced about religious cults that abuse children with sadistic sexual practices and torture. Often, those who report that they were victims of such crimes are treated with incredulity, not compassion.

So child molestation is neither new nor rare; it is a long-standing problem that is epidemic today. Its impact can be devastating. Many survivors suffer profound feelings of worthlessness and low self-esteem. Experts in the field have listed some common aftereffects of incest on girls, such as running away, drug and alcohol abuse, depression, attempted suicide, delinquency, promiscuity, sleep disturbances, and learning problems. Long-range effects may include poor parenting skills, frigidity, distrust of men, marriage to a pedophile, lesbianism, prostitution, and child molestation itself.

These aftereffects are not inevitable for a victim; nor could anyone rightly excuse wrong conduct solely on the grounds of having been assaulted in the past. Abuse does not predestine its victims to be immoral or delinquent; nor does it dissolve all their personal responsibility for the choices they make later in life. But these common outcomes for victims are real dangers. They add urgency to the question, How can we protect children from molestation?

How Can We Protect OUR CHILDREN?

AFTER using children to satisfy perverted lusts, after robbing them of their security and their sense of innocence, child molesters still want something else from their victims—SILENCE. To secure that silence, they use shame, secrecy, even outright terror. Children are thus robbed of their best weapon against abuse —the will to tell, to speak up and ask an adult for protection.

Tragically, adult society often unwittingly collaborates with child abusers. How so? By refusing to be aware of this danger, by fostering a hush-hush attitude about it, by believing oft-repeated myths. Ignorance, misinformation, and silence give safe haven to abusers, not their victims.

For example, the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops concluded recently that it was a "general conspiracy of silence" that allowed gross child abuse to persist among the Catholic clergy for decades. Time magazine, in reporting on the widespread plague of incest, also cited a "conspiracy of silence" as a factor that "only helps perpetuate the tragedy" in families.

However, Time noted that this conspiracy is crumbling at last. Why? In a word, education. It is as Asiaweek magazine put it: "All experts agree that the best defence against child abuse is public awareness." To defend their children, parents must understand the realities of the threat. misconceptions that protect child abusers and not children.—See box below.

Educate Your Child!

Wise King Solomon told his son that knowledge, wisdom, and thinking ability could protect him "from the bad way, from the man speaking perverse things." (Proverbs 2:10-12) Isn't that just what children need? The FBI pamphlet Child Molesters: A Behavioral Analysis says this under the heading "The Ideal Victim": "For most children sex is a taboo subject about which they receive little accurate information, especially from their parents." Don't let your children be "ideal victims." Educate them about sex.* For example, no child should reach puberty unaware of how the body will change during this time. Ignorance will make them confused, ashamed—and vulnerable.

A woman we'll call Janet was sexually abused as a child, and years later her own two children were sexually abused. She recalls: "The way we were brought up, we never talked

Common Misconceptions

Misconception: Child abusers are usually strangers, deranged misfits who abduct children and use physical force to abuse them.

In the vast majority of cases—from 85 to 90 percent by some estimates—the abuser is a person the child knows and trusts. Rather than using force, abusers often manipulate the child into sexual acts gradually, taking advantage of the child's limited experience and reasoning ability. (Compare 1 Corinthians 13:11 and Proverbs 22:15.) These abusers are not the drooling loners of the stereotype. Many are quite religious, respected, and well liked in the community. According to the U.S. Federal Bureau of Investigation, "to assume that someone is not a pedophile simply because he is nice, goes to church, works hard, is kind to animals, and so on, is absurd." Recent research suggests that it is also wrong to assume that all abusers are male or that all victims are female.

Misconception: Children fantasize or lie about sexual abuse.

Under normal circumstances children lack the experience or sophistication in sexual matters to invent explicit claims of abuse, although some small children may become confused about details. Even the most skeptical of researchers agree that most claims of abuse are valid. Consider the book Sex Abuse Hysteria—Salem Witch Trials Revisited, which focuses on false claims of abuse.* This book admits: "Genuine sex abuse of children is widespread and the vast majority of sex abuse allegations of children . . . are likely to be justified (perhaps 95% or more)." Children find it enormously difficult to report abuse. When they do lie about abuse, it is most often to deny that it happened even though it actually did.

Misconception: Children are seductive and frequently bring the abuse on themselves by their conduct.

This notion is particularly warped, since, in effect, it blames the victim for the abuse. Children have no real concept of sexuality. They have no idea of what such activity implies or of how it will change them. They are therefore incapable of consenting to it in any meaningful way. It is the abuser, and the abuser alone, who bears the blame for the abuse.—Compare Luke 11:11, 12.

Misconception: When children disclose abuse, parents should teach them to refrain from talking about it and to put it behind them.

Who is best served if the child keeps silent about the abuse? Is it not the abuser? In fact, studies have shown that denial with emotional suppression may be the least effective way to deal with the trauma of abuse. Of the nine coping methods used by one group of adult survivors studied in England, the ones who denied, avoided, or suppressed the issue suffered the greater emotional maladjustment and distress in adult life. If you experienced a terrifying assault, would you want to be told not to talk about it? Why tell a child such a thing? Allowing the child the normal reaction to such a terrible event, such as grief, anger, mourning, will give him the opportunity eventually to put the abuse in the past.

* In some divorce cases, contending adults have been known to use an accusation of child abuse as a weapon.

about sex. So I grew up embarrassed about it. It was shameful. And when I had kids, it was the same. I could talk to other people's kids but not to my own. I think that's unhealthy because children are vulnerable if you don't talk to them about these things."

Abuse prevention can be taught early. When you teach children to name such body parts as the vagina, the breasts, the anus, the penis, tell them that these places are good, they are special—but they are private. "Other people are not allowed to handle them—not even Mommy or Daddy—and not even a doctor unless Mommy or Daddy is there or has said it is OK."* Ideally, such statements should come from both parents or each adult guardian.

In The Safe Child Book, Sherryll Kraizer notes that while children should feel free to ignore, scream at, or run from an abuser, many children who are abused explain later that they didn't want to seem rude. Children thus need to know that some grown-ups do bad things and that not even a child has to obey anyone who tells him or her to do something wrong. At such times a child has a perfect right to say no, just as did Daniel and his companions to the Babylonian adults who wanted them to eat unclean food.—Daniel 1:4, 8; 3:16-18.

One widely recommended teaching tool is the "What if . . . ?" game. You might, for example, ask: "What if your teacher told you to hit another child? What would you do?" Or: "What if (Mommy, Daddy, a minister, a policeman) told you to jump off a tall building?" The child's answer may be inadequate or simply wrong, but don't correct harshly. The game need not include shock or scare tactics; in fact, experts recommend that it be played in a gentle, loving, even playful manner.

Next, teach children to fend off displays of affection that are inappropriate or that make them feel uncomfortable. Ask, for example, "What if a friend of Mommy and Daddy wanted to kiss you in a way that made you feel funny?"* It is often best to encourage the child to act out what he or she would do, making it a "Let's pretend" game.

In the same way, children can learn to resist other tactics of abusers. For example, you might ask: "What if someone says, 'You know, you're my favorite. Don't you want to be my friend?'" When the child learns to resist such ploys, discuss others. You might ask: "If someone says, 'You don't want to hurt my feelings, do you?' What will you say?" Show the child how to say no through words and clear, firm body language. Remember, abusers often test how children respond to subtle advances. So a child must be taught to resist firmly and say, "I'm telling on you."

Be Thorough in Your Training

Do not limit such training to a onetime talk. Children need much repetition. Use your own

* Of course, parents must bathe and change very little children, and at such times parents wash the private parts. But teach your children to bathe themselves early on; some child-care experts recommend that they learn to wash their own private parts by the age of three if possible.

* Some experts caution that if you force your child to kiss or hug every person who asks for such displays of affection, you may undermine this training. Thus, some parents teach children to make polite excuses or substitutions when unwanted demands are made of them.

He Cried Out for Help

"PLEA to Jehovah Halts Molester's Attack on Youth," declared a headline in the U.S. newspaper The Arizona Republic on May 5, 1993. The alleged molester abducted the 16-year-old youth at gunpoint, taking him to the perpetrator's apartment. When the youth cried out "Jehovah, help me!" the molester was shaken and let the boy go free. The police later apprehended the man.

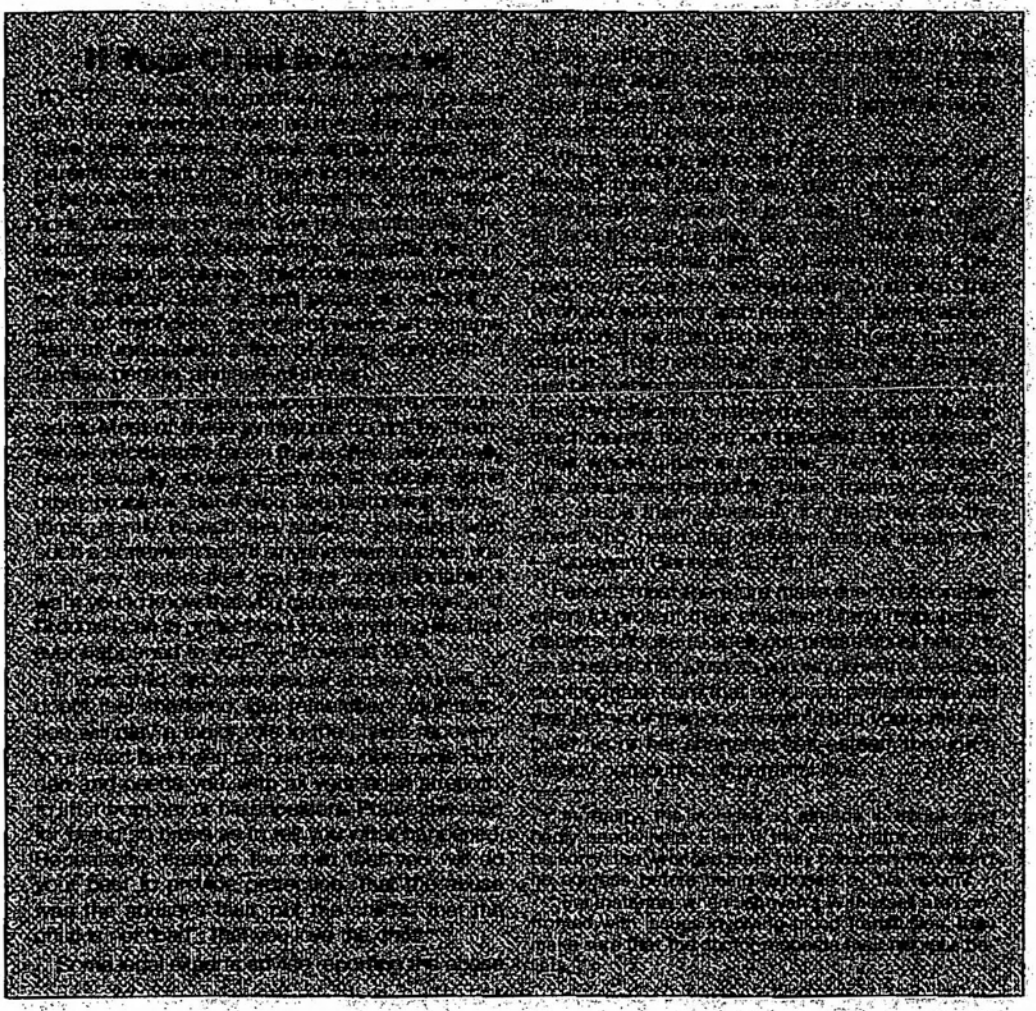
While calling upon Jehovah's name is certainly appropriate under such circumstances, it does not mean that God's servants will be free from attack in these critical "last days." (2 Timothy 3:1-5, 13) Christian parents must therefore train their children to be cautious with all strangers, regardless of apparent authority.

judgment in determining just how explicit the training should be. But be thorough.

Be sure, for example, to forestall any attempt by an abuser to create a secret pact. Children should know that it is never all right for an adult to ask them to keep a secret from either parent. Reassure them that it is always proper for them to tell—even if they had promised not to. (Compare Numbers 30: 12, 16.) Some abusers blackmail the child if they know that the child has disobeyed some family rule. "I won't tell on you if you won't tell on me" is the message. So children should know that they will never get in trouble for telling—even under these circumstances. It is safe to tell.

Your training should also be threat-resistant. Some abusers have killed small animals in front of a child and threatened to do the same to the child's parents. Others have warned their victim that they will abuse younger siblings. So teach children that they should always tell on an abuser, no matter what scary threats are made.

In this regard the Bible can be a helpful teaching tool. Because it so vividly stresses Jehovah's almighty power, it can take the bite out of abusers' threats. Children need to know that no matter what threats are made, Jehovah is able to help his people. (Daniel 3:8-30) Even when bad people hurt those Jehovah loves, he can always undo the damage afterward and make things better again. (Job, chapters 1, 2; 42:10-17; Isaiah 65:17) Assure them that Jehovah sees everything, including the people who do bad things and the good people who do their best to resist them.—Compare Hebrews 4:13.



Teach children to use words and clear, firm body language to resist improper advances

Cautious as Serpents

It is the rare pedophile who uses physical force to molest a child. They generally prefer to befriend children first. Jesus' advice to be "cautious as serpents" is thus appropriate. (Matthew 10:16) Close supervision by loving parents is one of the best safeguards against abuse. Some molesters look for a child alone in a public place and strike up a conversation to spark the child's curiosity. ("Do you like motorcycles?" "Come see the puppies out in my truck.") True, you cannot be with your children at all times. And child-care experts recognize that children need some freedom to move around. But wise parents are cautious about granting children too much freedom prematurely.

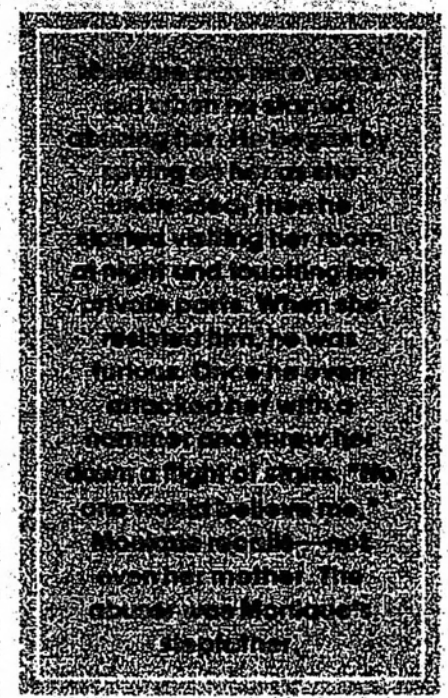
adults or older youths who are close to your children, using extra caution when deciding who should care for your children in your absence. Be wary of baby-sitters who make your children feel funny or ill at ease. Likewise, beware of teenagers who seem to have an excessive interest in younger children and have no friends their own age. Thoroughly check out day-care facilities and schools. Tour the entire premises and interview the staff, observing carefully how they interact with children. Ask if they mind if you drop in to check on your children at unexpected times; if this is not allowed, look elsewhere.—See Awake! of December 8, 1987, pages 3-11.

The sad truth is, however, that not even the best of parents can control everything that happens to their children.—Ecclesiastes 9:11.



If parents work together, there is one thing they can control: the home environment. And since the home is where most child abuse occurs, that will be the focus of the next article.

Prevention IN THE HOME

IT IS NOT the stranger in a trench coat, the loner lurking in the bushes, who poses the greatest threat to children. It is a member of the family. The vast majority of sexual abuse occurs in the home. So how can the home be made more resistant to abuse?

In his book Slaughter of the Innocents, historian Dr. Sander J. Breiner examines the evidence of child abuse in five ancient societies—Egypt, China, Greece, Rome, and Israel. He concludes that while abuse did exist in Israel, it was relatively rare compared to the other four civilizations. Why? Unlike their neighbors, the people in Israel were taught to have respect for women and children —an enlightened view they owed to the Holy Scriptures. When the Israelites applied divine law to family life, they prevented child abuse. Today's families need these clean, practical standards more than ever.

Moral Laws

Does Bible law have an impact on your family? For instance, Leviticus 18:6 reads: "You people must not come near, any man of you, to any close fleshly relative of his to lay bare nakedness. I am Jehovah." Similarly the Christian congregation today enforces strong laws against all forms of sexual abuse. Anyone who sexually abuses a child risks being disfellowshipped, put out of the congregation.* —1 Corinthians 6:9, 10.

All families should know and review such laws together. Deuteronomy 6:6, 7 urges: "And these words that I am commanding you today must prove to be on your heart; and you must inculcate them in your son and speak of them when you sit in your house and when you walk on the road and when you lie down and when you get up." Inculcating these laws means more than occasionally lecturing your children. It involves a regular give-and-take discussion. From time to time, both mother and father should reaffirm God's laws on incest and the loving reasons for these laws.

* Sexual abuse of a child occurs when someone uses a child to gratify his or her own sexual desires. It often involves what the Bible calls fornication, or porneʹa, which could include fondling of genitalia, sexual intercourse, and oral or anal sex. Some abusive acts, such as the fondling of breasts, explicitly immoral proposals, showing pornography to a child, voyeurism, and indecent exposure, may amount to what the Bible condemns as "loose conduct."—Galatians 5:19-21; see The Watchtower of March 15, 1983, footnote on page 30.

You might also use such stories as that of Tamar and Amnon, David's children, to show children that in sexual matters there are boundaries that no one—close relatives included—should ever cross.—Genesis 9:20-29; 2 Samuel 13:10-16.

Respect for these principles can be shown even in practical living arrangements. In one Oriental country, research has shown that much incest occurs in families where children sleep with parents even when there is no economic necessity for this. Similarly, it is generally unwise to have opposite-sex siblings share a bed or a room as they grow older, if this is at all avoidable. Even when cramped living conditions are a fact of life, parents should use good judgment in deciding on where each family member should sleep.

Bible law forbids drunkenness, suggesting that it can lead to perversion. (Proverbs 23:29-33) According to one study, some 60 to 70 percent of incest victims reported that their abusing parent had been drinking when the abuse started.

A Loving Family Head

Researchers find that abuse is more common among families with domineering husbands. The widely held view that women exist merely to fulfill male needs is Scripturally wrong. Some men use this unchristian opinion to justify turning to a daughter for anything they cannot get from a wife. This type of oppression can cause women in these circumstances to lose their emotional balance. Many lose even the natural urge to protect their own children. (Compare Ecclesiastes 7:7.) One study, on the other hand, found that when workaholic fathers were largely absent from the home setting, sometimes mother-son sexual abuse has festered.

> One survivor of years of incest said: "Abuse kills children, it kills their trust, their right to feel innocent. That's why children have to be protected. Because now I have to rebuild my whole life. Why make more children do that?" Why indeed?

What about your family? Do you as husband take the role of head seriously, or do you abdicate it to your wife? (1 Corinthians 11:3) Do you treat your wife with love, honor, and respect? (Ephesians 5:25; 1 Peter 3:7) Do her views count? (Genesis 21:12; Proverbs 31:26, 28) And what about your children? Do you see them as precious? (Psalm 127:3) Or do you view them as mere burdens, readily Listen to the Children!

IN BRITISH COLUMBIA, Canada, a recent study examined the careers of 30 child molesters. The results were chilling. The 30 individuals had, between them, abused 2,099 children. Fully half of them held positions of trust—teachers, ministers, administrators, and child-care workers. One molester, a 50-year-old dentist, had abused nearly 500 children over a 26-year period.

However, The Globe and Mail of Toronto notes: "In 80 per cent of cases, one or more sectors of the community (including friends or colleagues of the offender, families of victims, other children, some victims) denied or minimized the abuse." Not surprisingly, "the report suggests that denial and disbelief allow abuse to continue."

Some of the victims had told on the abusers. However, "parents of young victims were unwilling to accept what their children were telling them," The Globe and Mail quotes the report as saying. Similarly, a government official in Germany recently cited a report that child victims of sexual abuse have to approach adults with their story as many as seven times before they are believed.

Depending on the law of the land where he lives, the molester may well have to serve a prison term or face other sanctions from the State. The congregation will not protect him from this. Moreover, the man has revealed a serious weakness that henceforth will have to be taken into account. If he seems to be repentant, he will be encouraged to make spiritual progress, share in the field service, even have parts in the Theocratic Ministry School and nonteaching parts in the Service Meeting. This does not mean, though, that he will qualify to serve in a position of responsibility in the congregation. What are the Scriptural reasons for this?

For one thing, an elder must be "self-controlled." (Titus 1:8) True, none of us have perfect self-control. (Romans 7:21-25) But a dedicated adult Christian who falls into the sin of child sexual abuse reveals an unnatural fleshly weakness. Experience has shown that such an adult may well molest other children. True, not every child molester repeats the sin, but many do. And the congregation cannot read hearts to tell who is and who is not liable to molest children again. (Jeremiah 17:9) Hence, Paul's counsel to Timothy applies with special force in the case of baptized adults who have molested children: "Never lay your hands hastily upon any man; neither be a sharer in the sins of others." (1 Timothy 5:22) For the protection of our children, a man known to have been a child molester does not qualify for a responsible position in the congregation. Moreover, he cannot be a pioneer or serve in any other special, full-time service.—Compare the principle at Exodus 21:28, 29.

Some may ask, 'Have not some committed other types of sin and apparently repented, only to repeat their sin later?' Yes, that has happened, but there are other factors to consider. If, for example, an individual makes immoral advances to another adult, the adult should be able to resist his or her advances. Children are much easier to deceive, confuse, or terrorize. The Bible speaks of a child's lack of wisdom. (Proverbs 22:15; 1 Corinthians 13:11) Jesus used children as an example of humble innocence. (Matthew 18:4; Luke 18:16, 17) The innocence of a child includes a complete lack of experience. Most children are open, eager to please, and thus vulnerable to abuse by a scheming adult whom they know and trust. Therefore, the congregation has a responsibility before Jehovah to protect its children.

Well-trained children learn to obey and honor their parents, the elders, and other adults. (Ephesians 6:1, 2; 1 Timothy 5:1, 2; Hebrews 13:7) It would be a shocking perversion if one of these authority figures were to misuse that child's innocent trust so as to seduce or force him or her to submit to sexual acts. Those who have been sexually molested in this way often struggle for years to overcome the resulting emotional trauma. Hence, a child molester is subject to severe congregational discipline and restrictions. It is not his status as an authority figure that should be of concern but, rather, the unblemished purity of the congregation.—1 Corinthians 5:6; 2 Peter 3:14.

If a child molester sincerely repents, he will recognize the wisdom of applying Bible principles. If he truly learns to abhor what is wicked, he will despise what he did and struggle to avoid repeating his sin. (Proverbs 8:13; Romans 12:9) Further, he will surely thank Jehovah for the greatness of His love, as a result of which a repentant sinner, such as he is, can still worship our holy God and hope to be among "the upright" who will reside on earth forever. —Proverbs 2:21.

A. No.

Q. Were you ever an unbaptized publisher?
A. Yes.
Q. What age did you become an unbaptized publisher?
A. I couldn't give you the exact age. I wouldn't -- I wouldn't know.
Q. Before age 12?
A. Yes.
Q. And how long did that continue in your status as an unbaptized publisher; if you know?
A. I wouldn't be able to give you the exact date.
Q. Did you ever give talks in the theocratic ministry school?
A. Yes.
Q. Same answer about timing on that? You couldn't guess?
A. I wouldn't know.
Q. But it was when --
A. It was when I was an unbaptized publisher.
Q. What congregations of Jehovah Witness did you attend?
A. Just North Fremont.
Q. At the time of your parents' divorce were your mother and father Jehovah Witnesses?
A. Yes.

A. In the L.A. area.

Q. I guess we can move onto questions I don't want to ask you, but we need to get into.

This is a lawsuit involving allegations of your being sexually abused when you were a minor. Who were the perpetrator of your abuse?

A. Jonathan Kendrick.

Q. How did you know Jonathan Kendrick?

A. He was a member of the North Fremont Congregation.

Q. Was he a friend of your family?

A. Yes;

Q. Was he someone who would visit your parents' home?

A. Yes.

Q. Your parents visit his home?

A. No.

Q. When did the abuse first take place?

A. I don't know the exact date or exact time. Around the age of nine.

Q. You were nine years old?

A. (Witness nods head affirmatively.)

Q. This is while your parents were still married?

A. Yes.

Q. Where did this abuse take place?

A. The Kingdom Hall, North Fremont Kingdom Hall Congregation.

Q. Where in the Kingdom Hall?

A. Just in the Kingdom Hall.

Q. In the main auditorium?

A. Yeah.

Q. What took place in the Kingdom Hall? What did he do to you?

A. He would grab me and hold onto me.

Q. Where would he grab you?

A. Just like bear hug me. Hold me.

Q. Were other people present when this happened?

A. Yes.

Q. Who was present?

A. The attendees of the North Fremont Congregation.

Q. So like during a meeting?

A. Yes.

Q. During the time the meeting was going on or before or after?

A. Before, after.

Q. Other than the bear hug what did he do?

A. He used to make me sit on his lap during meeting.

Q. Were your parents at these meetings?

A. My dad was.

Q. So the first time this took place was when you were about nine years old?

A. (Witness nods head affirmatively.)

Q. How many times did it take place; the bear hugs?

A. I couldn't give you a number.

Q. Frequently?

A. Very frequently.

Q. Every meeting?

A. I would -- I could safely say that.

Q. Did you ever complain about these bear hugs to anyone?

A. I would try to get away.

Q. What would you do to get away?

A. Squirm and try to get away.

Q. Were you able to get away?

A. (Witness shakes head in the negative.)

Q. Did you ever say anything to your father about it when you were nine years old?

A. It seemed like it was acceptable conduct.

Q. So you didn't say anything?

A. Besides trying to get away, no.

Q. How long did the bear hugs and sitting on his lap last in terms of, if you can reference it, with your age? Starting with nine years old how long did it continue?

A. Up until he moved away.

Q. Do you know when that was?

A. Shortly after my parents divorced.

Q. Did the abuse ever increase to be more than just bear hugs?

A. Yes.

Q. When did it increase to be more? How old were you?

A. Still nine.

Q. What happened?

A. He would take me to his house after meetings.

Q. Were these day meetings or night meetings?

A. Sunday meetings.

Q. Sunday meetings?

What happened when he would take you to his house after a Sunday meeting?

A. He would bear hug me. He wouldn't let me go. He would touch me. Put his hands up my shirt.

Q. This started when you were age nine?

A. (Witness nods head affirmatively.)

Q. While you were age nine did he do anything else besides bear hug you and put his hands up your shirt?

A. I don't know at what age it was when it progressed into something different. I don't know exactly what age I was.

Q. What did it progress to?

A. It got more violent.

Q. What do you mean by "violent"? What would he do?

A. He would use pens, and he would make me touch him.

Q. What would he do with the pen?

Do you want to take a break?

A. I will finish your question.

He used to just put them inside me.

Q. In your vagina?

A. (Witness nods head affirmatively.)

MR. McCabe: Why don't we take a rest break. I'm sorry.

(RECESS TAKEN FROM 10:30 A.M. to 10:35 A.M.)

BY MR. McCABE:

Q. So you're not sure what age you were when it escalated to this point, using a pen and other touching; is that correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. But some time after you were nine?

A. Yes.

Q. Was it some time after you were 12?

A. No.
Q. Before you were 12?
A. Yes.
Q. Can you tell me about how many times this incident took place where he would use pens?
A. Several times a month.
Q. Over what time period? Number of years? All within one year?
A. After it escalated?
Q. Yes.
A. Couple years.
Q. When did the abuse stop?
A. When he moved.
Q. He moved about the time your parents divorced?
A. (Witness nods head affirmatively.)
Q. That was in 1997?
A. That's correct.
Q. The abuse started when you were nine years old, so about 1994?
A. (Witness nods head affirmatively.)
Q. Were there occasions of abuse anywhere else other than what you have described at the Kingdom Hall and at his home?
A. No.
Q. Was there any other type of abuse other than what you have already described?

A. Oral. He used to make me touch him and he used to lick me.

Q. Was he clothed or unclothed when you touched him?

A. Unclothed.

Q. What did he make you touch?

A. His genital area.

Q. Did he disrobe? How was he dressed?

A. He was unclothed.

Q. Completely?

A. Yes.

Q. What about you? Did he unclothe you?

A. Yes.

Q. How often did this happen?

A. Several times a month.

Q. Did you ever go to meetings at the Fremont Kingdom Hall by yourself?

A. No.

Q. Did you always go with your dad or your mom?

A. Yes.

Q. Or both of your parents while they were married?

A. Yes.

Q. Where did you usually sit? Did you sit with

Q. Is there any other abuse with Jonathan Kendrick that you haven't told me about?

A. He took pictures.

Q. What would he take pictures of?

A. Me.

Q. Undressed?

A. Undressed.

Q. How old were you when he did that?

A. Nine.

Q. Was that a continuing part of his pattern?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, the incidents of taking photos, where did they take place?

A. At his house.

Q. And the incidents involving him being unclothed or you being unclothed, inappropriate touching, did that all take place at his house, too?

A. The inappropriate touching started at the Kingdom Hall.

Q. Okay. Well, I'm talking about other than the bear hugs.

A. Yes. It took place at his house.

Q. Was there any other inappropriate touching at the Kingdom Hall that you didn't tell me about other than the bear hugs and sitting on his lap?

A. And grabbing me.
Q. Where would he grab you?
A. Around my top section.
Q. Grab your breast or your arms or --
A. Yeah.
Q. -- shoulders?
A. Yes.
Q. All three?
A. Yes.
Q. But at all times that you were at the Kingdom Hall one or both of your parents were there; is that correct?
A. One. Yeah. One or both of my parents were there.
Q. Okay. Who was the first person you told that this was going on?
A. My dad asked me about it in 2003.
Q. What did he ask you?
A. He said -- well, he asked me if something had ever happened to me.
Q. What did you tell him?
A. I said, "Yes."
Q. Did you tell him the details that you have told me here today?
A. No.

A. No.

Q. Was he married at the time?

A. No.

Q. Did he live alone?

A. Yes.

MR. SIMONS: And while we were off the record I mentioned that there is one more thing that I'm afraid that Ms. Conti has to tell you about.

MR. McCABE: Okay.

Q. Is there something else that we haven't covered yet that you need to tell me?

A. He used to lick me, but he also used to make me -- he used to make me orally please him.

Q. How often did that happen?

A. After it started it was quite frequent.

Q. Do you know when it first started how old you were?

A. Probably 10.

Q. Did he orally copulate you?

A. (Witness nods head affirmatively.)

Q. Same amount of frequency?

A. (Witness nods head affirmatively.)

Q. What would happen after these incidents?

A. He would take me home.

Q. And...

A. And my dad would pick me up.
Q. Your dad would pick you up?
A. (Witness nods head affirmatively.)
Q. Where would your dad pick you up?
A. Back at the Kingdom Hall.
Q. Do you know, what was the purpose for you going to Jonathan Kendrick's home in your parent's eyes? Do you have any idea?
A. I think they saw him as a trusted person to babysit me.
Q. What would your parents do when you were with Jonathan Kendrick?
A. I don't know. I wasn't with them.
Q. And starting from about age nine he would take you to his house several times a month?
A. (Witness nods head affirmatively.)
Q. Every month?
A. (Witness nods head affirmatively.)
Q. Until 1997?
A. (Witness nods head affirmatively.)
Q. Was there ever a time when you didn't recall that these things took place? That you blocked it out of your memory?
A. Yeah. Claudia Francis had told me of a time that I don't remember.

REPORTED BY: PAULETTE RADCLIFF, CSR No. 12111

FILE NO. A50931C

A. No.

Q. How would you describe your relationship with Candace, say, birth to age ten?

A. Very close.

Q. Close as you can imagine for a mother and daughter? 10:11:22

A. I would say so, yes.

Q. Was she a happy girl?

A. I think she was happy, yeah, she was happy.

Q. Okay. Because of your experience did you have heightened sensitivities about your daughter, protecting her? 10:11:39

A. Only within the normal range of trying to protect your child.

Q. And you did try to protect your daughter; didn't you? 10:12:03

A. Uh-huh.

Q. You would describe yourself as being a good mother?

A. Yes. 10:12:12

Q. Do you recall -- let me back up. Did you attend meetings of the Jehovah's witness faith at the north Fremont Kingdom Hall, Fremont, California?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Tell me about what meetings you 10:12:40

Q. Yes.
A. Yes, uh-huh.
Q. Did you ever hear that Jonathan Kendrick was a child abuser before your daughter told you?
A. No. 10:15:58
Q. Did you ever have any suspicions that he might be someone who would be a danger to children?
A. No.
Q. Did you ever see him do anything that aroused your intent in any way that he might be a 10:16:11 danger to children?
A. Two events at the very end of our marriage. I wasn't aware that he -- he would come over to the house and spend time in the garage with my husband. It was a paint booth. My husband had the garage as a 10:16:52 paint booth for cars, and it was always an attraction for the brothers to come over. Jonathan wasn't the only one who would come over, but he was over at this time and you would have to go out of the house to go to the garage. The door wasn't connected to the 10:17:19 house, inside the house, so Candace and I were opening the door to see -- say hello, and Jonathan grabbed her by the arm, and I believe he had been drinking. I knew that that was an issue at the end, and he hurt her, and I didn't think it -- that seem 10:17:53 there a period of time where you knew he wasn't?

A. I believe that he may have not when he was getting a divorce. I think maybe he wasn't a ministerial servant. I can't say for sure, but I think maybe he wasn't at the end. 10:21:34

Q. Do you know when Mr. Kendrick got a divorce?

A. No, I don't remember.

Q. Was it before your divorce?

A. I don't remember that.

Q. Do you ever recall Mr. Kendrick inappropriately touching Candace at the kingdom hall at north Fremont congregation of Jehovah's witnesses? 10:21:58

A. I don't remember that. I just remember that he was very friendly with her.

Q. Do you remember seeing him give her bear hugs at the kingdom hall? 10:22:25

A. I don't remember.

Q. Do you ever remember seeing Candace sitting on his lap at the kingdom hall?

A. No, but there is a period of time that I wasn't there at the hall at the end. It was quite a few months I was not there. 10:22:53

Q. That would be '96 up to July 1997?

A. I believe that would be during '95 '96 and '97. 10:23:23

A. I don't remember.

Q. Do you know if Candace ever went with Neil to Kendrick's home?

A. I don't remember that.

Q. Did Candace ever associate with Kendrick's step-daughter that you're aware of? 11:37:32

A. No.

Q. During the time you lived with Neil up until you separated in July 1996, did Candace ever go with Kendrick to Kendrick's home? 11:37:51

A. No.

Q. And you're certain of that?

A. Not on my time.

Q. My question --

A. By herself? 11:38:07

Q. That was my question, yes?

A. Oh, no. Not that I know of, no.

Q. You wouldn't have allowed it?

A. No.

Q. You would not have allowed it; correct? 11:38:16

A. Yes.

Q. That's correct?

A. Yes, that's correct.

Q. Do you blame Neil for allowing Kendrick to molest Candace? 11:38:27

A. No.
Q. Why not?
A. Because I think, and I'm just saying I think, that Neil was under the impression that everybody could be trusted in a congregation. That's what I think.
Q. Do you believe Neil allowed Candace to go to Kendrick's home with Kendrick?
A. Say that again?
Q. Do you believe Neil allowed Candace to go to Kendrick's home alone with Kendrick? 11:39:15
A. I don't know.
Q. Earlier Mr. McCabe asked you whether you had ever seen anything happen with respect to Kendrick that suggested he might be a danger to children, and you initially said there were two events towards the end of your marriage, and you described the first one where he grabbed Candace by the arm. What is the other one? 11:39:32
A. The other one has nothing to do with Candace. It had to do with a incident when Jonathan had visited, was visiting with us, and Neil and myself and Jonathan sitting in their front room, and Jonathan grabbed me, and he started playing like he was going to spank me, because I was bad or 11:39:44 11:40:17 concerning Candace, and some of the events that occurred during her childhood, and then also some things that are more current. 10:10:18 10:10:23 10:10:26

Do you understand that part? 10:10:28

A. Yes, I do. 10:10:29

Q. This is part of a lawsuit that Candace has brought against, among others, the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York and the North Congregation. 10:10:30 10:10:34 10:10:41

Do you understand that part? 10:10:43

A. Yes. 10:10:44

Q. Okay. Are you -- 10:10:45

Were you aware, before today, of the existence of this lawsuit? 10:10:49 10:10:52

A. When I got the subpoena, through that. Yeah. 10:10:55 10:11:00

Q. Have you ever discussed it with Candace? 10:11:02

A. No. No. 10:11:04

Q. As we go through here for the next couple of hours, it may occur that I ask you a question that you don't understand, either because I used words that aren't familiar to you, or I garbled the question, or you didn't hear it. 10:11:09 10:11:11 10:11:14 10:11:16 10:11:20

If for any reason you're not sure of the question, ask me to repeat it or rephrase it. Because that's my job. 10:11:21 10:11:23 10:11:26

Q. And have you worked in the electronics field since completing that training? 10:14:41 10:14:43

A. Yes. 10:14:46

Q. At one time I think you worked at National Semiconductor? 10:14:47 10:14:50

A. Still do. Well, we were bought out by Texas Instruments, but it's still the same company. 10:14:50 10:14:52

Q. And what is the nature of your work? 10:14:54

A. Electronics. We do, we build, semiconductors. And so, I build tests of apparatus to test them, to customer evaluation of boards, things like that. 10:14:57 10:14:59 10:15:03 10:15:07

Q. Do you do engineering work? 10:15:08

A. Yes. 10:15:12

Q. Are you presently a member of the Jehovah's Witnesses? 10:15:12 10:15:15

A. Yes. 10:15:16

Q. And are you serving at present as a Ministerial Servant? 10:15:17 10:15:20

A. Yes, I am. 10:15:22

Q. Which congregation? 10:15:23

A. The Niles Congregation in Fremont. 10:15:24

Q. Were you ever a member of the North Fremont Congregation? 10:15:27 10:15:29

A. Yes, I was. 10:15:29

Q. During approximately what time period? 10:15:30

A. Nineteen eighty... I started attending in 1986. I was baptised in '87. And I was in that congregation until I moved to Salinas in 2003. 10:15:37 10:15:38 10:15:47

Q. Did you ever serve as a Ministerial Servant at the North Fremont Congregation? 10:15:56 10:15:59

A. No, I did not. 10:16:00

Q. Did you hold any position of administrative responsibility in that congregation? 10:16:01 10:16:04

A. No, I did not. 10:16:07

Q. Were you acquainted with Jonathan Kendrick? 10:16:12 10:16:13

A. Yes. 10:16:15

Q. How did you meet Mr. Kendrick? 10:16:15

A. He was a member of the congregation. 10:16:18

Q. And do you recall whether he participated with you in various congregation activities? 10:16:21 10:16:24

A. Yes. 10:16:27

Q. What kinds of activities? 10:16:28

A. Field ministry typically. 10:16:30

That's our most important aspect of what we do. So.... 10:16:32 10:16:36

Q. Did he attend various meetings that you also attended? 10:16:38 10:16:40

A. Yes. 10:16:42

Q. Do you recall that Mr. Kendrick served at the North Congregation as a Ministerial Servant? 10:19:06 10:19:09

A. Yes. During that time. 10:19:13

Q. Did you become aware at some point that he was removed as a Ministerial Servant? 10:19:14 10:19:16

A. Yes. 10:19:18

Q. How did you learn that? 10:19:21

A. Just the duties that he had performed previously, he was not doing those anymore. 10:19:22 10:19:24

Q. Did you learn from any source as to why Mr. Kendrick was removed as a Ministerial Servant? 10:19:32 10:19:33

A. I don't believe so, no. 10:19:36

Q. Did you ever discuss it with Mr. Kendrick? 10:19:38

A. No. 10:19:40

Q. Did you ever, up till today, learn that Mr. Kendrick was involved in some sexual touching of his stepdaughter Andrea? 10:19:51 10:19:56 10:20:01

A. I recall, how to put this, scuttlebutt, hearsay in the congregation. But I don't recall when that was. 10:20:12 10:20:19 10:20:21

I don't -- 10:20:22

I don't think it was necessarily back maybe when it happened. Believe it might have been afterwards. 10:20:23 10:20:26 10:20:29

I don't... I don't know. 10:20:29

some of the activities they might have been involved with. 10:48:59 10:49:00

Again, this is all -- 10:49:01

You know, it's not hearsay but it's -- I'd never talked to her about any of this. 10:49:03 10:49:05

So, only time she called me and talked to me was when she needed money to pay for her telephone, is what she told me. Keep her cell phone running. 10:49:07 10:49:09 10:49:12

So.... 10:49:12

Q. Did you learn about Candace's arrest and some of these other things, the drugs and the bad relationships, through Dorothy? 10:49:17 10:49:21 10:49:23

A. My mom's car was parked outside of her garage for a month, for two months. I thought that was quite suspicious. And I was never invited into her house for that period of time. 10:49:29 10:49:32 10:49:38 10:49:43

So, finally I went over and saw Candace's car in my mom's garage and asked my mom at that time. 10:49:46 10:49:50

So, Candace had already been in jail for two months. I knew she had been in jail, but my mom didn't tell me. My mom likes to keep things to herself, spare the family of any pain and suffering. 10:49:54 10:49:56 10:50:00 10:50:06

Q. Since she reached adulthood, let's say the last five or six years, how would you describe your relationship with Candace? 10:50:12 10:50:15 10:50:17

A. It's been very strained. 10:50:18

Q. And what do you attribute that to? 10:50:22

A. She didn't like my third wife, Carolyn, at all. And that's pretty much when she stopped talking with me. And.... 10:50:24 10:50:27 10:50:35

And we didn't associate at all at that point. 10:50:39 10:50:42

Q. So, would that have gone back, that strained relationship gone back, to Candace's high-school years? 10:50:42 10:50:47 10:50:49

A. Yes. Yes. 10:50:50

Actually, it started in junior high, yeah. 10:50:51

Q. Do you recall Candace being friends with Toi Register? 10:51:22 10:51:26

A. That was someone in the congregation way back. I remember the name. 10:51:38 10:51:40

Q. Do you remember a Brianna Becker? 10:51:45

A. Yeah, I remember the name. Yeah. 10:51:49

Q. Do you have any idea where Brianna Becker is today? 10:51:53 10:51:56

A. I have no idea. 10:51:57

Q. Or anyone from her family? 10:51:58

A. I think her mother and brother are still in Northern California but I don't know. I don't know. I don't know. 10:52:02 10:52:04 10:52:11

Q. Where else have you served as an Elder? 11:37:52

A. Mt. Eden Congregation Hayward. San Leandro North Congregation. 11:37:57 11:38:01

Q. When did you first become an Elder with any of these congregations? 11:38:07 11:38:09

MR. SIMONS: All right.

Q. So, my question to you, Mr. Clarke, is: Is it the practice of Jehovah's Witnesses that information contained in congregation files and papers and reports and minutes, concerning sexual abuse of a minor, must be kept strictly confidential -- as you say in Paragraph 11 of your Affidavit -- to the extent that it cannot be discussed with persons other than your fellow Brother Elders? 11:48:28 11:48:29 11:48:35 11:48:39 11:48:41 11:48:47

A. Yes. 11:48:51

Q. Where does that practice originate? 11:48:52

A. It would -- 11:49:02

It would be in instructions we received in letters. 11:49:04 11:49:14

Q. And that would be letters of instruction from the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York before 2001, 11:49:24 11:49:35 11:49:36

Correct? 11:49:37

A. Not sure but -- 11:49:40

I'm not sure about the date, but we receive many letters. 11:49:43 11:49:45

Q. Okay. 11:49:47

It would include, for whatever period of time Watchtower of New York was providing these letters, it would include that period of time. 11:49:48 11:49:54 11:49:55

A. Yes. 12:01:52

Q. And do you have some recollection, although it might not be complete, of the events that are recorded in this letter? 12:01:54 12:01:56 12:01:59

A. After reviewing the letter, yes, I have some recollection. 12:02:01 12:02:03

Q. It says in the first paragraph: ("We telephoned 11-12-93 and it was suggested that we submit in writing our questions.") 12:02:06 12:02:08 12:02:13

Is the "we" who telephoned yourself and Mr. Abrahamson? 12:02:16 12:02:18

A. I -- That's the logical conclusion because him and I were the two that met with the family. 12:02:20 12:02:22 12:02:25

So, I believe we did a conference call. The two of us, plus Watchtower. 12:02:25 12:02:28

Q. Okay. Who did you speak to at Watchtower when you made that call? 12:02:30 12:02:32

A. Legal Department. I didn't get a name. 12:02:35

Q. Do you know who it was that suggested that you submit the... the questions in writing? 12:02:40 12:02:42

A. Legal. The person I spoke to. But I couldn't tell you his name. 12:02:46 12:02:49

Q. Okay. You recall it was a man. 12:02:50

A. Yes. 12:02:53

Before the meeting of November 11th with Mr. Kendrick and Evelyn Kendrick and Andrea Kendrick, did you and Mr. Abrahamson discuss whether or not you should meet separately with Andrea or Evelyn Kendrick? 12:08:36 12:08:41 12:08:45 12:08:47

A. No. 12:08:53

Q. Did you have, back in 1993, any guidelines from Body of Elder letters or your own experience or any other source as to how to gather information to investigate a report of sexual abuse of a child? 12:08:57 12:09:05 12:09:08 12:09:13

A. No. 12:09:20

Q. So, is it fair to say that you accepted at face value whatever information was given to you in this meeting at the Kendrick home? 12:09:31 12:09:34 12:09:39

A. Yes. 12:09:44

Q. Mr. Kendrick told you that "since he was sorry and his family was willing to forget the abuse," that he felt "he would not have to report it to the congregation elders." Is that correct? 12:09:45 12:09:51 12:09:57 12:10:00

A. Mmm.... That's what he said, yes. 12:10:09

Q. And is that something he said in the meeting on November 11th? Or is it something he said in the telephone conversation? 12:10:16 12:10:19 12:10:22

Or do you recall when he said that? 12:10:25

A. It would have been at the meeting that we had on November the 11th. 12:10:28 12:10:31

Q. Did Mr. Kendrick also tell you that his daughter Andrea was now using the abuse, that she had experienced, as a tool to threaten when she wanted something? 12:10:41 12:10:44 12:10:53 12:10:59

A. Yes. 12:10:59

Q. Mr. Kendrick told you that. 12:11:00

A. Both him and his wife, Evelyn. 12:11:02

Q. Okay. And was that also in the meeting with Andrea present in the Kendrick home? 12:11:05 12:11:07

A. Yes. 12:11:10

Q. And did Mr. Kendrick tell you anything else about why he had chosen November of 1993 to talk to you about this abuse of Andrea, other than "his conscious continued to bother him"? 12:11:13 12:11:15 12:11:17 12:11:19

A. Well, the letter mentions that it had become... it had become known to a friend of the stepdaughter's. 12:11:21 12:11:24 12:11:26

And I believe he indicated, in addition to his conscious, that this would be a reason for us to -- to come over and talk to him about it. 12:11:29 12:11:33 12:11:37

Q. Are you referring to Toi Register? 12:11:38

A. Um... is that her name? Yes. 12:11:39

Q. Okay. 12:11:40

And you discuss that, in the bottom paragraph of the November 16th -- I'm sorry,

There's information here concerning Toi Register having had her chest, quote, "accidentally touched," end quote, by Mr. Kendrick. 12:11:42 12:11:47 12:11:50

Was it Mr. Kendrick that told you that? 12:11:51

A. Boy. This was repeated to us by.... 12:11:53

I don't know where that information -- how we gathered it. It might have been mentioned by the stepdaughter. We -- 12:11:53 12:11:56 12:12:01

We did not talk with Toi Register. 12:12:06

Q. Okay. 12:12:10

Was there any reason that you did not talk to Toi Register to see if the touching of her chest by Brother Kendrick was actually accidental, as opposed to intentional? 12:12:11 12:12:13 12:12:19 12:12:23

A. I don't remember why we did not talk with her. 12:12:24 12:12:26

Q. Were you concerned on November 15th, 1993, that there might be other young girls who Brother Kendrick had been touching in their breasts? 12:12:32 12:12:35 12:12:43

A. Can you please repeat that? 12:12:45

Q. Yeah. 12:12:49

During this meeting of November 11th, you learned that there had been some touching of Toi Register and some touching of Andrea by Mr. Kendrick. 12:12:53 12:12:58 12:13:06 12:13:08

Were you concerned at that time that there might be other children who, other girls who, he had been touching? 12:13:18 12:13:20 12:13:24

A. I don't recall what I was thinking back then. 12:13:29 12:13:40

Q. Did you or Mr. Abrahamson do anything to find out whether there were other girls that he had been touching? 12:13:42 12:13:44 12:13:46

A. I... I don't recall, no. 12:13:48

Q. Did you notify law enforcement of the information that you received about the touching of these two girls by Mr. Kendrick? 12:13:49 12:13:52 12:13:55

A. No. 12:13:57

Q. Why not? 12:14:02

A. Um... Legal, our Legal Department, advised me. 12:14:08 12:14:09

MR. MC CABE: I'm gonna object. This, I'm not gonna ask -- 12:14:13 12:14:16

I'm gonna ask you not to say what they advised you. But you can just say that you contacted the Legal Department and you acted accordingly. 12:14:20 12:14:24 12:14:33

MR. SCHNACK: I'll join in that objection. 12:14:37

MR. SIMONS: Yeah, and that -- If it's -- If the answer is on advice of counsel, from the Legal Department, that's fine. 12:14:39 12:14:45 12:14:48

Q. So, Mr. Clarke, is the reason that you didn't notify law enforcement in 1993, of the information you had received concerning Jonathan Kendrick's sexual abuse of Andrea Kendrick and touching of Toi Register, was that reason because of the advice of -- that you had received from Counsel? 12:21:41 12:21:42 12:21:44 12:21:48 12:21:52 12:22:01 12:22:03

MR. MC CABE: I'm going to object to that question because it asks to invade the attorney-client privilege; and it also assumes facts not in evidence, that there was a mandatory reporting statute in 1993 for clergy, when I think the facts show that that didn't come into play until 1996. 12:22:05 12:22:06 12:22:09 12:22:12 12:22:16 12:22:20

MR. SCHNACK: I'll join in the objections. 12:22:22

MR. SIMONS: Let me withdraw the question and ask you this. 12:22:24 12:22:25

Q. Why didn't you report the sexual abuse of Andrea Kendrick and the possible sexual abuse of Toi Register to law enforcement in 1993? 12:22:27 12:22:30 12:22:37

MR. SCHNACK: I'm going to object to the extent it requires him to divulge attorney-client communications. 12:22:40 12:22:41 12:22:45

MR. MC CABE: Join. 12:22:45

THE WITNESS: On the advice of counsel. We were... 12:22:48 12:22:51 for?

A. Picking up children, hugging children, kissing children, things of that nature.

Q. Was Mr. Kendrick prohibited from going into territories to do preaching and spreading the word?

A. No.

Q. Was he prohibited from going into neighborhoods to spread the word when he was in the company of children?

A. We....

I don't recall how we limited that. I could just say that when he came out or met to go out into the ministry, we did our best to make sure he worked with an adult, and preferably one of us, you know, one of the Elders.

Q. Did you have any concern that Mr. Kendrick would be at risk to molest another girl in a setting outside of the direct activities of the congregation?

A. Please repeat?

I'm sorry.

MR. SCHNACK: I was going to say, I was going to object to it. I don't know what you mean by "direct activities" as opposed to "indirect activities."

A. Is it this (indicating)? 12:57:56

Q. That. Very good. 12:57:57

Question 6: "Are members of congregation aware of sin?" And the answer was "no." 12:57:59 12:58:02

Correct? 12:58:04

A. Yes. Other than the family. 12:58:08

Q. What was the reason that the congregation was not notified that Mr. Kendrick had been involved in child sexual abuse? 12:58:14 12:58:16 12:58:24

A. We don't make that public to the congregation. That's confidential. 12:58:27 12:58:30

Q. And what -- 12:58:35

And that's the policy and the practice of Jehovah's Witnesses that you learned as an Elder. 12:58:37 12:58:40

Correct? 12:58:45

A. Yes. 12:58:47

Q. Where does that policy and practice originate from? 12:58:48 12:58:51

A. Letters. 12:58:57

Q. Letters from Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc.? 12:58:58 12:59:01

A. Yes. 12:59:01

Q. During your many years of service as an Elder, has that policy changed? 12:59:18 12:59:20

A. No. 12:59:25

use words and answer out loud with words. So if from time to time, as you just did, you affirmatively or negatively indicate something with an uh-huh or an huh-uh, I'm going to ask you, is that a yes or is that a no.

A Thank you.

Q And I am certainly not intending to be rude by that, but I need the court reporter to have a word answer. Very good?

A I'll do that.

Q You understand that you have promised to tell the truth today just as if you were in a court?

A Yes.

Q First of all, I want to ask you some questions about the Fremont Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses North Unit.

Are you familiar with that organizational name?

A We wouldn't say "North Unit," but the North Congregation of Fremont, yes.

Q I have been provided through counsel with various documents, including some Articles of Incorporation that were filed with the Secretary of State. They refer formally to the name Fremont, California Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses North

Unit.

Do you know whether or not that is the official title of the corporation that you call the Fremont North?

A Yes. We used to use that term "unit," probably back when these bylaws were established, so it probably would be very accurate back then.

Q All right. Do you know what the official name of the corporation is now if it's different?

A I would think it's the same.

Q The corporation was incorporated in 1975, according to the documents that I have received. Does that sound correct to your knowledge?

A That sounds correct.

Q How long have you been an elder in the -- in this congregation?

A Since I moved into the congregation, and I believe it was 1986.

Q Before that time, 1986, did you serve as an elder in any other congregation?

A Yes. Before that time I served in the congregation -- I believe it would be called the Mountain View Congregation and perhaps Central, Central Mountain View.

Q Can you tell me approximately the year in responsibilities you have in that general area?

A In that general area the responsibilities I have are as what we call a service overseer. So I would be concerned with the literature that comes into the congregation and its distribution as well as the coverage of our territory in the preaching work, also be concerned about the different Bible studies that are being conducted in the congregation.

Q Are there other elders in the Fremont North Congregation at present?

A Yes.

Q Approximately how many?

A I would say 12.

Q And what is the approximate size of the congregation today?

A About 110.

Q If we were to go back in time to the mid-1990s, do you have an estimate then as to the number of elders, approximately?

A I would estimate eight, but it's just an estimation.

Q And the size of the congregation at that time, approximately 15 to 20 years ago.

A I'm sure those records might be available, but I would hesitate to guess.

Q Do you have a general impression as to whether the membership has grown larger in that specific congregation since the mid-1990s, smaller or is about the same?

A There have certainly been a lot of new ones that have come in but others have moved away, so it might be fair to say that it was around the same.

Q You mentioned the term "service overseer." What is a service overseer?

A A service overseer is a -- an appointment as an -- he must be an elder, and it's an appointment to oversee the departments that I mentioned to you, literature, and we call our -- preaching work is our service to God. So anything that involves the preaching work would be something that I would be quite interested in.

Q To become an elder, is there a process of, I'll call it like a ladder, steps in a ladder that one must go through in preparation for assuming that title and position?

A Well, what we use are the Bible requirements. All of Jehovah's Witnesses, before they're baptized, must take a knowledge, repent, act upon the knowledge, obey what they find from the Scriptures. But in addition to that, elders would be of the meetings on the scheduled -- or I should say in addition to the quarterly meetings.

A And you're asking when the Body of Elders would meet together to discuss something?

Q Yes.

A Might be as frequent as once a month to once every two months.

Q Are there regular gatherings of the entire congregation?

A At our meetings, yes.

Q And how frequently in Fremont North would there be regular gatherings of the entire congregation?

A During that period?

Q Yes, mid-1990s.

A Yes. They would gather for five meetings a week, and generally these would take place on three different days.

Q Would the nature of each of the five meetings a week be the same or would there be a different purpose for some of the meetings than others?

A Yes, different purpose.

Q What would the various purposes be for the meetings?

A Well, we would have a public talk which is designed for new ones, and also the congregation benefits from that as well. Then we would have a discussion of the Watchtower article for the week, which we're encouraged to study beforehand, and we can freely comment; new ones can comment as well.

And then we have what is called the Theocratic Ministry School, where it gives us training in our ministry. And then we have a service meeting which helps us in our field service, to different aspects of that. And then we had a congregation book study and that was usually midweek.

Q In addition to the five meetings a week, are there regular services of some kind in what I will call a religious setting?

A Okay. The only other meetings that we have throughout the week would be meetings for field ministry, where we get together for a few minutes, discuss the presentation, get direction from the brother taking the lead, meaning what territory we would go in.

Q In some religions there is a regular service, if you will, administered or presided over by a pastor or minister or priest depending on the various religious organizations. Is there such a and we encourage them to attend with their parents.

Q And is it correct that many children or minors will attend these meetings and have throughout your years of service as an elder?

A Depending upon how many are in the area and your definition of "many."

Q Would it be accurate to say that children, some children, regularly attend each of the five meetings?

A Yes.

Q In your experience, do children sometimes attend the meetings without their parents being present?

A Yes, they do, but of course they would have to arrange transportation to get there, and so somebody would take oversight of that individual to get them to the meeting and to return them home.

Q When you say "somebody," can you tell me what kind of somebody you're thinking of?

A The parents would arrange for somebody.

Q A person, another member of the congregation?

A Could -- yeah, undoubtedly.

Q During the years that you have served as an elder, has it come to your attention that there is from time to time the risk of children being subject to sexual abuse by adults?

A We're very cautious about that as an organization. We have had a lot of instruction to watch individuals like that very carefully.

Q Who has provided the instruction that you are referring to?

A It's been provided in the Watchtower magazine.

Q What is the general nature of your understanding of -- when you say to watch these individuals very carefully, what are you referring to specifically? What do you watch?

A Okay. We watch them, that if they need to use the rest -- well, that that individual -- are we talking about a known sex offender?

Q Well, I don't know. That's why I am asking you. When you said, we watch over those individuals very carefully, I wasn't sure who you were referring to --

A Okay.

Q -- on either end.

A Maybe be specific.

Q Okay.

A Yeah.

Q What has been the general practice, as far as you are aware, in observing within the congregation to attempt to identify anyone who may be a risk for abusing children sexually?

A I don't quite understand that question.

Q Fair enough. Has it been the practice within the congregation during your years of service to have some observations within the interactions of the members of the congregation in an effort to identify any possible children who may be at risk for sexual abuse?

A Well, I think you would say all children would be at risk for sexual abuse.

Q Why would you say that?

A Because we live in a world that's very corrupt.

Q What has been the practice within the North Congregation of attempting to identify specific children, if there has been such practice, who may be at risk for sexual abuse?

A Identifying the children?

Q Yes.

A Well, we treat -- we feel all of our children are precious, so we would watch after all of the children.

Q Do you understand it's the -- it refers to the kind of conduct that an adult may engage in to develop a bond with the child as a prelude to selecting and then sexually molesting or abusing them?

A Yes. That's been quite identified in our magazines.

Q Have you -- strike that. Let me go back.

In your years of service as an elder, has there been any specific practice or policy that has been followed in an effort to identify grooming behavior on the part of adults with regard to children in the congregation?

A We are all familiar with the material that has been published in the Watchtower magazine. We try to apply the counsel of that material. If -- it says for us to be careful about even close family members, aunts, uncles, things like that. If there is something suspicious that we have noted, we would definitely talk to the individual.

Q How would you have determined what might or might not be suspicious activity on the part of an adult with regard to a child in terms of the subject that we're discussing?

A Perhaps they -- you notice that there is a brother or sister, a lot of the children congregating around them, and maybe that might be an indicator that they're grooming, and so ask yourself, what -- are they ever alone with children, what would be the circumstance. But again, we don't -- they're not guilty until they show themselves that they are.

Q In terms of what conduct you might be sensitive to as potential grooming behavior, has your knowledge changed in that regard from the period -- let us go back to the mid-1990s to the present?

A I think we would be a little more educated on some of the red flags.

Q And in what way?

A In perhaps identifying traits and being aware of situations. And again, it's primarily through the parents, helping the parents, because we're not there in their homes and they know who they invite in their homes. They know who they trust their children with. So it's really up to the parents to monitor.

And if we came by some knowledge that this individual is very suspicious and their child was involved with that, then we would talk to that parent.

Q When you say "traits," what traits are you referring to in your last answer?

A I used the word traits?

category, so give your counsel time to object.

Did you speak to Evelyn Kendrick concerning any allegations involving sexual abuse of her daughter Andrea by Mr. Kendrick, Jonathan Kendrick?

MR. McCABE: Objection. Instruct the witness not to answer on the same basis.

MR. SIMONS: Again, can we agree that any questions involving reports or communications from Evelyn Kendrick would fall under the umbrella of your objections?

MR. McCABE: Yes.

BY MR. SIMONS:

Q Did you at any time notify any secular law enforcement agency of any information concerning possible sexual abuse of children by Mr. Kendrick?

A I did not.

Q Do you know whether anyone within the congregation Body of Elders did so?

A I am not aware of anybody doing so, no.

Q What was the policy that was in place in the mid-1990s regarding reporting possible sexual abuse of a child by an adult to secular law enforcement agencies?

A I'm -- I don't know for sure. I would have to look it up. I know currently we are to call the secular authorities, but back -- but we actually would call legal first and find out what the laws of California state and they would direct us.

Q All right. And when you say "legal," who are you referring to?

A To New York and the legal department.

Q Which legal department in New York again specifically are you referring to?

A I think there is just the one.

Q Is that part of the Watchtower New York corporation to your understanding?

A Yes, I believe it would be.

Q We had talked earlier about the congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses. Is the legal department at present, to your understanding, if you have one, part of the Jehovah's Witnesses congregation entity, or is it part of The Watchtower Bible and Tract New York corporation, if you know?

A I don't know.

Q Fair enough. Back in the 1990s, would the legal department have been part of the New York corporation?

A I would not know.

Q Without telling me anything specific that may have been said -- I don't want the content of any congregation that he is reproved, he's been reproved by the congregation committee.

Q And what does the term "reproved" refer to as you are using it there?

A Disciplined.

Q When a person is removed from an office, such as ministerial servant, is the congregation advised that that individual -- and again, I'm talking about the membership advised -- that that individual no longer is serving as a ministerial servant?

A Yes.

Q Is the congregation told -- again, the members told -- why that individual is no longer serving as a ministerial servant?

A No.

Q During your many years of service as an elder, has there been any change in any of those processes that we have just discussed, the notification of disfellowship or reproval or of removal from an office and the fact that the reason for such action is not disclosed? Has that been the standard practice during all your years of service?

A Yes.

Q Was there any inquiry from a congregation in Oakley to the Fremont North Congregation concerning term?

A Officially by -- I was --

Q Aside from anything you learned through counsel. Again --

A Okay.

Q -- those conversations are always not included in my questions.

A Okay. So, no.

(Document referred to herein marked for identification Exhibit No. 2)

BY MR. SIMONS:

Q If you can turn to Exhibit 2. And let me perhaps ask you some questions generally about these Body of Elder letters.

What do you understand is the purpose of the various letters, not the individual letters but of the -- what do you understand is the purpose of providing of Bodies of Elders letters to elders such as yourself?

A If there were some adjustments that needed to be made, maybe areas that we hadn't previously addressed could be addressed and then they're giving us more detail.

Q All right. Is one of the functions of an elder to carry out the policies of the national entity corporation that was formerly Watchtower New York and is now Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses?

A Yes. You agree to that when you are baptized.

Q What specifically do you agree to at that time in your oath or affirmation?

A That you recognize The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society or the Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses is dispensing spiritual truth and that you are bound to live up to the Bible counsel that is revealed through the entity.

Q In some of these Body of Elder letters, for example, Exhibit 1, the March 10th, 1983 letter concerning the form, it appears that the content is not theological, if you will, but is specifically addressing an administrative task, the main incent -- completion of this particular form.

Do you understand that elders are required to comply with the instructions set forth in Body of Elder letters such as Exhibit 1?

A Yes.

Q What is the basis of that understanding? In other words, why do you believe that?

A Could you rephrase your question?

Q Yes. Why do you understand the elders are required to follow the instructions contained in Bodies of Elder letters such as Exhibit 1?

A What is the benefit to the elders?

Q No. What is the reason that you as an elder are required to follow the instructions contained in a Body of Elder letter such as Exhibit 1?

A Right. So when you are on a Body of Elders, you are representing Jehovah God and the organization as it is used on Earth today, so we accept that and we would try conscientiously to do everything that we can to perform what's outlined in the letters.

Q Do Bodies of Elders in the individual congregations have the discretion to depart from instructions contained in Bodies of Elders letters that have been sent previously by Watchtower New York and now by the congregation?

A No.

Q Let's turn to Exhibit 2. Do you recall receiving or reviewing this September 20th, 1984 Body of Elder letter?

A No.

Q In reviewing it, are you familiar with the procedures set forth in this letter?

Taken Before CHARLOTTE C. ROCHE, C.S.R.

Certified Shorthand Reporter License No. 4486

County of Alameda, State of California

(Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 11 marked for identification.) 09:13:38 09:13:38

MR. SIMONS: Q. Have you actually seen this Order before? 09:13:44 09:13:45

A. If I had it would only be through counsel. 09:13:52

Q. Okay. 09:13:54

Do you understand that those questions, that we had some disagreement about and that you were instructed not to answer, are going to come up again today, and that at least for some of those questions, there has been an Order by the Court that they would be answered? 09:13:57 09:13:58 09:14:01 09:14:07 09:14:09 09:14:11

A. Yes. 09:14:12

Q. Okay, fair enough. Thank you. 09:14:13

Let me start with the first question that we dealt with, and that was involving Jonathan Kendrick in his removal as a Ministerial Servant. 09:14:14 09:14:22 09:14:25

Why was Mr. Kendrick removed as a Ministerial Servant? 09:14:28 09:14:31

A. He was removed because of improper conduct. He was no longer irreprehensible or free from accusation. 09:14:32 09:14:34 09:14:38

Q. And what was the conduct that was involved in that removal? 09:14:41 09:14:44

A. It was the conduct of, he admitted to 09:14:47 touching briefly and inadvertently his stepdaughter's breast, which was over the clothing. 09:14:51 09:14:56

Q. Um-hum. 09:14:59

Did he make this admission to you? 09:15:01

A. He did make the admission to myself, myself and another brother. 09:15:04 09:15:08

Q. Okay. Where did that admission occur? 09:15:10

A. It occurred at their house. 09:15:15

Q. Not the conduct but the conversation in which he admitted it. 09:15:18 09:15:21

A. The conversation. Right. Right. 09:15:23

Q. Okay. And when you say "at their house," was that -- 09:15:24 09:15:26

A. The Kendricks' house. 09:15:26

Q. Okay. 09:15:28

At the time that that conversation occurred, was that the house that Evelyn Kendrick, Andrea Kendrick, and Jonathan Kendrick were all residing at? 09:15:30 09:15:33 09:15:36 09:15:40

A. Correct. 09:15:41

Q. Although Andrea, I guess, is not a Kendrick. 09:15:41 09:15:44

A. That would be true. 09:15:45

Q. Yes. Okay. 09:15:46

Who was present during this conversation? 09:15:47

A. The three of them, plus myself and another brother, Michael Clarke. 09:15:50 09:15:53

Q. And how was it that you came to the Kendrick home to have this conversation? 09:15:56 09:16:00

A. It was prearranged. 09:16:03

Q. Was there something that generated the conversation and the arrangements to go and meet with the Kendricks? 09:16:06 09:16:12 09:16:15

A. Yes. 09:16:18

Q. What was that? 09:16:19

A. Well, they, uh -- 09:16:27

I think Jonathan went to Brother Clarke and confessed it. So, as a body we met and decided to form an investigating committee. 09:16:29 09:16:31 09:16:35

Q. All right. And when you say "as a body we met," are you talking about the Elders of the North Congregation? 09:16:36 09:16:39 09:16:41

A. Yes, I am. 09:16:42

Q. Do you know who the original conversation, the very first conversation that occurred involving this touching, was with in terms of someone from the Kendrick family and someone from the Body of Elders? 09:16:46 09:16:49 09:16:52 09:16:56

A. I do not know. Cannot remember if I ever knew. 09:17:00 09:17:03

Q. Okay. How did you first hear about it? 09:17:04

A. She was on a couch, so, it's wherever some couch would fit. 09:20:56 09:21:02

Q. Did Evelyn Kendrick say anything to you in this meeting that was different or a disagreement with anything that Jonathan Kendrick said? 09:21:07 09:21:11 09:21:17

A. I don't believe so. 09:21:20

Q. Did you ever speak to Evelyn Kendrick about this subject outside the presence of Jonathan Kendrick? 09:21:24 09:21:26 09:21:29

A. No. 09:21:31

Q. Did you ever speak to Andrea outside the presence of Jonathan Kendrick? 09:21:32 09:21:34

A. No. 09:21:37

Q. Do you know whether any of the Elders spoke to Andrea outside the presence of Jonathan Kendrick? 09:21:38 09:21:40 09:21:44

A. I would not know. 09:21:46

Q. How about Evelyn? 09:21:48

A. I would not know. 09:21:49

Q. Was the community, meaning the congregation -- 09:22:04 09:22:07

Are those words interchangeable, "community" and "congregation"? Is there a.... 09:22:10 09:22:12

A. I imagine you could use that word. We're not accustom to that word. 09:22:16 09:22:19

REPORTED BY: PAULETTE RADCLIFF, CSR No. 12111

FILE NO. A50931C

A. No, she did not.

Q. Did she tell you that abuse had taken place at Mr. Kendrick's home?

A. No, she did not never mention anything about his home. 12:16:30

Q. Did she tell you what type of abuse, other than the hugs at the kingdom hall and assembly hall?

A. No, she didn't.

Q. Okay. After you got the first telephone call, what did you do in response to her report that 12:16:40 Jonathan Kendrick had abused her as a child?

A. She gave me the number of someone in the Oakley congregation. I don't remember the overseer's name. I had a conversation with him, and he did confirm that Jonathan Kendrick was a convicted sex 12:16:56 offender.

Q. And the person that you talked to in the Oakley congregation, you can't remember his name?

A. No, I can't.

Q. Okay. Did you -- were you led to believe 12:17:14 that that person was a elder?

A. Yes, he was.

Q. After this phone call with the elder in the Oakley congregation where he confirmed that Jonathan Kendrick was a registered sex offender or convicted 12:17:27 or not for purposes of notifying law enforcement?

A. No.

Q. Who would be the person to determine that?

A. She would.

Q. Did you feel that she was truthful with you? 12:27:22

A. Initially yes.

Q. Did that view change?

A. Yes.

Q. When did it change?

A. When she -- just by -- just the change in 12:27:41 attitude.

Q. Okay. What are you describing when you say "change in attitude"?

A. Just her emotional makeup.

Q. And tell me what you observed or heard in 12:28:18 terms of this change in her emotional makeup?

A. Maybe now a little more distant.

Q. Distant from you?

A. Yes.

Q. What do you mean by a "little more distant"? 12:28:35

A. Initially she wanted -- when she brought this up, she wanted to make sure that this would never happen to anybody else, and I explained to her the protocol that's in place that if this was true, that it would not happen to anybody else. 12:29:04

Q. Okay. How does that change or how does that then lead to her change in her emotional makeup?

A. Because she just didn't seem satisfied that the protocol was enough.

Q. And what did she either say or how did she express to you by her body language or her words that the protocol was not enough? 12:29:28

A. She just was not satisfied with that.

Q. What was the protocol that you described to her would prevent this from ever happening again? 12:29:53

A. That if he was, which he is convicted, that if he was in a congregation, that the overseers or elders would make sure that he would never be in the presence of a child alone, and that even if he moved to another congregation, the overseers or elders in that congregation, they would be informed that he has problem with children and that he should never be alone in the meetings or out in the field service alone with a child. 12:30:19

Q. Has that protocol been in place for all of these many decades that you have served as an elder? 12:30:39

A. Yes.

Q. And is that protocol one that is just limited to the southern California area here in the different congregations that you've served in? 12:30:56 servant in the Jehovah's Witnesses North Fremont Congregation?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know the approximate years that you served as a ministerial servant?

A. No. I guess -- if you're asking for a guess, is that --

Q. Well, I'm asking for an approximation, which is --

A. Approximation?

Q. -- yeah, different than a guess. If you have no idea whatsoever, that would be a guess. If you have an estimate, including maybe the decades, then I'm entitled to your estimate.

A. '88, maybe, to '91.

Q. All right. Did you also serve as an elder in the North Fremont Congregation?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you recall the approximate time frame in which you served as an elder?

A. '91 to '94.

Q. When was it that you moved to Florida?

A. 2004.

Q. And before moving to Florida did you continue to live in California?

Q. Do you recall doing field service with Mr. Kendrick on any occasions?

A. I do not recall, but I probably did because I worked with everybody.

Q. Did you know the Conti family during the time that you were at North Fremont?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you know Neal Conti?

A. Yes.

Q. How did you come to meet Neal Conti?

A. Same way.

Q. During the time that you knew Neal Conti, was he married?

A. Yes.

Q. During those years that you were in the North Fremont Congregation were you married to Carolyn?

A. Yes.

Q. And did that marriage result in a separation between the two of you in August of 1994?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall whether or not your disfellowshipping occurred before or after the separation of yourself and Carolyn?

A. Before.

Q. During the time that you were an elder at North

Fremont did you learn of a sexual molestation of a minor girl by Jonathan Kendrick?

A. No.

Q. Up until I just raised this issue and excluding any conversations you may have had with Mr. McCabe -- well, actually let me stop for a moment.

Jim, in the beginning of the deposition you listed the parties you are representing. Are you also representing Mr. Inman for today's deposition?

MR. McCABE: That's correct.

MR. SIMONS: Okay.

Q. Mr. Inman, I'm going to ask you questions about some conversations, but I do not want you to include in any answer any conversation you had with Mr. McCabe in his role as your attorney for this deposition. Do you understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. In other words, any conversation you may have had with him, treat it as if it does not exist for purposes of my question.

A. I understand.

Q. Thank you. Other than what you may have gathered from my question a moment ago about Mr. Kendrick, had you ever heard from anyone that he was involved in the molestation of his step-daughter?

DEPOSITION OF MANUEL IGLESIAS

Monday, January 23, 2012

Taken Before CHARLOTTE C. ROCHE, C.S.R.

Certified Shorthand Reporter License No. 4486

County of Alameda, State of California

Q. So, in either of the depositions that you have had in the past, were they cases in which someone was suing you or you were suing someone else or you were directly involved in the case?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

Can you describe for me what kind of cases you had your deposition taken in twice before?

A. Work related.

Q. And are you an Elder in a congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses at the present time?

A. Yes.

Q. Which congregation?

A. Oakley.

Q. How long have you been an Elder in the Oakley Congregation?

A. My memory's bad. I don't remember.

Q. Is it more than 20 years?

A. No.

Q. Do you recall whether or not you were an Elder in the Oakley Congregation in 2003?

A. Yes.

Q. Before the Oakley Congregation, were you ever an Elder in any other congregation?

A. No.

Q. Has he been a member of the Oakley Congregation the entire time that you have been acquainted with him?

A. Yes.

Q. Has Mr. Kendrick ever been disfellowshipped during the time that he was in Oakley?

A. No.

Q. Has he been reproved during the time that he's been in Oakley?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell me approximately the time frame of that reproval?

A. I can't remember.

Q. Was it more than a year ago?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall why he was reproved?

A. Yes.

 Q. Why?

MR. MC CABE: I'm going to object to that. Calls for confidential information which is subject to the privilege of priest-penitential communications.

THE WITNESS: That information is private.

MR. SIMONS: All right. We have had some discussions with the Court on what is and is not confidential, and let's see, who's representing the witness?

MR. MC CABE: We both are. We both are.

MR. SIMONS: All right.

So, you know, in my view, the ruling of the Court already establishes that this is not a confidential communication. But I heard your objection. Nonetheless, I did not hear an instruction not to answer. So, where are we?

MR. MC CABE: I'm not instructing him not to answer.

MR. SCHNACK: And I'm joining in the objection, but I'm also not instructing him not to answer.

MR. SIMONS: Q. Okay, your attorney is not instructing you "not" to answer that question.

So, we've made an objection. There's no judge or jury here. We're not in the courtroom. So, the testimony you give may be subject to some later proceedings.

 However, I'd ask you again to answer my question; what was Mr. Kendrick reproved for?

A. That's private information.

Q. Okay. So, are you refusing to answer the question even though your attorney has is not instructing you to do so?

A. Yes.

Q. Has Jonathan Kendrick been married during the time that he's been a member of the Oakley Congregation?

A. Yes.

Q. And to whom has he been married?

A. Linda Kendrick. Linda is his wife.

Q. Are they still married, to your knowledge?

A. Yes.

Q. Is Linda Kendrick a member in good standing of the congregation?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall a time when an individual named Joshua Hood came to you with a report of sexual abuse of his daughter by Jonathan Kendrick?

A. I remember some, some talks with Josh.

Q. Okay. Did you know Joshua Hood before those talks occurred?

A. Vaguely.

Q. In what context did you know him?

A. He was Linda's son.

Q. Was Joshua Hood a member of the congregation?

A. No.

Q. How was Joshua Hood's report first brought to your attention?

A. I can't remember.

Q. Okay. Did you talk to Joshua Hood yourself?
A. Yes.
Q. And was that in person or on the phone?
A. I can't remember.
Q. All right.
A. I'm sorry.
Q. That's fine.

Do you recall having more than one conversation with Joshua Hood about the subject of sexual abuse of a child by Jonathan Kendrick?

A. I can't remember, I'm sorry.
Q. All right.

Before you had your first conversation with Joshua Hood on the subject, were you aware, from communications provided to you from the North Fremont Congregation, that Jonathan Kendrick had a prior history of the molestation of a child?

A. No.
Q. As we sit here today, have you learned, from communications from the North Fremont Congregation, that Jonathan Kendrick was reproved there for molestation of a child?
A. Can you repeat the question?
Q. Yes.

As you sit here today, are you aware that

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Other than Jonathan Kendrick and Joshua Hood, did you, Mr. Dominguez and Mr. Bentley speak with anyone else regarding the accusation in terms of the family, the Hood-Kendrick family?

A. I can't remember.

Q. For example, did you talk to the mother of the child? Melissa?

A. I can't remember.

Q. Did you talk to Linda Hood Kendrick?

A. As a group of three?

Q. Yes.

A. I can't remember.

Q. Before this investigation, had you participated in any other judicial investigations of any kind?

A. Yes.

Q. Had any of those involved sexual abuse claims involving a child?

A. No.

Q. What did Mr. Kendrick tell you when you interviewed him?

MR. MC CABE: I'm going to object to that as, calls for him to testify about confidential communications made in a penitential matter.

Under the Evidence Code he doesn't have to testify to it.

MR. SCHNACK: I join in the objection.

MR. SIMONS: Q. (Indicating.)

A. That was private information.

Q. The attorneys have not instructed you not to answer that question. So, I'm going to ask you again to provide an answer with the understanding that this is a deposition, not a trial; and questions as to whether this is evidence that may ever be heard in a trial are matters that will be taken up by a judge at a later date.

I will repeat the question.

 What did Mr. Kendrick tell you at the time that you interviewed him as part of this investigation?

A. It's private information.

Q. So, you're going to refuse to answer that question even though your attorneys have not so instructed you.

A. Yes.

Q. Well, I apologize for bringing you a fairly long distance at some inconvenience.

I really think that the questions, the two questions that have come up, are so central to the rest of the questions that I need to ask you... which are not particularly numerous but are directly related to this

Q. Did you have any discussion with either Mr. Dominguez, Mr. Sanchez, Mr. Bentley or any of the other Elders at Oakley as to whether or not the information that you had received... concerning the accusation of sexual abuse of a child by Mr. Kendrick... should be reported to the police?

A. I can't remember.

Q. Do you recall having any conversation about whether or not anyone should have any communication to the police concerning Mr. Kendrick?

A. I don't remember.

MR. SIMONS: All right, well, that doesn't get us much farther, but I think that's all we're going to do today.

We're going to have some judicial determination, that means by a judge, of whether or not the questions... that you have indicated are private, in your mind... need to be answered.

I do need to ask you this one last question though.

 If there is an Order from a Court that the questions -- involving what you have deemed are private matters -- must be answered, will you comply with that Order?

MR. MC CABE: I would object. That calls for predicting the future, speculation.

But if you can answer that question, answer.

THE WITNESS: Yeah; I won't. That's private information.

MR. SIMONS: All right, very good.

Thank you, sir.

CLAUDIA NANCY FRANCIS

Monday, October 24, 2011

Taken Before CHARLOTTE C. ROCHE, C.S.R.

Certified Shorthand Reporter License No. 4486

County of Alameda, State of California

Q. Are you a member of any congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses at present? 10:07:15 10:07:18

A. Yes, I am. 10:07:20

Q. Which congregation? 10:07:22

A. We are in the Mountain View French Congregation. 10:07:23 10:07:25

Q. Were you a member at any time of the North Fremont Congregation? 10:07:26 10:07:29

A. Yes. 10:07:29

Q. Can you give me an estimate as to the years? 10:07:30 10:07:32

A. We were there from 1989 until four years ago. Is that 2006? '7? 10:07:35 10:07:41

Q. '7? Somewhere in there? 10:07:45

A. Yeah. 10:07:47

Q. All right. Was your husband ever a, either, Ministerial Servant or Elder at the North Congregation? 10:07:48 10:07:54 10:07:57

A. Yes, he was. 10:07:58

Q. Did he hold both titles there? 10:07:58

A. Yes, he did. 10:08:02

Q. Do you have an estimate as to the years approximately that he was a member at -- I mean, I'm sorry, a Ministerial Servant at North Fremont? 10:08:04 10:08:07 10:08:11

A. Honestly I don't have an exact year. I 10:08:16

a moment? 10:30:35

A. Let's continue. 10:30:36

Q. Okay. If you need a break at any time, just, we're all -- 10:30:37 10:30:39

A. Thank you. 10:30:40

Q. -- perfectly patient and understand this is some very personal and, to a certain degree, unpleasant information. 10:30:41 10:30:42 10:30:48

So, again, I apologize for going through it with you. 10:30:49 10:30:50

When Mr. Kendrick gave you this remark that you've just described and then slammed the door and left, was that the first time that you had heard from any source of a possible molestation of Andrea? 10:30:52 10:30:59 10:31:02 10:31:05

A. Yes. I had no... um-um (shakes head). 10:31:10

Q. Okay. 10:31:14

A. Things like that are handled in a congregation, in a confidential style. Very confidential. A person's dignity is kept intact. And it's not for publication. 10:31:14 10:31:16 10:31:20 10:31:25

Q. What, if anything, did you understand was the reason that Mr. Kendrick was removed as a Ministerial Servant at the time that the announcement of that removal was made? 10:31:29 10:31:32 10:31:36 10:31:39

A. I had no idea. 10:31:40

Q. Did you ask anyone? 10:31:42

A. Um-um (shakes head). 10:31:44

Q. Did you ask Mr. Kendrick, for example? 10:31:46

A. Nope. 10:31:50

Q. Did you ask your husband? 10:31:50

A. Nope. 10:31:52

Q. Why not? 10:31:52

A. You just don't do that. 10:31:53

Q. Okay. 10:31:56

A. We're -- It's none of my business. And we're -- 10:31:57 10:32:01

We're called "brothers and sisters." We normally don't go around stabbing each other in the back or slitting our throats. It's based on love. And, um, it's -- 10:32:01 10:32:04 10:32:07 10:32:13

It's unfortunate. But it's... I'm going to go up on a limb here. 10:32:15 10:32:22

I have a son who is no longer a Jehovah's Witness. He is what is called "disfellowshipped." 10:32:24 10:32:28

What he did was never, ever announced or broadcast. Unless I would speak of it to a friend, no one would ever know. 10:32:32 10:32:37 10:32:41

That's just not done. That's the way it's handled, with privacy and respect. 10:32:44 10:32:48

Q. Okay. 10:32:49

A. Yes; I believe. Yes. 10:36:55

And now I believe he's a sex addict. And 10:36:58
a predator. 10:37:01

And he would complain that Evelyn -- 10:37:09
Evelyn moved out of the bedroom, so, he -- they didn't 10:37:10 sleep together for seven years. Something like that. 10:37:13

And so, it really fried him when Andrea 10:37:17 was bringing her boyfriend home, having sex with him, 10:37:20
he was in the house. 10:37:24

It's like: She's getting it and he isn't. 10:37:25
I know that would be his way of looking at it, thinking 10:37:28
it. So.... 10:37:30

Q. In the information that I have received, 10:37:35 there's a reference to Jonathan Kendrick purchasing a 10:37:37 black bra for a -- for a girl. 10:37:45

A. Oh, yeah. 10:37:48

Q. And do you recall that occasion? 10:37:49

A. Yes, I do. 10:37:50

Q. What do you recall? 10:37:51

A. He lived with us for about six months, 10:37:55 when he and Evelyn broke up and they lost the home. 10:37:57
So, he stayed with us. 10:38:01

And he had gotten his tax check back. And 10:38:03 he wanted to spend some money on the kids. So, he took 10:38:08 my son and... and Brianna Becker to Sears. And he 10:38:13 bought each kid something. 10:38:23

And he brought -- bought David, I think 10:38:25
it's, a Skil saw that makes those curvy (indicating). 10:38:28

Because I like home projects and working 10:38:32 with wood ,and I'd always said "Oh, I wish I had a saw 10:38:35 like that; I would just" to -- you know, "love to be 10:38:38 able to make this and that." 10:38:40

And he bought David one. Why did he buy 10:38:42 one of those Skil saws? What do you call those things 10:38:44 that they make the -- the blades go around and they 10:38:46 make curves. 10:38:50

Well, he must have bought that for me. 10:38:50
Why would you buy a, you know, a 10-year-old kid a 10:38:52
Skil saw? 10:38:55

But he brought Brianna Becker a black bra. 10:38:55
And I thought: That is weird. 10:38:59

He goes "Well," every -- "every girl 10:39:02 needs," you know, "a black bra." 10:39:04

But I never reported it. I never acted on 10:39:09
it. I just thought: That's weird. 10:39:12

Q. How did you learn about this purchase? 10:39:15

A. He told me. 10:39:17

Q. Was there a receipt that you actually saw? 10:39:19

A. I had the receipt. I threw it out. Not 10:39:21 after this (indicating). 10:39:24

But I was going through stuff and... in the closet or to find a picture or something. And I'm thinking: Claudia, why don't you -- hang it, just get rid of this. 10:39:25 10:39:29 10:39:33 10:39:36

So, unfortunately I do not have that, otherwise I would have presented it to you. 10:39:37 10:39:38

Q. Did you ever see Candace with Jonathan Kendrick? 10:39:51 10:39:52

A. Yes. 10:39:54

Q. Can you recall some of the occasions when you may have seen them together? 10:39:56 10:39:58

A. Well, when he -- I believe it was when he was living with us. 10:39:59 10:40:03

He bought her a pair of rollerblades. And so, one day he came rollerblading over to our house with her in tow. 10:40:03 10:40:07 10:40:15

And I thought: That is very strange; why are you, you know, a 42-year-old guy, rollerblading with a 9-year-old girl or 10-year-old or whatever. 10:40:15 10:40:17 10:40:21

But, you know, they rollerbladed over to the house. And they were kind of wobbling and "Oh, look what I got Candace"; and "We're," you know, "just trying it out." 10:40:24 10:40:27 10:40:30 10:40:34

And I thought that was strange but it's not my place. 10:40:37 10:40:39

I never thought anything further other than, you know, you raise an eyebrow or you frown about that. What? 10:40:42 10:40:44 10:40:48

Q. Did you hear Jonathan Kendrick ever make comments or remarks about his feelings towards Candace? 10:40:49 10:40:55

A. He'd say "She's my absolute favorite. She's my number one." Something like that. 10:41:00 10:41:02

And I'd think: You know, that's awful strange. 10:41:06 10:41:09

But he was a flamboyant personality. He was outspoken. He was opinionated. He would make flamboyant remarks. I don't mean in a gay flamboyancy way. I mean just outrageous sometimes. 10:41:10 10:41:14 10:41:18 10:41:23

But he was an outrageous personality. And so, when "She's my number one," I mean, I could say that about someone else's 9-year-old boy, "Oh, I just love that kid, I could just eat him up." 10:41:27 10:41:31 10:41:35 10:41:39

You know what I mean? I... I... 10:41:42

When you are an affectionate, outgoing type of personality, it can be borderline. How do you take something like that as a friend? Do you assume the worst? Or do you just take it with a grain of salt because they're an outrageous personality? 10:41:46 10:41:50 10:41:53 10:41:57 10:42:02

So, but, you have to remember, these are snippets that happened over years of progress, which 10:42:04 10:42:07

changes things a little bit. 10:42:13

If you put a little drop of blue ink in a 10:42:15 tall glass of water, it's not really blue right away. 10:42:19

If you put the whole thing in at once, you get an 10:42:22

obvious picture. 10:42:25

So, these things were gradual. 10:42:27

Q. And based on what you told me, the blue 10:42:32 ink that you're missing is, you didn't know that he had 10:42:35

molested Andrea? 10:42:37

A. No. Um-um. 10:42:39

Q. Okay. When was the last time that you had 10:42:40 any contact with Mr. Kendrick, including telephone or 10:42:45 e-mail, any kind of contact at all? 10:42:50

A. The last contact, including e-mail? 10:42:55

Q. Yes, any kind. 10:42:58

A. The last contact I had -- him -- was -- 10:43:00 with him was an e-mail. I don't remember -- 10:43:05

Well, I can't remember what year he got 10:43:11 married. But he remarried. And he had continued 10:43:15

contact with me. 10:43:19

And he would call and want to talk to me. 10:43:23

Or -- And then he called and wanted -- wanted my 10:43:26

e-mail address. I gave him my e-mail address. 10:43:29

And then he would start to write, 10:43:32 intermittently, e-mails to me. 10:43:34

And uh... yeah. 10:47:40

I can't come up with a list of specifics. 10:47:46
I'd have to think about that in order to provide you 10:47:48 with bullet points. 10:47:50

But, yes, the answer is yes. 10:47:52

Q. Let me ask you just one more question 10:47:54 about Mr. Kendrick. Did you ever see a photograph of 10:47:56 him in his underwear -- 10:47:59

A. Yes. 10:48:01

Q. -- with some children in it? 10:48:02

A. Yes. 10:48:03

Q. How did you see that photograph? 10:48:03

A. Well, this, I believe this was after he 10:48:05 told me that Evelyn -- but he said Evelyn "accused" him 10:48:09 of molesting Andrea; not that he did. He was -- 10:48:13

I was with him in a storage unit when he 10:48:16 was moving stuff out. He was moving up to Oakley. And 10:48:20 so, I was -- 10:48:26

The boys were with me. We were in a 10:48:27 storage unit. And I opened up a desk drawer. There 10:48:29 was all sorts of pictures there. 10:48:33

I kind of picked up a picture, and it was 10:48:34
Jonathan, way younger, laying on the floor, kind of 10:48:36 like this (indicating) on the floor, with his legs out 10:48:40 on the side, in his underwear. 10:48:42

And there were two young children in front of him, on the floor, in their underwear. Like 3 and 4 years old. 10:48:44 10:48:46 10:48:52

And I picked that up. I said "Jonathan, what is this?" 10:48:52 10:48:55

He goes "Oh, those are just friends of mine" (indicating). And he puts it back in the desk drawer. And that bothered me. 10:48:56 10:48:58 10:49:01

I mean, I know he lived a rough life style back then, you know. I mean, we all knew he was very, very, very, very, very regularly immoral. 10:49:07 10:49:10 10:49:13

So, who he hung around with and what his exploits were, I mean, I did not know. 10:49:16 10:49:19

I just know that that, "that," bothered me. Who lays down, posing on the floor, with two young children in their underwear? 10:49:22 10:49:26 10:49:30

Yeah. I thought (indicating). 10:49:33

Q. Did you learn at some point that Mr. Kendrick was sent to prison? 10:49:37 10:49:38

A. I did after the fact. 10:49:42

Q. How did you learn that? 10:49:43

A. They had friends that we knew up in Oakley. This is a bizarre story but it's the truth. We hadn't been, never were, friends with their friends. But I knew them. 10:49:49 10:49:54 10:49:58 10:50:03

SERGEANT JEFFREY JOHN BALDWIN

placed under oath by the Certified Shorthand Reporter, was examined and testified as follows:

EXAMINATION BY RICHARD J. SIMONS

MR. SIMONS: Q. And please state your full name.

A. Jeffrey John Baldwin.

Q. And what is your current employment?

A. I work for the Contra Costa County Office of the Sheriff in Martinez, California. I'm a Sergeant and I am currently assigned to the Detention Division.

Q. How long have you been with Contra Costa County Sheriff's Department?

A. 15 years and 9 months.

Q. And did you have law-enforcement experience before that?

A. Yes.

Q. What was your professional experience in law enforcement before joining the Sheriffs?

A. Oh, before joining the Sheriff's Department?

Q. Yeah.

A. I'm sorry, I misunderstood your question.

No.

I was in the teaching field.

In terms of the comment with respect to the sexual battery, I could only assume that maybe that was derived from a review of the rap sheet.

Q. Okay.

After obtaining the information from Fremont P.D. that we've just discussed, what was the next investigative step that you took?

A. I attempted to speak with the two Elders, of the church that Jonathan belonged to... that visited him while he was in the hospital... and see whether or not they were able to provide me any further information on any diclosures that he may have made regarding the case.

Q. All right. One of the Elders was Manuel Iglesias?

A. Correct.

Q. And the other was Jim Dominguez?

A. Correct.

Q. And what efforts did you make to contact Mr. Iglesias?

A. I attempted to call him via phone call and was never, ever able to make contact with him. I believe I left messages as well with no responses back.

Q. Did you verify that the number that you had for him was accurate?

A. No. I just assumed it was.

attorney for the entire time?

A Yes.

Q The legal department's function includes providing information and advice to various elders from congregations who may contact the legal department with questions concerning issues that they have come across in their congregations; is that a fair statement?

A Can I have that either restated or read back.

Q Yes, let me restate it for you. Has part of the work of the legal department during the years that you have been a member of it, included providing advice and information to elders from local congregations who may contact you regarding any situation or other -- what's the word I'm looking for -- occurrence, that they have to address?

A Providing legal advice and counsel.

Q And in cases going back from 1993 through the 1990s, in cases where an elder from a local congregation contacts the legal department, has the information or advice that has been provided to them been from licensed attorneys?

deposition format it's important that we only speak one at a time as the court reporter can only follow one of us at a time. So even if you know where my question is going, allow me to finish, and I promise to do so eventually, and I will also do my best not to interrupt your answers, okay? 10:05

Q Before the deposition began, counsel and I spoke about your role here today. Your deposition is being taken in response to our Notice for your deposition as an individual, and then in addition, you have been designated as the person most qualified to testify with regard to certain issues that have been the subject of Deposition Notices for the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. 10:05 10:06 10:06 10:06 10:06 10:06 10:06

So I think with counsel's kind permission, I will go through the Deposition Notices and just clarify which categories you will be testifying as the representative of the Watchtower New York, Inc. 10:06 10:06 10:06 10:06

And that would include for the February 15, 2012 1:00 P.M. Deposition Notice, the matters related to the August 1st, 1995 10:06 10:07 10:07

Q As part of the service department currently, are you within the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc.? 10:15

A No. 10:15

Q Is the service department presently operated through the Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses? 10:15

A Yes. 10:16

Q Has that been true since 2001? 10:16

A That's correct. 10:16

Q Is there currently a line of communication -- actually let me rephrase that. 10:16

Is there currently a line of authority between Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York and Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses? 10:16

MR. SCHNACK: I am going to object to the form of the question. I don't know what you mean by line of authority between those two entities. 10:16

You can answer if you can. 10:16

MR. SIMONS: I think your objection is well taken. It's not well phrased. 10:16

Q Do any persons holding positions within 10:16

Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York exercise supervisory authority over your service department within Christian Congregation? 10:16

A When you say exercise authority, can you put that in context, what do you mean by exercise authority? 10:17

Q Are persons who are serving within Watchtower Bible and Tract Society New York, Inc. presently holding authority to implement or impose policies, procedures or decisions upon Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses? 10:17

A I believe so. 10:17

Q And tell me what your understanding is of the relationship between those two entities? 10:17

A I mentioned earlier that there is a branch committee. I do believe some of those members of the branch committee are members of the New York corporation. 10:17

Q What is the general role of the branch committee? 10:18

A They oversee the spiritual activities as well as the administering of the properties at the three complexes here in New York State. 10:18

Q Is the service committee one of multiple 10:18 committee, makes recommendations as to who should be added in the case of deaths. And so those recommendations are made to the governing body of Jehovah's Witnesses. 10:19 10:19 10:20 10:20

Q And what is the governing body within the administrative structure? I'm not asking for spiritual or theological information here, I'm really look administratively, what is the governing body? 10:20 10:20 10:20 10:20 10:20

A The governing body is a committee that oversees the worldwide activity of Jehovah's Witnesses. 10:20 10:20 10:20

Q Does the branch committee have any sort of written policies, procedures that it follows? 10:20 10:20

A Yes. 10:20

Q Is there some form of either a manual or other documentary compilation that the branch committee is guided by in its work? 10:20 10:21 10:21

A Yes. 10:21

Q What is that called? 10:21

A It's called branch organization. 10:21

Q And is that, is the appropriate term a manual or would it be some other term? 10:21 10:21

A I think the terminology is guidelines, 10:21 branch committee guidelines. 10:21

Q Is that series of guidelines applicable to the service department of the Christian Congregation? 10:21

A Parts of it are. 10:21

Q What other areas -- well, let me ask you, have you ever seen the branch committee guidelines? 10:21

A Yes. 10:22

Q And do you use it daily in your, or at least from time to time, in your work? 10:22

A From time to time. 10:22

Q What are the general subject matters covered under the branch committee guidelines? 10:22

A Matters having to do with branch facilities, branch personnel, the managing of the spiritual activities within a specific branch or branch territory. Just general operation guidelines. 10:22

Q Are the branch committee guidelines the same for every branch throughout the world or are there separate branch committee guidelines for different geographical areas? 10:23

A Same throughout the world. 10:23

Q Are the contents of the branch committee 10:23 guidelines approved by the governing body? 10:23

A Yes. 10:23

Q And would those branch committee 10:23 guidelines apply to the Bible and Tract Society of 10:23

New York, Inc.? 10:23

A I guess my question would be, when you -- 10:23 can you say that one more time? 10:23

Q Yes. 10:23

A I want to make sure I have the question 10:23

correct. 10:23

Q Do the branch committee guidelines apply 10:23 to the entities within the Watchtower Bible and 10:23

Tract Society of New York, Inc., the divisions I 10:23 should say? 10:23

A I would think so. 10:23

Q Do they also apply to the Christian 10:23

Congregation? 10:24

A Yes. 10:24

Q I know there are other entities such as 10:24

Watchtower of Pennsylvania. Would the branch 10:24 committee guidelines apply to these other entities 10:24

as well? 10:24

A Yes. 10:24

Q Other than the service department, what 10:24

department? 10:45

A When you say a different, a different 10:46 person as opposed to the victim? 10:46

Q Correct, an individual member of the 10:46 congregation makes a report to an elder of suspicion 10:46 of sexual abuse of a child by a different 10:46 congregation member, is that communication deemed to 10:46 be confidential? 10:46

MR. SCHNACK: Are you talking about 10:46 outside of the service department at this 10:46 point? 10:46

MR. SIMONS: No, within the service 10:46
department. 10:46

MR. SCHNACK: Okay, because the question 10:46 didn't include that. Why don't you rephrase it 10:46 so we're certain what you are asking. 10:46

Q Within the service department's 10:46 implementation of its policies and role, are 10:46 communications by a member of a congregation to an 10:46 elder which report suspected childhood sexual abuse 10:46
by a different member of that congregation, are 10:47 those communications deemed to be confidential? 10:47

A Within the context of the work that is 10:47 done within the service department? 10:47

Q Yes. 10:47

A They are regarded as confidential. 10:47

Q Is the basis of that determination one that is contained in writings of some kind? 10:47

A You mean in the sense of guidelines or direction or memoranda? 10:47

Q Yes, any of those. 10:47

A Over the years I worked in the service department, which is some 31 years, I am certain that there have been references made on occasion that matters should be kept confidential. I cannot tell you an exact date of a memorandum. 10:47 10:48 10:48

MR. SIMONS: Let me mark the letter of July 1st, 1989 as the next exhibit. 10:48 10:48

(July 1, 1989 letter was marked as Deposition Exhibit Number 5 for identification.) 10:49 10:49 10:49

Q This is a somewhat lengthy document. The portions that I am going to ask you about I've highlighted. That will maybe assist you in focusing on this. 10:49 10:49 10:49 10:49

MR. SCHNACK: You want him to read through it or do you want to just start asking questions? 10:49 10:50 10:50

MR. SIMONS: If he wants to read through it I don't want to interrupt him. 10:50

MR. SCHNACK: It's up to you how you want to conduct the deposition. 10:50

Q Have you seen this letter of July 1st, 1989 before? 10:50

A Yes. 10:50

Q When do you recall first being aware of this letter? 10:50

A Shortly before July 1st, 1989. 10:50

Q Did you participate at all in the drafting of this letter? 10:50

A I'm not certain. 10:51

Q Do you know any of the individuals who participated in the drafting of this letter? 10:51

A I don't think I could name someone specific. 10:51

Q Is this what is known as a Body of Elder letter? 10:51

A Yes. 10:51

Q Is the content of this letter, Exhibit 5, one that requires the approval of anyone within the Jehovah's Witnesses organization before it can be circulated to elders throughout the United States? 10:52

A Yes. 10:52

Q What approval or approvals, if there is more than one, must be made before a Body of Elder letter such as this could be circulated, at the time frame we're talking about, July 1st, '89? 10:52

A Within the time frame of 1989? 10:52

Q Yes. 10:52

A There would have been a group of elders within the service department that would have reviewed this letter. It would have been a collaborative effort. You're talking about the service department, right? 10:52

Q I'm talking about within the organization completely? 10:52

A Within the organization. Undoubtedly the legal department would have input into this. It would have been approved by a committee of the governing body. 10:52

Q Has this Body of Elder letter of July 1st, 1989 been revoked? 10:53

A When you say revoked, you mean in total or in part? 10:53

Q First in total. 10:53

A No. 10:53

Q Have parts of it been modified or revoked? 10:53

A I would have to review the letter and read it to tell. 10:53

Q All right, okay. 10:53

MR. SCHNACK: Do you want him to do that? 10:53

MR. SIMONS: Yes, I do. 10:53

MR. SCHNACK: Go ahead, take your time. 10:54

THE WITNESS: The entire letter? 10:54

MR. SIMONS: Yes. If you need something to mark the exhibit with to go back and explain later what areas you think have been revoked, feel free to mark it up, that's okay. 10:54

A What was stated then in 1989, some 22 years ago, I think is essentially the same now. There's maybe one exception. And that's on page four at the very top, the first sentence, "If the alleged wrongdoer confesses to the sin or crime, no one else should be present besides the members of the committee." Just in addition to that, in the case of a child, being a minor, likely in most cases his parent or parents would be present. But other than that, essentially it's the same. 11:01

Q Okay. In the event that an accused 11:02

And so the intent is to administer spiritual assistance to help that one, and if they can be helped, and if they prove that they are repentant, they have regret for what they have done, then it can be deemed by that judicial committee that they can remain part of the membership of Jehovah's Witnesses, which is regarded as a clean organization. And so if that is the case then, what is administered is a reproof, that's the terminology that we use, a reproof, which means again, the use of the Bible, reading various scriptures that in effect reprove that one, or to set that one straight. 11:34 11:34 11:34 11:34 11:34 11:35 11:35 11:35 11:35 11:35 11:35 11:35

Q In my field as a lawyer we have an agency called the State Bar which licenses and disciplines lawyers and they have a public reproval and a private reproval. Does Jehovah's Witnesses have those two categories of reproval? 11:35 11:35 11:35 11:35 11:35

A Not technically, no. 11:36

Q Are all reproval public? 11:36

A No. 11:36

Q Are all reproval private? 11:36

A No. 11:36

Q What determines whether or not a member 11:36 who has been the subject of reproval has that reproof reported to the congregation? 11:36

A My apologies, your question one more time? Just to make sure I have it clearly in my mind. 11:36

Q Okay. Let me back up and see if we can get to the question more clearly. 11:36

If a person is disfellowshipped that's announced to the congregation, correct? 11:36

A Yes. 11:36

Q Are reproofs announced to the congregation? 11:36

A In some cases. 11:36

Q What kinds of cases are those? 11:36

A As in the case of where there is some threat to other members of the congregation; in the case of notoriety among the community. It's for the purpose of letting others know that may have become aware of this conduct that the matter has been addressed, that the one is still repentant, is still a member of the congregation, and that certain scriptural reproof has been administered. 11:37

So it's for the purpose of protecting others in the congregation. 11:37

Q Who determines whether or not a member constitutes a continuing threat to engage in unclean conduct such as sexual abuse of a child? 11:37 11:37 11:38

A The judicial committee. 11:38

Q Does the judicial committee have any written or other stated guidelines for making that determination which are provided to it from the service department? 11:38 11:38 11:38 11:38

A That's a little vague question. 11:38

Q Let me rephrase it. How does the judicial committee make the determination as to whether or not the individual constitutes a continuing threat? 11:38 11:38 11:38 11:38

A How do they determine it? 11:38

Q Yes, by what standard or guidelines or criteria? 11:38 11:39

A By guidelines, standards and criteria that have been given to them by the organization, Jehovah's Witnesses' organization. We referenced earlier the KS textbooks, that primarily. There is also information in a publication that's available to all of Jehovah's Witnesses, not just elders, it's called Organized to Do Jehovah's Will, that publication. 11:39 11:39 11:39 11:39 11:39 11:39 11:39 established that elders abide by? 11:47

Q Is the policy that no discipline is warranted in the absence of either two witnesses, two credible witnesses or a confession, is that policy one that is approved by the governing body? 11:47 11:47 11:47 11:48

A Yes. 11:48

Q You mentioned the Watchtower now being utilized in certain study committees. Am I correct that there are various kinds of regular meetings and study sessions that congregations hold within Jehovah's Witnesses? 11:48 11:48 11:48 11:48

A Yes, we do. 11:48

Q Are there regular meetings held by congregations at the Kingdom Halls? 11:48 11:48

A Yes. 11:48

Q And how frequently would regular sessions at the Kingdom Hall be held in most congregations, at least in your knowledge and experience? 11:48 11:48 11:49

A You mean meetings that a congregation would have as opposed to meetings that Kingdom Hall would have? 11:49 11:49 11:49

Q Yes. 11:49

A Yes, a congregation typically would have two meetings a week, one during mid week and 11:49 11:49

typically one on the weekend. 11:49

Q And do each of these meetings have a different purpose or is the purpose the same? 11:49

A Different purpose. 11:49

Q What are the purposes of the two meetings in the mid week and the weekend meetings? 11:49

A Well, both are open to the public so anyone is invited to attend these meetings. The mid week meeting is made up of three different types of meetings: One is called the Congregation Bible Study and there is a publication that Jehovah's Witnesses use, it varies from year to year, that is considered for 25 minutes or half hour; and then we have what is called a Theocratic Ministry School that helps to train the congregants as to how to perform public speaking or public reading, speaking to others about the Bible. 11:49 11:49 11:49 11:49 11:50 11:50 11:50 11:50

And then the last part of the meeting is called a service meeting, and information from a periodical called Our kingdom Ministry is reviewed, and again, having to do with the ministry. That's what Jehovah's Witnesses do, is we speak to others about God and bear witness about him and tell others about what we consider to be good news from the 11:50 11:50 11:50 11:50 11:50 11:50 11:51

Bible. 11:51

Q Are the mid week meetings that are held at Kingdom Halls attended customarily by children as well as adults? 11:51

A Yes. 11:51

Q What does the weekend meeting usually consist of. 11:51

A It consists of two meetings, a public talk addressed to the public, and then a consideration of the study edition of the Watchtower. There are articles that are taken each week from that Watchtower and considered during the course of that hour, on a variety of subjects. 11:51

Q And are the weekend meetings customarily held at the Kingdom Hall? 11:51

A Yes, in this country. 11:52

Q Are there other meetings routinely held, in your experience and knowledge, that would be smaller study groups held perhaps in homes of individuals who are congregation members? 11:52

A Not a study group. We do have places, homes, private homes, where we gather for a very, very brief period of time, ten to fifteen minutes, to meet prior to engaging in the public ministry. 11:52

Q Are the weekend meetings customarily attended by children? 11:52

A The public talk and Watchtower study at the congregation, at the Kingdom Hall? 11:52

Q Yes. 11:53

A Yes. 11:53

Q When you say public ministry, is service work and public ministry, are those concepts the same? 11:53

A Service work meaning? 11:53

Q Does service work as it's customarily used in your vocabulary include the public ministry that you were about to describe for me? 11:53

A We don't use the terminology "service work." We do use the word service, it's field service or field ministry, and yes, it's synonymous with the ministry. 11:53

Q So it's service, not service work? 11:53

A Right. 11:53

Q Thank you. My apologies. And how often are congregations involved, say, on a weekly basis in field service? 11:53

A Typically we have meetings all during the week in the homes, usually in the mornings, 11:54

Q Thank you. Let me now move on to Exhibit 6 and Exhibit 7 (handing). You might want to return Exhibit-- 01:41

A May I just add something else too? 01:41

Q Sure, go ahead. 01:41

A In the case of Kendrick it was not as if there wasn't discipline, because there was. He was removed from his position as a ministerial servant. Even though today we might view it differently as to the gravity of his sin, the fact is he was removed from his position as a ministerial servant. 01:41

Q Today if Mr. Kendrick or someone like him was subjected to discipline for sexual molestation of a child, would the congregation be informed of the reason for any discipline imposed? 01:42

A No, they would not. 01:42

Q And under the policies in place in 1993, the congregation was not informed of Mr. Kendricks' sexual misconduct with a minor. Correct? 01:42

A That's correct. Could I just ask you a question here? Mr. Simons, you mentioned now would the congregation be informed. Informed of what? 01:42

Q Informed of the reason for the discipline, in other words, that there had been 01:42 sexual molestation of a minor by Mr. Kendricks. 01:42

A That would be correct, they would not be informed of the reason. But they would be informed that such and such has been reproved by a judicial committee. 01:42 01:42 01:43 01:43

Q One can be reproved for many reasons? 01:43

A Yes. 01:43

Q Was Mr. Kendrick previously reproved for loud and boisterous conduct according to the information you have seen in reviewing the records pertaining to him? 01:43 01:43 01:43 01:43

A I do seem to recall some form of reproof, but I don't remember whether it was prior to or after these events. 01:43 01:43 01:43

Q The fact of reproval does not in and of itself inform the congregation that the individual removed may constitute a threat of sexual molestation to children within the congregation; would you agree with that? 01:43 01:43 01:43 01:43 01:43

A In itself it wouldn't. But there are other things that elders will do to ensure that the child is in a safe place and that he's no longer subject to the perpetrator. For example, elders are instructed to sit down with the parents and review 01:43 01:43 01:43 01:44 01:44 understood when one is baptized he becomes an ordained minister. 01:54

Q All right. Let's turn to paragraph eight then, which refers to field ministry. And you advice that field ministry is not controlled or monitored by the elders or the congregation. The field ministry activity and the time and manner in which it is performed is a personal matter and there is no hour or literature placement requirement. 01:54

And has that been true throughout the time that you have served as an elder? 01:54

A Yes, that has been true. 01:54

Q And so is it correct that when Jonathan Kendrick or Candace Conti would perform field service that that field service was not monitored by elders or the congregation? 01:55

A I'm not in a position to know what was done by the elders in the North Congregation Fremont back in 1993. 01:55

Q Assuming that they were following the general policies and procedures and methods of performing field service that you refer to in paragraph eight, then that would be a fair assumption though, correct? 01:55

A Having in mind that today, yes, the elders would have monitored the activities of a child abuser because we have specifically directed them to do that. In 1993 when our policies were being developed, as any religious organization, as any school system, we were struggling to come up with policies in order to protect children. I think given the time period, many, many organizations did not have policies in place. But seeing the need and seeing the need to protect our young people as best we can, we have developed some very good policies in more recent years. 01:55 01:55 01:55 01:55 01:56 01:56 01:56 01:56 01:56 01:56

Q Continuing on in paragraph eight at line six, there is the statement that "Congregation publishers are not required to complete or turn in forms or reports regarding field ministry activity." 01:56 01:56 01:56 01:56

Are there periodic reports from the congregation elders themselves to the service department concerning the field ministry activity undertaken by the congregation? 01:56 01:56 01:56 01:57

A Yes. 01:57

Q And was that true in the early 1990s as well? 01:57 01:57

A Yes, it was. 01:57

them some structure. 02:29

Q Who if anyone would have been required to approve the content of articles in the Awake before they were published? This is back in '85 and '93 and that time period. 02:29 02:30 02:30

A It would be individuals that work in our writing department. 02:30 02:30

Q Were articles on the subject matter of protecting children from sexual abuse subject to approval from anyone other than persons in the writing committee back in the time frame that we're talking about, '85 to '93, as to the articles? 02:30 02:30 02:30 02:30 02:30

MR. SCHNACK: You mean the writing department. 02:30 02:30

MR. SIMONS: Writing department, thank you. 02:30 02:30

A I know on occasion that the writing committee would send, writing department that is, they would send articles to others outside the writing department for their purview. 02:30 02:30 02:30 02:31

Q Would an article setting forth a policy on something such as childhood sexual abuse such as the January 22, 1985 article in Awake have been reviewed and approved by the governing body or a 02:31 02:31 02:31 02:31 committee of the governing body prior to its publication? 02:31

A My understanding is that they would. 02:31

Q What is that understanding based on? 02:31

A Whether all of the members of the then existing governing body would review articles from the Awake or the Watchtower, I can't say for certainty. But what I do say for certainty is that some members of the governing body would review it, yes. 02:31

Q What is your understanding based on? 02:31

A Based on my knowledge. 02:32

Q Your last answer was that you just understand it. Can you tell me a little bit more about how you acquired the knowledge of the governing body's role in terms of approval of Awake policy articles or Watchtower policy articles? 02:33

A I just know that the writing department, it's directly overseen by the writing committee of the governing body, and that there have been members in the past of the governing body who are in the writing, on the writing committee, and also work in the writing department. And I know the process that's reviewed by a number of writers, and it's 02:33 members of the governing body, on the service committee? 02:54

A Yes, there are. 02:54

Q How many members total are there in the service committee? 02:54

A On the service committee, let's see, at least four. 02:55

Q And how many members of the service committee are members of the governing body? 02:55

A All of them. 02:55

Q When a congregation member is found either by two witnesses or by confession or by both to have committed sexual abuse of a child, does the local congregation elders have the option to ban that individual from field service? 02:55

A The elders have the responsibility to protect children from that perpetrator, yes, to ban them from the individual ministry that they have. I think all of us as Christians, as Jehovah's Witnesses, have an obligation to bear witness about God, that's who we are, we are Jehovah's Witnesses. So what he would have, his personal responsibility is up to him in witnessing, but if he were to engage in public ministry with 02:56

others, then the elders have a responsibility to monitor his activities, make sure he does not work with children alone, or if he is in the presence of children, then another adult should be in his presence. 02:56

Q And was that true even back in the early 1990s? 02:56 02:57

A It was true in the sense that any concerned elder who is aware of someone's conduct of that nature would want to be very concerned about his activities around children. We did not have any guidelines to the effect that we have now, in 1993. 02:57 02:57 02:57

Q Is one who is disfellowshipped permitted to engage in field service? 02:57 02:57

A He is not officially recognized by Jehovah's Witnesses as a member. His membership ceases once he is disfellowshipped. So what he does on his own in the form of witnessing is not the responsibility of the congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses. 02:57 02:57 02:57 02:57 02:57 02:57

Q Would a disfellowshipped person be allowed to take the Awake and Watchtower and go door to door? 02:58 02:58 02:58

A It would not be sanctioned by the 02:58

Mr. Kendrick, Andrea, and Elder Gary Abrahamson were also present. During the meeting, Andrea told the Elders that Jonathan Kendrick had given her Vicodin, watched T.V. with her in her bedroom, and then put his hand inside Andrea's bra, with skin-to-skin contact on her breast. DECLARATION OF WILLIAM H. BOWEN IN SUPPORT OF MOTION OF PLAINTIFF JANE DOE TO AMEND COMPLAINT AND FOR ORDER PERMITTING FINANCIAL DISCOVERY

Date:	5/3/12
Time:	3:00 p.m.
Dept:	22
Reservation No:	1232647

I, WILLIAM H. BOWEN, hereby declare:

1. I was an active member of the Jehovah's Witnesses Organization until age 43. I served at the Organization's home office in Brooklyn, New York from 1977 to 1979. I served as a Pioneer (full time missionary) from 1974 to 1976 and 1979 to 1981. I was appointed with the approval of the Governing Body of Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. to be a Ministerial Servant in 1979, and to be an Elder in 1985. These positions are of administrative responsibility within Jehovah's Witnesses. Jehovah's Witnesses are viewed as 'lay ministers' and do not have any formal clergy or pastors and have no paid full time employees in Congregations or administration. I served as an Elder from 1985 to 1992 and again from 1994 to 2001. I served as Presiding Overseer,(Coordinator) a position equivalent to administrative coordinator, for two congregations in early 1990's and late 1990's. I served as a Theocratic Ministry School Overseer from 1985 to 1989, Secretary from 1990-1991 and 1994-1998, Watchtower Overseer from 1995-1998, Book Study Overseer during the duration I was an elder, and many other managerial positions within the congregation. I have taught and participated in Elder training and instruction in the procedures and policies of Jehovah's Witnesses in the KINGDOM MINISTRY SCHOOLS and Pioneer Schools. I have worked as an overseer or assistant at the convention level and also worked in the Administration Office at District Conventions represented by Jehovah's Witnesses world headquarters in New York State, and in many branches of Circuit Assemblies and District Conventions including Food Service, Public Relations, Parking, Rooming, Volunteer Service, Accounting, and Security and Attendant Departments. I have presided or participated in over one hundred judicial, special and appeal committees relating to Judicial Matters, which is the internal administrative procedures for investigation and discipline of Jehovah's Witnesses accused of misconduct or other improprieties.

2. Since 2001, I have been the Executive Director of a non-profit organization called Silentlambs, with its office in Nashville, TN. The purpose of Silentlambs is to provide support for victims of sexual abuse suffered as a child in Jehovah's Witnesses activities and Congregations. I have researched extensively the policies and procedures of Jehovah's Witnesses from public and accessible private sources, I have been interviewed internationally for numerous published articles and documentaries on the polices and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses, including New York Times, Newsweek, VH1, Dateline, Fifth Estate, Panorama, Associated Press, Christianity Today, etc...

3. During the time I served in administrative positions for the Jehovah's Witnesses' Organization, I had access to internal confidential documents and communications, I attended Elder training on several occasions and received instructions on how to handle matters within the congregation involving abuse survivors including reports of child molestation within the Organization's congregations; and became personally familiar with the organizations policies and procedures on the subject matters of reporting, preventing, investigating and maintaining secrecy concerning child sexual abuse within the Jehovah's Witnesses membership and Congregations; on the relationships of Jehovah's Witnesses Elders to secular law enforcement; and on disciplinary policies and procedures for those accused of sexual abuse of children.

4. The Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses is the ruling council of the Jehovah's Witnesses Organization, and represents the Organization's leadership and administration. All Jehovah's Witnesses' policies and procedures for any corporation or entity of the religion are set by the Governing Body. The "Organized to Accomplish Our Ministry" manual states on Pages 26-27, "These and other legal corporations are used by the modern day Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses to facilitate the preaching of the good news world-wide and to care for the spiritual needs of the entire congregation of God in all parts of the earth." A true and correct copy of the cover and excerpts of the Manual are attached as Exhibit 1 to this Declaration.

5. All Elders or other Jehovah Witness members involved in the reporting, investigation or disciplinary phases of childhood sexual abuse accusations and conduct must follow the procedures and policies established and communicated by the Governing Body through its various corporate agencies. These corporate entities include the Legal Department of the Watchtower Bible and Tracts Society of New York, Inc.; the Service Department that was formerly a part of Watchtower New York until 2001; and a separate corporation established in 2001 known as The Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses that has succeeded in administering the Service Dept. functions formerly held by the New York corporation. I have reviewed the deposition of Alan Schuster taken in this matter on February 15, 2012, who I know personally, and agree with his testimony on page 38 at lines 14 through 19 that the policies of the Jehovah's Witnesses as expressed in Body of Elder letters, including the letter of July 1, 1989, would have been approved by the Governing Body.

6. When an Elder or other member in a position of authority in a Jehovah's Witness congregation receives a report of child molestation or sexual assault, Jehovah's Witness policy as set forth in the July 1, 1989 Body of Elder letter requires Elders first call the Service and Legal Departments of the WBTSNY, Inc. Thereafter, all acts or omissions of the Elders are directed by and through the Service and Legal Department. The Service and Legal Departments direct the investigation by congregation Elders for all allegations of child abuse;

7. Jehovah's Witnesses practice and policy discourages members' associations with non-members. Members customarily associate only with other congregation or Jehovah's Witness members for all non-work, recreational, or social activity for their members. Children and adults participate together frequently in meetings held in members or Elders' homes, or at the Kingdom Halls which are the official property of the entities organized by the Governing Body. Children and adults go together in small groups into residential neighborhoods and other public places to perform the "service" work, or religious solicitations that are the largest time commitment and activity of the members. Because nearly all of these activities are conducted outside of the homes of members, it is common for members of a congregation to trust other adults to transport children to meetings, Kingdom Hall for services, and into neighborhoods for service work.

8. The Jehovah's Witnesses, through the Governing Body, have a punishment called "Disfellowshipping." When a member is disfellowshipped, no other member of the Congregation is allowed to talk to them or engage in activities with the disfellowshipped member. Disfellowshipping is an administrative procedure that would, if applied to a child molester, prevent that individual from having contact with or participating in activities with children of the Congregation and Jehovah's Witnesses community. Disfellowshipping Jonathan Kendrick in this case after his molestation of at least one minor girl would have prevented his association with Plaintiff Jane Doe and advised her parents and the entire Congregation that he was unfit to be associated with.

9. The written and practiced policy of Jehovah's Witnesses applicable to protecting children from known childhood sexual abusers within the membership is set forth by the Governing Body in the Body of Elders letter of July 1, 1989. I agree with the testimony of Mr. Shuster in his deposition at page 38, line 20, to page 39, line 24, stating this letter remains the policy today. That policy, as stated in the letter of July 1, 1989, is to keep information identifying a known specific child molester secret from Congregation members, law enforcement, and other possible victims.

10. As of the present time, Silentlambs has received reports from over 7,000 individuals that they were sexually abused as children in the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses. During my service as an Elder, I learned that there is a database kept by WBTSNY of childhood sexual abuse offenders and victims. I personally reported child molesters to this database by telephone to the Service and Legal Departments. In 2002 I was made aware by managerial level personnel that the database at that time contained over 23,720 reports of confessed/confirmed child molesters within the United States, Canada and parts of Europe. My own experience with Silentlambs is that sexual abuse of children is and has been for many decades a widespread problem within Jehovah's Witnesses, as in many other organizations and groups where adults and youth participate.

11. All of the policies and procedures concerning maintaining secrecy as to the identities of known childhood sexual abusers within the Jehovah's Witnesses Congregations are the policies set forth by the Governing Body to apply to all associated with the Jehovah's Witness organization. In my experience and opinion, the true purpose of these policies and procedures is not religious, but purely secular and financial. The secrecy policy has been applied to protect the organization and its leaders from exposure to legal liability for the harm caused to children abused within the activities of the Witnesses, as well as to protect the Jehovah's Witnesses religion and its corporate entities from adverse publicity that could negatively affect membership levels, and in turn reduce financial income. The Body of Elder letter of July 1, 1989 sets forth these purposes explicitly and repeatedly, and the same concerns were taught in the Elders training sessions I participated in. The policy of secrecy is set and enforced by the Governing Body with full knowledge that sexual abusers of children, if not identified and adequately protected against, will continue to abuse other children.

12. The evidence I have reviewed in this case includes the depositions of Elders Abrahamson, Clarke, Iglesias, Inman, and Lammerdin; the deposition of Mr. Shuster; the depositon of Claudia Francis; the documents produced by Defendants in response to written discovery requests or marked as exhibits to depositions; the deposition of Candace Conti and of her parents, Neal Conti and Kathleen Conti; the Declaration of Evelyn Kendrick; and the deposition of Contra Costa County Sheriff Baldwin. This evidence establishes for my analysis and opinions that Jonathan Kendrick continued to sexually approach and abuse children after the first report to the Elders in 1993 of his abuse of his step daughter. This is found in the criminal records and felony conviction of Kendrick for sexual abuse of a minor victim while he and his spouse Linda Kendrick were members of the Oakley Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses; the report of the Plaintiff in this case; and also the report of "grooming" activity of purchasing a bra for a 10 year old girl as set forth in the deposition testimony of Claudia Francis. This type of recurring conduct is facilitated and enabled because of the policy of the Jehovah's Witnesses to keep secret past sexual abuse of children by its members.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct, that I have personal knowledge of the facts set forth herein, and that I am competent to testify as to the facts set forth herein.

"You, though, keep your senses in all things, suffer evil, do the work of an evangelizer, fully accomplish your ministry."—2 Tim. 4:5.

and to care for all His "belongings," or Kingdom interests on earth. (Matt. 24:45-47; Luke 12:42-44) Rather than being an individual Christian, the 'faithful slave' today is the remnant, still living on earth, of the composite body of Christ's anointed footstep followers. Such remaining ones are a part of spiritual Israel, the anointed congregation of God. (Gal. 6:16; compare Isaiah 43:10.) This remnant is faithfully discharging the responsibilities of the "slave" during this time of the end by taking the lead in the preaching of "this good news of the kingdom" throughout all the earth and by providing spiritual food at the proper time for the household of faith.—Matt. 24:14.

USE OF RELIGIOUS CORPORATIONS

During these last days of the present wicked system of things, the "belongings" of the Master have increased abundantly throughout all the earth. This has placed a heavy responsibility on the 'faithful slave.' In discharging its responsibility to provide spiritual food at the proper time and in order to get the good news of the Kingdom preached before the end comes, the remnant on earth, as "the faithful and discreet slave" class, has formed certain agencies, or legal entities. It has proved to be the course of wisdom for the 'faithful slave' to organize certain corporations that are recognized by the laws of various countries. These religious corporations own and operate printing facilities that produce and distribute Bibles and Bible literature on a worldwide basis for use in the Kingdom ministry.

The first in time and the principal corporation used in this way is the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania. This nonprofit religious society was incorporated in 1884, is made up of dedicated, baptized Christians and is exclusively devoted to advancing the interests of true worship in the earth. The Watch Tower Society has extended its works worldwide, establishing branch offices in various countries. Also, in compliance with local governmental regulations, a number of other religious societies have been legally formed, such as the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. (1909) and the International Bible Students Association in London, England (1914). All these legal instrumentalities cooperate with one another. These and other legal corporations are used by the modern-day Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses to facilitate the preaching of the good news worldwide and to care for the spiritual needs of the entire congregation of God in all parts of the earth.

STRUCTURE UNDER BRANCH ORGANIZATION

Whenever a branch office is established, a Branch Committee of three or more elders is appointed to care for the various responsibilities involved in looking after the work in the country or countries under the jurisdiction of that particular branch. One member of the committee serves as the coordinator of the Branch Committee.

Local congregations under each branch organization are arranged into circuits and a number of circuits make up a district. Circuits and districts may be of various sizes depending on geographical and language considerations, as well as the number of congregations within the area assigned to a branch. A circuit overseer is appointed to serve the congregations in each circuit. District overseers visit the different circuits, serve at circuit assemblies and spend some time serving

DECLARATION OF DR. ANNA SALTER IN SUPPORT OF MOTION OF PLAINTIFF JANE DOE TO AMEND COMPLAINT AND FOR ORDER PERMITTING FINANCIAL DISCOVERY

Date:	5/3/12
Time:	3:00 p.m.
Dept:	22
Reservation No:	1232647

I, ANNA SALTER, hereby declare:

1. That I have been retained by the plaintiff in the above-entitled action to testify on issues of standards of institutional policies and practices involving the prevention of child molestation and sexual abuse, and the scientific and professional knowledge available on the subjects of sexual predators of children and child victims of sexual abuse;

2. That I earned a Ph.D. in Clinical Psychology and Public Practice from Harvard University in 1977; served as the Director of Child Psychology Consulting Services at Mary Hitchcock Memorial Hospital in Hanover, New Hampshire from 1984 to 1988; served as a faculty member in the Psychiatry Dept. at Dartmouth Medical School from 1981 and 1988, with the title of Assistant Professor; and have engaged in private practice specializing in sexual abuse issues since 1988, working with and studying both offenders and victims;

3. That I have conducted workshops and trainings for nearly 30 years on the issue of childhood sexual abuse recognition and response, in 50 states and 10 countries; including workshops and trainings for many national, state, and local organizations, groups, and religious entities, and have served as a consultant to many such organizations as to the development and implementation of programs and policies on the same subject.

4. That I have authored 3 published books on the issue of child sexual abuse, including the book Predators: Pedophiles, Rapists, and Other Sex Offenders: Who They Are, How They Operate, and How We Can Protect Our Children (2003);

5. That I am a member of the American Psychological Association (APA), The Association for the Treatment of Sexual Abuse (ATSA), and the International Association for Correctional and Forensic Psychology (IACFP).

6. Based upon my training, clinical experience, research and work in the authoring of books, and experience as a trainer, I am familiar with the standards adopted by and followed by community, religious, and youth organizations nationally during the past three decades concerning childhood sexual abuse prevention, education, training, and procedures when abuse is suspected or reported.

7. I have reviewed the depositions of Elders Abrahamson, Clarke, and Lammerdin taken in this action, the depositions of Neal Conti and Kathleen Conti; and reviewed the documents produced by the Jehovah's Witnesses concerning the case of "Jane Doe" and her sexual abuse by Jonathan Kendrick, and Mr. Kendrick's past conduct, marked as exhibits to those depositions;

8. The standard of care before and during 1993 to 1995 for the prevention of child molestation and sexual abuse in religious institutions where children are allowed to participate, which is established by many sources including the adoption of training and educational programs by organizations such as The Boy Scouts of America, the passing of resolutions by national groups including The National Council of Churches, and many other public and private organizations, was that there exists an obligation to educate and train participants in such groups or activities, including volunteer adults, children, and administrative personnel, in the recognition, prevention, reporting, and possible signs of childhood sexual abuse; and a further obligation to address reports of childhood sexual abuse immediately to actively prevent further opportunities for abuse of any child within the organization by any adult confirmed to have committed an act of child molestation. Failure to notify those individuals in positions of leadership or authority within the local chapter, group, congregation, or club of a confirmed report violates this standard, and the failure to notify parents and other adults within the group or congregation violates this standard. These violations have been generally known to child care professionals, to Administrators, Directors, and Officers of national community, religious, or youth activity groups, and to law enforcement agencies to be significant, in that they expose children in the group or congregation to further abuse. It has been well known for decades to such professionals, and among persons in positions of leadership and authority in the national organizations which serve or include children, 1) That child sex abuse predators frequently commit additional acts of abuse; 2) That the "grooming" process, which is the identification and approach by a predator to a vulnerable child, is usually not noticed or recognized by lay persons who are unaware of a potential child molester's past conduct; 3) That children frequently do not complain or report acts of grooming or abuse by adults, for many reasons; 4) That child sexual abuse is usually committed outside the presence of witnesses; and 5) That non-familial pedophiles and child sexual abusers are most frequently possessed of personality traits that do not cause others to "suspect" them. It was generally well known to organizations including religious groups by the early 1990s that continuing to allow adults who have sexually molested even one child to participate in activities with youth without either warning other participants of the possible risk, or acting affirmatively to prevent any unsupervised contact between children and the confirmed abuser, exposes children to further acts of sexual abuse.

PLAINTIFF'S MANDATORY SETTLEMENT CONFERENCE STATEMENT

Date: 4/26/12
Time: 1:30 p.m.
Dept: 14
Trial Date: 5/21/12

STATEMENT OF FACTS

Defendant Jonathan Kendrick sexually molested and abused Plaintiff Jane Doe when she was a minor child. Defendant Kendrick gained access to Plaintiff through their mutual involvement in the North Fremont Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, which was managed and supervised by The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. Defendant Kendrick repeatedly molested Plaintiff during and after meetings at Fremont's North Congregation. Several times a month, over the period when Plaintiff was 9 to 11 years old, Kendrick would force Plaintiff to engage in skin-to-skin contact, mutual oral copulation, penetration with pens, and posing for nude photographs.

Plaintiff's abuse occurred between 1994 and 1996, while she attended, participated in, and was a member of the Jehovah's Witnesses North Congregation in Fremont. Kendrick had been a volunteer, active member, and participant in the North Congregation and Congregation leadership, at one time holding the title of "Ministerial Servant". Defendant Kendrick used his position of trust and authority within North Congregation to accomplish his molestation and sexual abuse of Plaintiff as well as to gain access to other minors for the same purpose.

At the time Defendant Kendrick abused Plaintiff, Defendants North Congregation and Watchtower New York had actual notice that Defendant Kendrick was a risk to children. In 1993, the year before Defendant Kendrick began his molestation of Plaintiff, Defendant Kendrick confessed to Elders at North Congregation that he molested his 13-year-old stepdaughter. Two North Congregation Elders called a meeting at the Kendrick home with Defendant Kendrick, his wife, and his stepdaughter. During this meeting, Elders Gary Abrahamson and Michael Clarke confirmed that the molestation had indeed taken place, and were told of the molestation of another minor girl – a report they did not investigate at all. Elders Abrahamson and Clarke called and sent a written report to Defendant Watchtower New York with that information and a request for instruction on how to proceed. Defendant Watchtower New York responded to Defendant North Congregation in a letter; advising that Defendant Kendrick should be "deleted" from his position as Ministerial Servant and that the Elders should speak to him. New York also instructed the Elders to comply with their written policy of secrecy, in place since 1989, and to notify no one of the confirmed child abuse committed by Kendrick. That written policy, still in effect today, prohibits Elders from notifying parents, Congregation administrators, or law enforcement of childhood sexual abuse committed within Jehovah's Witnesses.

Although a known child molester, Kendrick remained a member in good standing within North Congregation after 1993. He continued to participate daily with other Congregation members, including children, and specifically including Plaintiff, in Jehovah's Witnesses activities including religious services and meetings, door-to-door religious solicitations, study groups, and Congregation social events. He used that position to molest and groom other victims until he moved to the Oakley congregation in 1998. There, he was convicted of 2 counts of Penal Code 288a for his sexual abuse of an 8 year old girl, and registered as a sex offender. Kendrick remains a Jehovah's Witness member in good standing today.

I. LIABILITY OF THE DEFENDANTS.

A. North Congregation and Watchtower New York

Defendants North Congregation and Watchtower New York negligently supervised, managed, and controlled Defendant Kendrick in his membership and participation in the North Congregation, and negligently failed to warn Plaintiff, her family, and other members of the Congregation, of the propensity and risk that Defendant Kendrick would sexually molest or abuse minor girls, a propensity and history of which Defendants had actual notice. During the same time period, Defendants North Congregation and Watchtower New York were negligent in failing to exercise reasonable care to protect Plaintiff and other minors, who were members of, or participants in, activities at North Congregation from the risk of sexual abuse or molestation by perpetrators, including Defendant Kendrick. As a result of the conduct of the Defendant North Congregation's Elders Abrahamson and Clarke, acting under the authority of Defendant Watchtower New York and its Managing Agents, and of their personal conscious disregard of the safety of children including Plaintiff, Plaintiff suffered the injury and harm of childhood sexual abuse committed upon her by Defendant Kendrick between 1994 and 1996.

Defendant Watchtower New York is also exposed to punitive damages. Its implementation and adherence to the secrecy policy established and enforced by the "Governing Body," its managing agent, and its conscious disregard of the known risk of sexual abuse to children, constitute malice. On April 10, Plaintiff filed her Motion to Amend Complaint to allege specific acts of malice supporting a claim for punitive damages. This Motion is scheduled for Hearing on May 3.

B. Jonathan Kendrick

Defendant Kendrick is liable for the multiple willful and intentional acts of molestation and sexual abuse he committed upon Plaintiff between 1994 and 1996. In his Statement filed April 4, Kendrick, in pro per, relayed that he is unable to afford counsel and will no longer be participating in litigation in this case, including the Mandatory Settlement Conference. Plaintiff has no expectation that Mr. Kendrick will appear at trial or ever be financially responsible for any of the harm he has done.

C. Defenses

Defendants generally deny they were negligent, and have an expert prepared to testify that the standard of care for national religious organizations in the 1990s did not require protection against or training about child sexual abuse. They also seek to allocate a high percentage of fault to Kendrick. Their defense psychologist has questioned whether or not Candace was ever abused, but also contends that her family situation and drug use are the real causes of any emotional or psychological issues she currently has.

II. INJURIES AND DAMAGES.

Candace Conti suffered multiple occurrences of sexual abuse. She was particularly vulnerable to this abuse because of her family situation- her parents were in an acrimonious and dysfunctional marriage, and as her family LCSW testified, Candace was the "caretaker" of the family. The same circumstances which made her vulnerable to the abuse also forced her to live with her abuse a secret until early adulthood. Candace's parents separated in 1996. Her mother, also a sexual abuse victim in Jehovah's Witnesses, lived with psychiatric conditions leading to alcoholism and mental instability, and moved to Florida- leaving Candace behind. Her father soon remarried another Jehovah's Witness, and his consuming involvement in Jehovah's Witnesses and his new family left him no time or emotion for his daughter. Their relationship has been estranged since Candace was a young teen. Candace lived with the sole stable adult in her life- her grandmother. She attended many different schools, and, because she is a bright girl, did obtain a High School Diploma. She self-medicated with drugs, including meth. Her life was one of superficial social relationships and dead ends, until she was involved in the criminal justice system for drug related offenses. In June, 2010, she became sober, entered regular counseling, and now lives in Stockton while preparing to attend school to work with animals as a veterinary tech. Plaintiff's counselors and experts believe she will likely need therapy and support services over her lifetime, at a cost of $200-250,000. Her diagnosis includes Post Traumatic stress disorder, depression, and anxiety, with substance abuse history.

III. SETTLEMENT NEGOTIATIONS.

Prior to considering any legal remedy, at the time she first reported her abuse to Jehovah's Witnesses' officials, Candace asked to have the policy of secrecy regarding the identity of known child molesters in local Congregations changed. The Witnesses have refused to amend their policy, and continue to keep secret the identity of known child molesters active in their Congregations. Until this policy is changed to allow parents, children, law enforcement, and congregation leaders be notified of known sex abusers practicing their predatory evils on unsuspecting children and families, the case is not subject to settlement.

of Civil Procedure sections 1775.10 and 1775.12, Evidence Code sections 703.5, 1115-28, and 1152, and Rojas v. Superior Court (Coffin) (2004) 33 Cal.4th 407 (derivative material prepared for the purpose of, in the course of, or pursuant to mediation is not discoverable). Trial is set for May 21, 2012, in this case in which Plaintiff alleges she was sexually abused as a minor and is seeking to hold two church entities and the perpetrator of the alleged abuse liable.

The Parties. Plaintiff Jane Doe is represented by Richard J. Simons of Furtado Jaspovice & Simons.

Defendant North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Fremont, California (hereinafter "North Fremont Congregation") is a congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses that meets at the Kingdom Hall located at 1660 Peralta Boulevard, Fremont, California. The North Fremont Congregation is represented by James M. McCabe of The McCabe Law Firm, APC.

Defendant Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. is a New York not-for-profit religious corporation (hereinafter "Watchtower of New York") represented by Robert J. Schnack of Jackson Lewis LLP. (The North Fremont Congregation and Watchtower of New York may be referred to collectively as the "Church Defendants.") Defendant Jonathan Kendrick is the alleged perpetrator of childhood sexual abuse of the plaintiff ("Kendrick") and is now pro se.

Relevant Factual Background. In 1990, Jonathan Kendrick was a member of the North Fremont Congregation. At that time, he was appointed as a ministerial servant in that congregation. Ministerial servants assist the elders in the congregation with ministerial functions, such as making sure that the congregation has sufficient literature (Bibles, Watchtower and Awake! magazines and other Jehovah's Witnesses publications) for its preaching work, keeping track of the territories covered by the congregation in its preaching work, upkeep of the Kingdom Hall property, and collecting and counting the funds anonymously placed in donation boxes in the Kingdom Hall.

In late 1993, Kendrick confessed that about two months previously he had "inadvertently touched" the breast of his 15-year-old step-daughter, Andrea. Kendrick said he had touched her breast over her clothing while she slept on a couch in the living room of the Kendrick home, and the touching stopped when Andrea woke up. After Kendrick confessed, two elders of the North Fremont Congregation had a meeting at the Kendrick home with Kendrick, his wife Evelyn, and Andrea. During the meeting, Kendrick admitted touching Andrea's breast through her clothing but denied any wrongful intent, saying it was accidental. Kendrick, his wife Evelyn, and Andrea appeared to the elders to have made peace and reconciled about the matter. Even so, the elders in the North Fremont Congregation removed Kendrick from his position as a ministerial servant, a public announcement was made to the congregation that Kendrick was no longer serving as a ministerial servant, and Kendrick never again held any position of responsibility or authority in any congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses.

Plaintiff alleges in her Complaint in this case that she was sexually abused by Kendrick, as a member of the North Fremont Congregation, from 1996 to 1997. She would have been between the ages of 10 and 12 at that time. During her deposition testimony, she changed that time period of alleged abuse by Kendrick to 1994 to 1996, when she was between ages 9 and 10½ years old (the alleged abuse stopped at the time her parents separated in July 1996).

The North Fremont Congregation and Watchtower of New York heard nothing about this alleged abuse until 2009, when the then 24-year-old Plaintiff informed Clifford Williams, an elder in the North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Downey, California, that Kendrick had fondled her on an Amtrak train in the presence of her father and once in the garage of her father's house. Plaintiff also informed Williams at that time that Kendrick had hugged her very tightly at the North Fremont Congregation's Kingdom Hall and at an Assembly Hall of Jehovah's Witnesses.

During her deposition, Plaintiff expanded the scope and nature of her alleged abuse by Kendrick. She said that he would force her to sit on his lap during meetings at the Kingdom Hall, with her parents present. She also stated that, from ages 9 until 12, her parents allowed Kendrick to take her to his home from Sunday meetings at the Kingdom Hall several times a month. Once at his home, Kendrick allegedly abused her by undressing her, touching her genitals, penetrating her vagina with a pen, licking her, making her touch his genitals, as well as having oral sex with her. Plaintiff further alleges that Kendrick then delivered her back to her parents at the Kingdom Hall or at her home. During the time of this alleged abuse, Kendrick was a divorced man living by himself.

Plaintiff's parents, Kathleen and Neal Conti, deny ever letting Plaintiff go home with Kendrick from the Kingdom Hall after meetings. The elders in the North Fremont Congregation deny ever seeing Plaintiff leave the Kingdom Hall with Kendrick. In fact, they say that they would have stopped that from happening, if they had ever seen it.

Discussion of Liability Issues. At the time of the alleged abuse, Kendrick was not an agent of either the North Fremont Congregation or Watchtower of New York. He was not in any position of responsibility or authority within either the congregation or Watchtower of New York. Therefore, Watchtower of New York and the North Fremont Congregation cannot be liable for any alleged conduct by Kendrick that did not occur on Kingdom Hall property or during congregation activity.

If, arguendo, the abuse occurred, it was by one congregation member against another congregation member. Neither of the Church Defendants can be held liable for abuse of this nature.

Further, the Church Defendants had no legal duty to report abuse of a minor to the authorities before January 1, 1997,—clergy first became mandated reporters at that time— and did not report the touching of Kendrick's step-daughter. Nonetheless, a police report was evidently made by the family and Kendrick was prosecuted.

The minister-communicant privilege is still recognized by California law. The Church Defendants could not have disclosed the 1993 incident without violating that privilege, which belonged to both Kendrick and the Church Defendants.

The fact that Kendrick later pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor arising out of the 1993 incident with Andrea was never disclosed to the Church Defendants. The Church Defendants had no notice of "child sexual abuse" by Kendrick in 1993. They had a confession by Kendrick that he had inadvertently or accidentally touched Andrea's breast over her clothes, and Andrea and her mother, Evelyn Kendrick, never told the two elders anything different from what Kendrick had confessed to them (the elders).

The elders of the North Fremont Congregation removed Kendrick from any position of responsibility or authority in 1993 and watched him during church meetings and functions to see whether he acted inappropriately with any children at the Kingdom Hall. Kendrick was not allowed to engage in congregation activity around children without supervision. The elders and Plaintiff's parents never saw Kendrick abuse Plaintiff in the Kingdom Hall. The elders never saw Plaintiff leave the Kingdom Hall with Kendrick. Plaintiff's parents never allowed Kendrick to take Plaintiff to his home.

Settlement Issues. If Plaintiff was abused, it was committed by Kendrick, a third party not under the control or supervision of the Church Defendants. Kendrick denies abusing Plaintiff. Further, even if, arguendo, the jury should find that Kendrick abused Plaintiff in the Kingdom Hall by hugging her and having her sit on his lap while her parents were present, the damages for that alleged conduct would be minimal at best. Also, if the jury finds the Church Defendants liable for abuse of Plaintiff off of Kingdom Hall property (such as in Kendrick's private home), the Church Defendants will have little option except to appeal such a verdict. The Church Defendants could not let such a potential precedent go unchallenged.

Finally, Plaintiff's description of the location, nature, and extent of her alleged abuse is contradicted by, among other things, her parents and the elders and thus lacks credibility. No demand for settlement has yet been made by Plaintiff; however, the Church Defendants will participate in the mandatory settlement conference in good faith.

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff's Motion to Allege Punitive Damages against Defendant Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. (hereinafter "Watchtower") should be denied because: (1) If a claim for punitive damages is added to the Complaint at this late date, Watchtower will be prejudiced because a continuance of the May 21, 2012, trial date will be required, additional experts will have to be retained, previously served designation of expert witnesses will have to be amended, and expense for trial preparation will be increased; and (2) Plaintiff has failed to demonstrate the existence of sufficient evidence to establish a prima facie right to recover punitive damages against Watchtower in accordance with California Code of Civil Procedure ("CCP") section 425.14 and California Civil Code section 3294.

II. STATUS OF THE CASE

The trial in this matter is scheduled for May 21, 2012. The expert witness discovery cutoff date is May 7, 2012. The pretrial conference is scheduled for May 18, 2012. The non-expert discovery cutoff date is April 23, 2012. This motion to allege punitive damages filed on April 9, 2012, is scheduled for hearing on May 3, 2012, two weeks and four days before trial. No notice of motion for bifurcation pursuant to CCP section 598 has been filed. Assuming that such a motion would be heard on the last day permitted under CCP section 598 (30 days before trial—April 20, 2012), the last day such a motion could have been filed was March 28, 2012. If Plaintiff's motion for leave to file an Amended Complaint to plead punitive damages is allowed, a motion for bifurcation would be necessitated.

III. PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR LEAVE TO AMEND COMPLAINT TO PLEAD PUNITIVE DAMAGES SHOULD BE DENIED

A. General Law on Motions to Amend Complaint

"Although courts are bound to apply a policy of great liberality in permitting amendments to the Complaint at any stage of the proceedings, up to and including trial, this policy should be applied only '[w]here no prejudice is shown to the adverse party.'" (Magpali v. Farmers Group, Inc. (1996) 48 Cal.App.4th 471, 487 (citations omitted).) "A different result is indicated '[w]here inexcusable delay and probable prejudice to the opposing party' is shown." (Id. (citing Estate of Murphy (1978) 82 Cal.App.3d 304, 311).)

Where a party was aware of the facts giving rise to the basis of the claim, a court is justified in denying a motion to amend the Complaint sought after a long, unexcused delay or where there has been a lack of diligence. (See Hulsey v. Koehler (1990) 218 Cal.App.3d 1150, 1159; Record v. Reason (1999) 73 Cal.App.4th 472, 486-487.) And when an amendment would necessitate the continuance of a trial or would require an increased burden on discovery, the amendment is properly denied. (See Magplai, supra, 48 Cal.App.4th at pp. 486-488; P & D Consultants, Inc. v. City of Carlsbad (2010) 190 Cal.App.4th 1332, 1345.) This amendment to add a claim for punitive damages will require a continuance of the trial and unreasonably increase Watchtower's burdens of discovery.

B. Plaintiff Has Unreasonably Delayed Bringing this Motion for Leave to Add a Claim for Punitive Damages

CCP section 425.14 provides that "[n]o claim for punitive or exemplary damages may be pleaded against a religious corporation or religious corporation sole" unless permitted by court order after the plaintiff brings a motion to amend the Complaint. Watchtower indisputably is a religious corporation. Plaintiff's delay in filing its motion to amend the Complaint to allege punitive damages is inexcusable and will unfairly prejudice Watchtower if allowed by the court at this late date.

The Complaint, filed by Plaintiff on January 28, 2011, alleged that the Church Defendants were aware that the alleged perpetrator, Jonathan Kendrick, had been reproved for his conduct of sexually abusing at least one girl but continued to allow Kendrick access to children, including Plaintiff. (See, ¶ 7 of Plaintiff's Complaint.) Plaintiff further alleged that despite knowledge of Kendrick's alleged dangerous and exploitative propensities, Watchtower negligently failed to supervise Kendrick or to warn Plaintiff or her family, enabling him to commit acts of alleged molestation against Plaintiff. (See, ¶¶ 6-7 of Plaintiff's Complaint.)

Plaintiff attached various responses and documents to her motion as Exhibits 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, and 10-16, in support of her claim to amend her Complaint to seek punitive damages.

The last of those responses and documents was produced to Plaintiff by Defendant North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Fremont, California (hereinafter "North Fremont Congregation") on January 9, 2012. (Watchtower Ex. B, North Fremont Congregation's Responses to Plaintiff's Special Interrogatories, Set Three.) The documents that form Exhibits 10-16 to Plaintiff's claim for punitive damages, i.e., the articles published by Watchtower concerning child abuse, were produced to Plaintiff by Watchtower in Watchtower's June 13, 2011, Responses to Plaintiff's Request for Production of Documents, Set One. Plaintiff's Exhibit 8, the excerpt from Organized to Accomplish Our Ministry was produced to Plaintiff by Watchtower in Watchtower's June 27, 2011, Amended Responses to Plaintiff's Request for Production of Documents, Set One (Watchtower Ex. C). The July 1, 1989, letter to all bodies of elders (Watchtower Ex. D) was produced to Plaintiff by Watchtower on June 27, 2011, in Watchtower's Amended Responses to Plaintiff's Request for Production of Documents, Set One (Watchtower Ex. C). Plaintiff has also attached portions of depositions taken between August 25, 2011, and February 15, 2012, in support of her motion (Plaintiff's Exhibits 17 through 29) and declarations of three individuals dated March 26, April 4, and April 9, 2012 (Plaintiff's Exhibits 30-32).

In summary, Plaintiff knew most of the facts upon which she bases her motion to amend to add a punitive damages claim well before the time she filed her motion. Documents produced by Watchtower which Plaintiff contends confirm her allegations were provided by the end of June 2011. Depositions concluded in mid-February 2012 (over two months ago) provide some further alleged details in support of Plaintiff's allegations in their Complaint.

The trial in this case was originally scheduled to commence on March 26, 2012. The current trial date of May 21, 2012, was set in the Court's Amended Notice of Hearing dated December 8, 2011.

Plaintiff's delay in pursuing this proposed amendment to allege a claim for punitive damages is inexcusable because such an amendment could have been made at least nine months ago, following Watchtower's June 27, 2011, discovery responses. There is no justification for Plaintiff's delay after the February 15, 2012, depositions, until just 13 days before the discovery cutoff to have this issue decided by the court. Plaintiff should have filed this motion to amend to allege a claim for punitive damages long ago.

The court should deny Plaintiff's motion against Watchtower on the grounds that Plaintiff has inexcusably delayed in seeking this amendment.

C. Watchtower Will Suffer Severe and Unfair Prejudice if the Amendment to Allege Punitive Damages is Permitted

If this amendment is permitted, Watchtower will suffer severe and unfair prejudice. There will be a need to continue the May 21, 2012, trial to permit Watchtower to evaluate and analyze the claim against it for punitive damages. Plaintiff's initial expert designation was served on March 26, 2012, and Watchtower's initial expert witness designation was served on April 2, 2012. Since there was no claim of punitive damages at that point in time, no experts were designated by Watchtower on the issue of punitive damages. Additional experts may need to be retained to address the punitive damages allegation, including but not limited to experts to value Watchtower's assets. The need to retain additional experts will increase Watchtower's pre-trial and trial expenses.

Watchtower would ordinarily file a motion to strike or a motion for summary adjudication on the punitive damages claim. However, since the law and motion cutoff date is set for May 7, 2012, Watchtower will be precluded from bringing such a motion if this amendment is permitted at this late date.

Therefore, it is respectfully submitted that Plaintiff's motion should be denied for inexcusable delay, as well as the severe and unfair prejudice that will be suffered by Watchtower if the motion is granted.

IV. BACKGROUND FACTS OF CASE

Plaintiff alleges that she was sexually abused by Jonathan Kendrick (hereinafter "Kendrick") on several occasions between the years 1994 and 1997. (Watchtower Ex. A, Deposition of Jane Doe, p. 30:4-20.) She further alleges that Kendrick would "bear hug" Plaintiff and make her sit on his lap at the Kingdom Hall. (Watchtower Ex. A, Deposition of Jane Doe, pp. 25:25-26:24.) She was about nine years old when this allegedly began. (Ibid., p.

27:2-4.) She says she would squirm and try to get away, unsuccessfully. (Ibid., p. 27:12-18.) After meetings at the Kingdom Hall, according to Plaintiff, Kendrick took her to his home where he molested her. (Ibid., 28:6-29:14.)

The bases for Plaintiff's Motion to Allege Punitive Damages is her assertion that Watchtower and the North Fremont Congregation had advance knowledge that Kendrick had committed sexual abuse, and that Watchtower and the North Fremont Congregation failed to notify Plaintiff's parents, parents of other children, the congregation in general, and local authorities. (See, Plaintiff's Proposed First Amended Complaint, ¶16.) She claims that the Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses authorized a policy of "secrecy" in Watchtower's July 1, 1989, letter to all Bodies of Elders that allowed Kendrick to maintain access to children after his "confirmed" abuse of his step-daughter, Andrea. (See, Plaintiff's Motion, pp. 1-2.)

Significantly, Plaintiff's expert, Anna Salter, Ph.D. states that the standard of care in 1993 to 1995 to prevent child molestation in religious institutions where children participate was to educate and train participants in the (church's) activities in recognition, prevention, reporting, and possible signs of abuse, and to address reports of childhood sexual abuse immediately. The "[f]ailure [of a church] to notify those individuals in positions of leadership authority within the local ... congregation ... of a confirmed report violates this standard, and the failure to notify parents and other adults within the group or congregation violates this standard." (Watchtower Ex. E, pp. 2-3 ¶ 8)

The evidence, however, simply does not support Plaintiff's allegations that the report of Kendrick's prior abuse was "confirmed" or was of such a nature to support a claim that Defendants Watchtower or the North Fremont Congregation had notice that Kendrick's nature was such that he posed a danger to youth, or specifically, to Plaintiff. Nor does the evidence support the malevolence Plaintiff paints as to the July 1, 1989, bodies of elders letter. (Watchtower Ex. D) Rather, that letter explained church policies that were intended to maintain the clergy-penitent privilege that is recognized in California as well as and in most states throughout the United States.

A. Relevant Facts about Jehovah's Witnesses

At baptism, every one of Jehovah's Witnesses—men, women, boys, and girls—becomes a congregation member, also known as a "publisher," and is considered an ordained minister of the good news. (Watchtower Ex. F, The Watchtower, December 1, 1975, pp. 705, 706, 728-734 "What Does It Mean to Be a 'Minister'?") Thus, within the Jehovah's Witnesses' faith, the term publisher or ordained minister simply refers to a rank and file congregation member.

Appointed elders are the individuals who have the authority and responsibility for the spiritual supervision and care of a congregation, including teaching, confessions, spiritual advice, and discipline involving congregation members. (Watchtower Ex. F, The Watchtower, December 1, 1975, p. 705, 706, 728-734 "What Does It Mean to Be a 'Minister'?") A male congregation member who is already a ministerial servant may be appointed to serve as an elder if he meets the Scriptural qualifications outlined at 1 Timothy 3:1-7 and Titus 1:5-9. (Watchtower Ex. G, Deposition of Gary Abrahamson, pp.17-18.) A male congregation member may be appointed to serve as a "ministerial servant" if he meets the Scriptural qualifications as outlined at 1 Timothy 3:8-10, 12, 13. (Ibid., pp. 26-27.)

Jehovah's Witnesses—men, women and children—are known for their public ministry, which they perform on behalf of their God Jehovah, in response to Scriptural admonishment (e.g., Matthew 28:19-20). They are not required by Watchtower, the North Fremont Congregation, or congregation elders to engage in their personal public ministry, or to fill out forms or make reports related to their personal public ministry. Rather, Jehovah's Witnesses are encouraged to make such reports, for use by the religion in providing encouraging annual summaries of the activities of all Jehovah's Witnesses worldwide. (Watchtower Ex. H, Organized to Accomplish Our Ministry, pp. 100-110.)

Congregation members are not approved to represent the congregation, Watchtower, or any other legal church when they engage in their public ministry. (Watchtower Ex. I, Declaration of Allen Shuster ¶¶ 7-16.) As the U.S. Supreme Court recognized in Murdock v. Pennsylvania (1943) 319 U.S. 105, 108, Jehovah's Witnesses "claim to follow the example of Paul, teaching 'publickly, and from house to house.' Acts 20:20. They take literally the mandate of the Scriptures, 'Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.' Mark 16:15. In doing so they believe that they are obeying a commandment of God."

B. Jonathan Kendrick

In 1988, at the age of 34, Defendant and alleged perpetrator Jonathan Kendrick was baptized as one of Jehovah's Witnesses, and became a member of the North Fremont Congregation. (Watchtower Ex. J, publisher record card of Jonathan Kendrick on file with Oakley, California.) Kendrick was a member of that congregation from the time he was baptized until he moved to the English Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Oakley, California (hereinafter "Oakley Congregation") about January 1998. (Watchtower Ex. K, August 31, 1998, letter from the North Fremont Congregation to Watchtower.) Kendrick served as a ministerial servant in the North Fremont Congregation until he was deleted or removed in December 1993, for having touched the breasts of his 15-year-old stepdaughter. (Watchtower Ex. L, November 15, 1993, letter from the North Fremont Congregation to Watchtower; Watchtower Ex. M, December 3, 1993, letter from Watchtower to the North Fremont Congregation.)

Kendrick held no position of authority in any congregation during the time Plaintiff alleges she was abused (1994-1996), or at any time after December 1993. In addition, the abuse about which Plaintiff complains, other than the "bear hugs" at the Kingdom Hall, occurred either in Kendrick's home or one time on an Amtrak train in the presence of her father.

C. Watchtower Had No Notice of Child Abuse by Kendrick

In about July 1993 when Kendrick's stepdaughter Andrea was 15 years old, she awoke from sleeping on the couch in their living room when she felt her breasts being touched, and she saw that it was Kendrick who had touched her. (Watchtower Ex. L, November 15, 1993, letter from the North Fremont Congregation to Watchtower.)

Plaintiff now has chosen to rely on a hearsay declaration by Evelyn Kendrick (Plaintiff's Ex. 30), rather than a declaration from Andrea herself as to what allegedly was told to the elders in November 1993 about the 1993 incident. If the objected-to hearsay declaration of Evelyn Kendrick is allowed by the Court for Plaintiff's motion to file an amended complaint, then one must accept her hearsay statement that Andrea said that Kendrick had touched her bare breasts. If that hearsay is not admitted, we are left with what Kendrick confessed to the two elders about the incident.

Kendrick confessed only to having briefly and inadvertently touched his stepdaughter's breast over her clothing. (Watchtower Ex. N, Deposition of Gary Abrahamson, Volume II, October 25, 2011, pp. 119:15-120:2; Watchtower Ex. O, Declaration of Michael Lee Clarke; Watchtower Ex. P, Declaration of Gary A. Abrahamson.) When Kendrick made that confession, his wife Evelyn and stepdaughter Andrea were present, along with elders Gary Abrahamson and Michael Clarke. (Watchtower Ex. N, deposition of Gary Abrahamson, Volume II, October 24, 2011, pp. 120:25-121:2; Watchtower Ex. O, Declaration of Michael Lee Clarke; Watchtower Ex. P, Declaration of Gary A. Abrahamson.) Thus, when the North Fremont Congregation elders spoke with Kendrick in the presence of Andrea and her mother, he did not admit to anything beyond that described above.

Under these circumstances, no so-called judicial committee of elders was formed. However, Kendrick was deleted or removed from his position as a ministerial servant due to the allegation of inadvertent touching of another person's private bodily part (breast). An announcement was made to the entire congregation that he was no longer serving in that capacity, and he never again held any position of responsibility or authority in any congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses.

Thus, Dr. Salter's statement that there was a "confirmed" allegation of child molestation preceding Kendrick's alleged abuse of Plaintiff is false. As a result, her assertion of the Church Defendants' violations of standards among religious and other institutions where there is a "confirmed report" of child abuse, and where the accused is a "confirmed abuser," do not apply in this case.

Dr. Salter refers to what she calls "standards of care" regarding the prevention of child abuse, but provides no sources of those supposed standards, nor does she show how they apply to the Church Defendants and the facts of this case. In her reference to the necessity for training and education in the prevention of child abuse, she completely ignores all of the literature and research provided to all Jehovah's Witnesses by Watchtower over the last several decades on those issues. She ignores the absence of any statutory duty of ministers or churches to report suspected child abuse to law enforcement authorities as of the date of occurrence, and the absence of any duty, statutory or otherwise, to report suspected child abuse to church attenders. She also ignores California's statutorily-imposed obligation of a clergyman to preserve the confidentiality of information provided by a penitent. Clearly, Dr. Salter's biased and factually unsupported declaration is no justification for allowing Plaintiff to claim punitive damages in this case.

V. DISCUSSION

A. Punitive Damages Claims Against Watchtower

Plaintiff does not have sufficient evidence to establish a prima facie right to recover punitive damages under CCP section 425.14. The basic elements of such claims are set forth in Civil Code section 3294, which provides in pertinent part:

> Section 3294. Exemplary damages; when allowable; definitions
>
> (a) In an action for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, where it is proven by clear and convincing evidence that the defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice, the plaintiff, in addition to the actual damages, may recover damages for the sake of example and by way of punishing the defendant.
>
> (b) An employer shall not be liable for damages pursuant to subdivision (a), based upon acts of an employee of the employer, unless the employer had advance knowledge of the unfitness of the employee and employed him or her with a conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others or authorized or ratified the wrongful conduct for which the damages are awarded or was personally guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice. With respect to a corporate employer, the advance knowledge and conscious disregard, authorization, ratification or act of oppression, fraud, or malice must be on the part of an officer, director, or managing agent of the corporation.
>
> (c) As used in this section, the following definitions shall apply:
>
> (1) "Malice" means conduct which is intended by the defendant to cause injury to the plaintiff or despicable conduct which is carried on by the defendant with a willful and conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others.
>
> (2) "Oppression" means despicable conduct that subjects a person to cruel and unjust hardship in conscious disregard of that person's rights.

> (3) "Fraud" means an intentional misrepresentation, deceit, or concealment of a material fact known to the defendant with the intention on the part of the defendant of thereby depriving a person of property or legal rights or otherwise causing injury.

(Emphasis added.)

For Watchtower to be liable for punitive damages, Plaintiff must demonstrate that "the employer had advance knowledge of the unfitness of the employee and employed him or her with a conscious disregard of the rights and safety of others or authorized or ratified the wrongful conduct for which the damages are awarded or was personally guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice." (Civ. Code section 3294(b).) Even assuming for the moment that the term "employer" applies to Watchtower, Plaintiff has not established sufficient evidence of advance knowledge or any malicious or oppressive conduct by Watchtower, or that Watchtower acted with conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others. Kendrick was removed from his position in December 1993, an announcement to that effect was made to the congregation, and Kendrick never again occupied any appointed position in any congregation. It seems clear that there is no justification for allowing a punitive damages claim in this case.

B. Punitive Damages Can Only be Awarded if the Actions Were Done by an Officer, Director, or Managing Agent of Watchtower

Part of Plaintiff's Proposed First Amended Complaint is that elders Abrahamson and Clarke failed to investigate the second report of child abuse by Kendrick that they received in 1993. (Plaintiff's Proposed First Amended Complaint, ¶14.) This assertion relates to the claim that Toy Register, a friend of Kendrick's stepdaughter Andrea, said that Kendrick had touched her breast on one occasion. (Plaintiff's Ex. 20 and Watchtower Ex. O, Deposition of Michael Clarke, p. 35:1-9.) Plaintiff asserts that Watchtower should be liable for punitive damages, in part for the failure of elders Abrahamson and Clarke to follow up on the reference to Toi Register. (Plaintiff's Proposed First Amended Complaint ¶ 14.) This aspect of Plaintiff's assertion cannot stand. The declaration of Toi Register Harris shows that she has no recollection of this occurrence and never had a problem with Kendrick. (Watchtower Ex. P, Declaration of Toi Register Haynes.) Thus, Plaintiff's hearsay offering is not just objectionable due to its hearsay nature; it is also inconsistent with the facts provided by the person allegedly involved, Toi Register Haynes.

The California Supreme Court stated in White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal.4th 563, that "[t]he entire basis of the doctrine of vindictive [punitive] damages is that the person, himself, who is sued has been guilty of recklessness or wickedness which amounts to a criminality that should be punished for the good of society, and as a warning to the individual; but to award such damages against the master for the criminality of the servant is to punish a man for that of which he is not guilty." (Id. at p. 569 (emphasis in original) (citations omitted).) "An award of punitive damages against a corporation therefore must rest on the malice of the corporation's employees." (Cruz v. Homebase (2000) 83 Cal.App.4th 160, 167.) A corporation thus avoids punitive damages for the acts of its "low-level employees which does not reflect the corporate 'state of mind' or the intentions of corporate leaders." (Id.) Thus, section 3294 requires that the complained of behavior "must be on the part of an officer, director, or managing agent of the corporation." (Civ. Code section 3294(b).)

The employee must be "sufficiently high in the corporation's decision-making hierarchy to be an 'officer, director or managing agent.'" (Gelfo v. Lockheed Martin Corp. (2006) 140 Cal.App.4th 34, 63.) The term "managing agent" includes "only those corporate employees who exercise substantial independent authority and judgment in their corporate decisionmaking so that their decisions ultimately determine corporate policy." (White, supra, 21 Cal.4th at pp. 566-567.) "'Corporate policy' is the general principles which guide a corporation, or rules intended to be followed consistently over time in corporate operations. A 'managing agent' is one with substantial authority over decisions that set these general principles and rules." (Cruz, supra, 83 Cal.App.4th at p. 167-168.) It is not enough that the individual has the ability to hire or fire employees to qualify as a managing agent; rather, he must have "substantial discretionary authority over decisions that ultimately determine corporate policy." (White, supra, 21 Cal.4th at p. 573.)

Although the determination of whether one is a managing agent is often a question of fact, when there is insufficient evidence in the plaintiff's favor as a matter of law, the punitive damages claim will not be allowed to go to a jury. (See Gelfo, supra, 140 Cal.App.4th at p. 63.)

As a matter of law, elders Abrahamson and Clarke do not qualify as managing agents of Watchtower because they did not have "broad discretionary powers and exercise substantial discretionary authority" over Watchtower's corporate activities. (White, supra, 21 Cal.4th at p. 577.) Furthermore, a congregation elder's supervisory capacity, which is a limited sphere of authority over congregation members, does not make such an elder Watchtower's managing agent. (See Cruz, supra, 83 Cal.App.4th at p. 168.) Nor does the elder's authority as a member of a judicial committee of elders to disfellowship or otherwise discipline congregation members make him Watchtower's managing agent. (See White, supra, 21 Cal.4th at pp. 566-567 ("the mere ability to hire and fire employees" is not enough to qualify as managing agent).) In short, Plaintiff cannot prove that the North Fremont Congregation's elders possessed the requisite authority to affect Watchtower's business and corporate policies so as to be considered Watchtower's managing agents.

C. There Was No Conscious Disregard or Malice by Watchtower

"'Malice' is defined as conduct 'intended by the defendant to cause injury to the plaintiff,' or 'despicable conduct which is carried on by the defendant with a willful and conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others.'" (College Hospital, Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 8 Cal.4th 704, 725 (emphasis in original).). "Oppression means 'despicable conduct that subjects a person to cruel and unjust hardship in conscious disregard of that person's rights.'" (Lackner v. North (2006) 135 Cal.App.4th 1188, 1210.) A plaintiff must, therefore, prove that "the defendant was aware of the probable dangerous consequences of his conduct, and that he wilfully and deliberately failed to avoid those consequences." (Mock v. Mich. Millers Mut. Ins. Co. (1992) 4 Cal.App.4th 306, 329.) Furthermore, "[t]he mere carelessness or ignorance of the defendant does not justify the imposition of punitive damages.... Punitive damages are proper only when the tortious conduct rises to levels of extreme indifference to the plaintiff's rights, a level which decent citizens should not have to tolerate." (George F. Hillenbrand, Inc. v. Ins. Co. of N. America (2002) 104 Cal.App.4th 784, 815 (citations omitted).)

In this case, the Church Defendants' conduct did not show malice or an indifference to Plaintiff's rights. Plaintiff seeks to make out a case of malice by saying that Watchtower's policy regarding child abuse allegations as expressed in its July 1, 1989, letter to all bodies of elders was promulgated and adhered to despite knowledge that some children would be abused as a result. As is discussed in detail in the next section, the July 1, 1989, letter is in harmony with California law and thus cannot be the basis of finding malice on Watchtower's part.

D. The July 1, 1989, Letter to All Bodies of Elders is Consistent with the Law

The July 1, 1989, letter to all bodies of elders in the United States (Watchtower Ex. D) concerns the need to keep confidential matters confidential. The policy is in keeping with California Evidence Code section 1034 which provides: "Subject to Section 912 [waivers], a member of the clergy, whether or not a party, has a privilege to refuse to disclose a penitential communication if he or she claims the privilege."

That statutory provision, often referred to as the "Clergy-Penitent Privilege," creates an obligation on the part of clergymen to keep penitential communications confidential. While there are obvious exceptions to the Clergy-Penitent Privilege, it is the clergyman's duty to maintain the privilege of the penitent, unless and until the privilege is waived by the penitent.

Doe v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County (2005) 132 Cal.App.4th 1504, involved application of the Clergy-Penitent Privilege in the context of a childhood abuse allegation. The term "penitential communication" was key to the decision, and the Court held that in order to be privileged, a statement must meet three elements: "1) it must be intended to be in confidence; 2) it must be made to a member of the clergy who in the course of his or her religious discipline or practice is authorized or accustomed to hear such communications; and 3) such member of the clergy has a duty under the discipline or tenets of the church, religious denomination or organization to keep such communications secret." (Doe, supra, at 1516 (quoting People v. Edwards (1988) 203 Cal.App.3d 1358, 1362–1363).)

The 1989 letter, which is Plaintiff's Ex. 1 in Plaintiff's motion, honors and recognizes that privilege, and seeks to enforce the privilege as it is recognized throughout the United States.

Plaintiff criticizes Watchtower's letter for instructing elders to call Watchtower's Legal Department immediately upon learning of the abuse of a child. Plaintiff is apparently unaware that the Clergy-Penitent Privilege differs widely across the nation, making a standard that can be articulated to all elders across the nation impossible. For example, in Texas, the Texas Family Code section 261.101, mandates that clergy report all suspected child abuse regardless of the existence of a claim of clergy-penitent communication. Thus, Texas elders would be instructed by Watchtower's Legal Department to report all suspected abuse of children to the police no matter how they gained their information. In California, the duty of elders to report to the police depends upon the source of the information and the applicability of the Clergy-Penitent Privilege. Thus, the law of California recognizes and respects the clergy-penitent privilege. Plaintiff's criticism of the letter attached as Plaintiff's Ex. 1 ignores this law as she seeks to paint Plaintiff's Ex. 1 as a mere attempt to avoid civil liability. Plaintiff's critique is both contrary to law and out of sync with the true intent of the letter, which intent is obvious from its content.

E. The Problems with Dr. Salter

Dr. Salter's opinion invades the province of the Court. Without citing to a single statute, court decision, promulgated rule, or other source of standards, she opines that a duty existed in 1993-1995 to notify various persons and entities about a confirmed abuser in a congregation's midst. (Watchtower Ex. E, ¶ 8.) However, it remains the province of the legislature and the courts, not psychologists, to determine whether a duty arises. (See, e.g., Paz v. State of California (2000) 22 Cal.4th 550, 557; Restatement (Third) of Torts: General Principles (Tentative Draft No. 1, 2001) section 7 cmt. f, section 8 cmt. b; Dobbs, The Law of Torts (2000) 269 note 1, at 270 ("Judges, not juries, ordinarily determine whether a duty exists and the standard it imposes.").)

The cases offered by Plaintiff to support her claim that Defendants are liable to Plaintiff because they failed to warn or report their "knowledge of the employee or volunteer's history of sexual abuse and failed to warn or protect children exposed to the abuser" (Plaintiff's Memorandum of Law, p. 6, part II A) are inapplicable to the facts of this case. They impose liability on a principal whose employee (Evan F. v. Hughson United Methodist Church (1992) 8 Cal.App.4th 828), spouse (Pamela L. v. Farmer (1980) 112 Cal.App.3d 206), or appointed volunteer agent—Boy Scout leader (Juarez v. Boy Scouts of America (2000) 81 Cal.App.4th 377) were known to the defendants in those cases to have abused children in the past. None involved a mere congregation member. None involved a person about whom an allegation was unconfirmed or involved a confession by the perpetrator, given in the presence of the accuser and the accuser's mother, that he had "briefly and inadvertently" touched her breast over her clothing. (Watchtower Ex. N., Deposition of Gary Abrahamson, Volume II, October 25, 2011, p. 120.) None involved a situation in which the perpetrator was accused of having touched the breast of a 15-year-old girl and was now in the presence of children much younger—under age 10. None involved an unconfirmed past allegation against a person now in the presence of children.

For Plaintiff's expert to be allowed to provide her opinion that churches must report "confirmed" child abuse to parents, other adults, and public officials, the Court must rule that her opinion is now the law in California, and the California Clergy-Penitent Privilege is no longer good law.

The opinion of Plaintiff's is invalid for another reason. Her opinion fails to meet the California standards for acceptance of expert opinions. Cal. Evid. Code section 801. The foundation of her opinion is inadequate as a matter of law. (See, e.g., People v. Bassett (1968) 69 Cal.2d 122; People v. Sundlee (1977) 70 Cal.App.3d 477 (expert may not base opinion on conjecture).) Plaintiff's expert assumes incorrectly that the allegation about Andrea being abused by her stepfather was "confirmed."

If Plaintiff's Ex. 30 is accepted over Defendant's objection as to hearsay, then we must assume that the elders had before them an allegation by Andrea's mother about what Andrea had apparently told them. (Plaintiff Ex. 30, p. 1 ¶ 3.) In the face of that allegation, they received the alleged perpetrator's own statement about what happened, given in the presence of Andrea and her mother. Even if that objected-to declaration is accepted by this Court, the allegation of the abuse remains unconfirmed in light of the alleged perpetrator's own rendition of the facts.

Dr. Salter's opinion is further objectionable since she failed to qualify to provide an expert opinion about the status of the law concerning reporting alleged child abuse to authorities or to others in 1993. Further, she did not provide an expert opinion on the propriety of clergy violating the clergy-penitent privilege in order to disseminate information about what the penitent confessed to the elders.

F. Plaintiff Cannot Meet her Burden under CCP Section 425.14

Plaintiff's burden is to convince this Court that "plaintiff will meet the clear and convincing standard of proof under Section 3294 of the Civil Code." (CCP section 425.14.)

In Rowe v. Superior Court (1993) 15 Cal.App.4th 1711, a case cited by Plaintiff, the court interpreted the plaintiff's burden and the Court's function under CCP section 425.14 thus:

> We therefore must read the statute to require only that a plaintiff demonstrate the existence of sufficient evidence to establish a prima facie case for punitive damages, having in mind the higher clear and convincing standard of proof. In the words of the Hung court, it is only necessary that plaintiff provide "a sufficient prima facie showing of facts to sustain a favorable decision if the evidence submitted is credited." The trial court is not required to make any factual determination or to become involved in any weighing process beyond that necessarily involved in deciding whether a prima facie case for punitive damages exists. Once the court concludes that such a case can be presented at trial it must permit the proposed amended pleading to be filed. If it concludes that no such case exists, then it properly rejects the proposed pleading amendment. In making this judgment, the trial court's consideration of the defendant's opposing affidavits does not permit a weighing of them against the plaintiff's supporting evidence, but only a determination that they do not, as a matter of law, defeat that evidence.

(Rowe, supra, 15 Cal.App.4th at p. 1723 (citations omitted) (emphasis in original.)

Because Plaintiff relies on inadmissible hearsay evidence (Plaintiff Ex. 30, Declaration of Evelyn Kendrick) and ill-founded and inadmissible opinions of her expert Dr. Salter (Watchtower Ex. E, Declaration of Anna Salter, Ph.D.), she cannot sustain her burden of proof.

Plaintiff must also demonstrate that Defendant acted with "malice." The law does not favor punitive damages, and they should be granted with the greatest of caution. (Dyna-Med, Inc. v. Fair Employment & Housing Com. (1987) 43 Cal.3d 1379.) An award of punitive damages may not be based on mere speculation, but depends on a definite showing of a willingness to vex, harass, annoy, or injure consistent with a wrongful personal intention to injure. (Wolfsen v. Hathaway (1948) 32 Cal.2d 632, 647, overruled by Flores v. Arroyo (1961) 56 Cal.2d 492; Roth v. Shell Oil Co. (1960) 185 Cal.App.2d 676, 682; McAfee v. Ricker (1961) 195 Cal.App.2d 630, 633.)

The only malice contemplated by Civil Code section 3294 is malice in fact. The phrase "express or implied" refers only to the evidence by which such malice is established; express malice means that the malice is established by express or direct evidence that proves the existence of hatred and ill will; implied malice refers to indirect evidence from which a jury may infer the existence of malice in fact. (Davis v. Hearst (1911) 160 Cal. 143; Wolfsen, supra, 32 Cal.2d 632; Shumate v. Johnson Publishing Co. (1956) 139 Cal.App.2d 121; Sturges v. Charles L. Harney, Inc. (1958) 165 Cal.App.2d 306.)

In order to warrant the allowance of punitive damages, not only must the act complained of be willful in the sense of being intentional, but it must also be accompanied by some aggravating circumstance amounting to malice in fact, which implies an act that was conceived in the spirit of mischief or with criminal indifference toward the defendant's obligations owed to others. (Gombos v. Ashe (1958) 158 Cal.App.2d 517, 527, disapproved of by Taylor v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County (1979) 24 Cal.3d 890.)

Plaintiff's case for punitive damages is that Watchtower in its letter of July 1, 1989, instructed its elders to beware of disseminating confidential communications, and had elders call Watchtower's Legal Department for legal direction. Plaintiff claims that the 1989 letter evidences Watchtower's reckless disregard for the obligations that it owed to children. Despite Plaintiff's mischaracterization of Watchtower's 1989 policy letter, Plaintiff cannot make out a case of malice. Watchtower's letter constitutes proper and appropriate guidance to elders to obtain legal advice before determining whether they have a legal obligation to divulge confidential communications to others, in particular, to the police or other local authorities. Despite Plaintiff's "expert" declaration to the contrary, which would create new duties to disseminate confidential information to many persons within in a congregation, the 1989 letter shows Watchtower's careful consideration of its duty to follow all laws.

Plaintiff also mischaracterizes Watchtower's knowledge about Kendrick's past in order to support her quest for punitive damages. As shown above, that knowledge was sufficient to constitute an allegation of misconduct, not a proven or substantiated case of child abuse.

In sum, the facts in this case simply do not support a finding of malice or disregard for Plaintiff so as to support Plaintiff's motion to add a punitive damages claim against Watchtower.

VI. CONCLUSION

Watchtower respectfully requests that this court deny Plaintiff's request to amend her Complaint to plead a claim for punitive damages against it, on two valid grounds: First, Plaintiff's inexcusable delay in seeking to amend the Complaint to add this claim will cause Watchtower to suffer severe and unfair prejudice as a result of an amendment at this late date. Second, Plaintiff's motion does not meet the requirements of CCP section 425.14 and Civil Code section 3294 to state and demonstrate a triable punitive damages claim against Watchtower because: (1) the conduct alleged by Plaintiff was not performed by "an officer, director, or managing agent" of Watchtower, and (2) Plaintiff has not established that Watchtower's conduct was malicious or oppressive or that they acted with conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others.
